MR. CROKER'S METHODS AS TAMMANY LEADER

Story of His Break with John C. Sheehan Brings Out Secrets.

BIG RAPID TRANSIT SCHEME

Got $500,000 Worth of Stock for Nothing and Was to Influence the Route —How Van Wyck's Nomination for Mayor Was Forced.

Richard Croker's absence in Europe has caused the politicians to discuss the question whether the present leader of Tammany Hall will return to take part in the Mayoralty campaign. Many personal friends of Richard Croker believe that he will not take an active part, and may decide to remain in his country home at Wantage while the political battle is waged by his lieutenants.

In the Spring of 1894 Mr. Croker resigned as leader of Tammany Hall and announced definitely that he would never again be active in politics. He placed John C. Sheehan at the head of the organization, and it was not until a few days before the City Convention which nominated Robert A. Van Wyck for Mayor that Mr. Croker ignored his alleged pledges to John C. Sheehan and grasped the reins of power in Tammany Hall, ousting Mr. Sheehan.

John C. Sheehan has been asked many times to give a statement of his dealings with Mr. Croker during his regency, and an explanation of how Mr. Croker returned to control after his positive statement that he would never again head Tammany Hall. In compliance with these requests, a statement was prepared and given out, of which the following are the essential features:

"Mr. Croker resigned from the Chairmanship of the Tammany Finance Committee at a meeting of the Executive Committee called for that purpose. After it had been accepted unanimously, Mr. Croker made a speech, in which he said that having now severed his connection with Tammany Hall as the leader, he would also resign as a member of the organization, and that he would never again become identified with the organization or take any active part in politics. Then Mr. Croker left the Wigwam, and the leaders thought that they would never see him again.

"When the Tammany organization elected officers in 1894 Mr. Croker sent an order to the district leaders requiring that district assessments, amounting to $35,000, should be paid before March 1. The payments were all made promptly. At this time the Lexow committee was in session, and exposures of official corruption and inefficiency in municipal affairs were piling up.

"It was said then that Croker foresaw defeat and feared he would be called before the Lexow committee and his political actions exposed. He went to Europe for the purpose of being out of the way. Tammany Hall at this time was without money and the affairs of the Wigwam were in bad shape.

TAMMANY'S DEFEAT.

"The three strongest men in the organization at that time were Mayor Gilroy, Police Commissioner James J. Martin, and Henry D. Purroy. This triumvirate managed affairs, and as the time approached for the Mayoralty campaign ex-Mayor Hugh J. Grant urged the Executive Committee to name Nathan Straus for Mayor, claiming that he was a business man with an honorable record, and that some such man was needed to head the Tammany ticket. Mr. Straus was nominated, but in a few days he saw it would be a hopeless fight, and he refused to accept. Grant was compelled to take the nomination, and he was defeated by 54,000, and that defeat further disrupted Tammany Hall.

"In the Summer of 1895 Mr. Sheehan became leader, taking the place of the Gilroy-Martin-Purroy triumvirate. He was announced as the Chairman of the Finance Committee to succeed Mr. Croker, and a week after a resolution was introduced by William E. Stillings recognizing and naming Mr. Sheehan as the leader of Tammany Hall. This action was unanimous. Mr. Sheehan believed that Mr. Croker brought about his selection, because he knew that on Mr. Croker's return from Europe in 1895 he had sent for the leaders and, in conversation had asked why the organization was not completed, and who seemed to be the best man for the leadership. The answer invariably was 'Sheehan,' and when the name was mentioned to Croker he said, 'I am well pleased. In my judgment Sheehan is the man for the job.'

"Sheehan found the organization practically disrupted, in bad odor, with an empty treasury, and debts amounting to $30,000. When the campaign of 1895 opened he led the fight against the same combination which had defeated the Hall in 1894. The Tammany organization, under Sheehan's management, elected its ticket by 23,000 votes, and this in spite of the fact that it was out of power, with no offices at its disposal, and with no way of raising money. Croker had in the meantime been in England. He returned and was loud in his praise of Sheehan and his conduct of affairs. At the same time he insisted that he himself would never take an active part in the city politics again. On the Saturday before he sailed a luncheon was given in his honor by Surrogate Fitzgerald. The whole situation was discussed by Croker and Sheehan, and a man who tells the story says: 'Croker said: "John, I am going to Europe, and I may not be back for a year, or, possibly, for much longer time. The only thing that is necessary is to get a good candidate for Mayor. If I come back before the campaign is over it will be simply to help you to raise money." Sheehan asked Croker to come back anyway, but told him that it was not necessary for him to help in raising money, because he (Sheehan) could get all that he wanted. Croker made this final appeal to Sheehan: "If, in the future, any of my old friends want to drag me back, I want you, as my friend, to stop them. Such fellows as Larry Delmour or Eddie Sheehy may take it into their heads to say that we ought to 'have the little fellow come along and take a hand in.' This is what I want to avoid, and I want you to stop it if you ever hear of the thing being attempted."'

IN RAPID TRANSIT SCHEME.

"Sheehan and Croker were interested together in a number of business contracts. One of their most important interests was a company which they had formed for the construction of the underground railway. This company was capitalized at $5,000,000. Early in 1894 Sheehan had examined old routes and became convinced that the route which is now being followed from City Hall to Forty-second Street was the only practical one. Croker, Sheehan, and their associates had information to this effect taken to the Rapid Transit Commission and assured them that if they would select this route at least one bid would be forthcoming. Later steps were taken to lay out the route, and to show to what an extent it had gone, and how deeply interested Croker and Sheehan were together, I will tell you that Sheehan forced through the Board of Aldermen in the face of opposition a resolution approving the tunnel route. Mr. Croker had $500,000 worth of stock in this company for which he paid nothing. He and Sheehan were bound together by mutual interests in a proposed surety company.

"Sheehan started the Tammany fight in 1897 early. He used new methods and new men. On Sept. 10, 1897, it was announced that Mr. Croker was coming back to the United States. A man who was on the inside of Tammany Hall at that time said: 'That announcement created consternation in Tammany Hall. They believed that Croker's return might jeopardize what they regarded as a certain triumph. One of the leaders who now occupies a high office, said: "The only dark spot on the sky is Dick's return." Leader after leader went to Sheehan at Tammany Hall; urged him to have nothing to do with Croker and told him that although Croker said that he was out, and, as a matter of fact was out, the press would make Croker the issue. They urged Sheehan in the interests of the organization to keep clear of Croker and above all things not to nominate a Croker man for Mayor. To all of them Sheehan replied: "I'm a Croker man myself. I'm his friend, and I would not by word or act do anything to injure him." Croker on his arrival declared that he was out of politics and went to the Murray Hill Hotel. He referred all inquirers to Sheehan. In the meantime, not a day passed that Sheehan was not warned by one or more Tammany leaders that Croker was seeking to bring about his downfall. These leaders told Sheehan that they had known Croker longer than he, and that he was not to be trusted.

THE NOMINATION OF VAN WYCK.

"At the second interview between Croker and Sheehan possible nominees for Mayor were considered. Sheehan had in mind the nomination of a man like William Sohmer, ex-Mayor Grant, Charles H. Knox, Amos J. Cummings, Charles W. Dayton, or Delos McCurdy. These names were submitted to Mr. Croker by Sheehan. In discussing them Croker said:

"'Sohmer won't do; he's a German, and you can't trust a German. Grant is not the man; labor would not support him because he was opposed to Bryan. Knox is too ministerial; besides, his connection with the Standard Oil Company would kill him. Nobody would have anything to do with Dayton. Cummings isn't the kind of a man. John, have you thought about Van Wyck?'

"'No,' replied Mr. Sheehan, 'I never thought of Van Wyck.'

"'He might do,' said Mr. Croker. 'He comes from an old Knickerbocker family, and that would bring in the Dutch and German votes. But I'm out, John. I have no particular interest, and all I want to do is to get a good man for the organization.'

"'I don't believe that Van Wyck is a big enough man,' said Mr. Sheehan. 'I like Van Wyck, but I don't think he is a vote getter.'

"On the evening before the City Convention Croker, Sheehan, and a number of others met at the Murray Hill Hotel. Croker said during the dinner: 'Well, John, you'll soon have your hands full. The convention is to-morrow, and you haven't got any candidate yet. When did you see Van Wyck?'

"Sheehan replied that he had not seen Van Wyck in three weeks. Croker said that he had not seen him for a long time. Then Croker said that nothing could be said against Van Wyck, and Sheehan replied that he knew nothing against him except his arrest at the French ball some years before, and Mr. Sheehan said that that would not last three days in the campaign.

"'Suppose you see Van Wyck and get him up here to-night,' Mr. Croker said. 'Do you know Delos McCurdy? I can't recall him.'

"'I know him well,' said Sheehan, 'and it we should nominate him there is no doubt that you would have a candidate as big as Tracy or Low.'

"That night at 11 o'clock Sheehan took Van Wyck to Croker's room. He had tried to find McCurdy, but could not do so. He had no difficulty in finding Van Wyck. Croker talked about Van Wyck and told him he was considering him as a candidate for Mayor. He said that Sheehan took no stock in any attacks that might be made on Van Wyck. Croker said that he was out, but that every man ought to be true to the organization, and in his heart he wanted to see Sheehan successful as the leader of Tammany Hall.

"At that interview with Van Wyck many promises were demanded from him, and they were given cheerfully. One of the men who was present said: "After that evening I had less respect for "Bob" Van Wyck than I had had before.'

"Sheehan was so tied up with Croker that he thought nothing of the insistence of Croker for the nomination of Van Wyck—for that is what it amounted to. However, the action of Van Wyck after conference made him more than ever anxious to nominate another man, and he spent the next morning looking for McCurdy, and he finally found him. Sheehan and McCurdy had a conference in the Union Square Hotel at noon, an hour before the Tammany Hall Executive Committee was to meet in the Fourteenth Street wigwam to decide on the names of the candidates to be presented in the evening. Sheehan explained the situation and begged McCurdy to accept the nomination, saying that there was no question of the action of the Executive Committee. McCurdy refused absolutely for business reasons to take the nomination. After his refusal Croker and Sheehan talked on the telephone. Sheehan told Croker that McCurdy would not accept the nomination and Croker told Sheehan that the best thing to do was to nominate Van Wyck.

"When Van Wyck's name was presented to the Executive Committee it had the effect of a wet blanket. No member of the Executive Committee spoke for some time. Finally, James McCartney, then the leader of the north half of the Thirty-fourth Assembly District, arose in the rear of the hall and said:

"'Mr. Sheehan, is this nomination you've made your own selection, and in your judgment is it the best that could be made?' Sheehan's reply was: 'If I didn't think so, I wouldn't present the name.'

CROKER'S WORK IN THE CAMPAIGN.

"Some time afterward Sheehan learned that Croker had gone to Grant and told him that Sheehan had prevented his nomination for Mayor. Then Sheehan began to suspect that Croker was trying to knock him out. Mr. Croker did not turn in much money to Tammany Hall. The total amount of his contributions was $2,500 from a large corporation, and $250 from a member of the judiciary. The total amount collected by Sheehan and turned over to John McQuade, the Treasurer of Tammany Hall, was $230,000, and at the end of the canvass McQuade had $5,000 in the treasury—a thing which had never happened before in the history of the organization.

"Having secured the nomination of a man absolutely subservient to him for Mayor, Croker now came out into the open. Two weeks after the city convention, and before the county convention, Daniel F. McMahon and Timothy D. Sullivan waited on Sheehan at Tammany Hall and announced that they were a committee to urge him to invite Croker to come to Tammany Hall. Mindful of the promise Croker had extracted from him to protect him from just this thing earlier in the year, Sheehan told the committee that he wouldn't. Then he said that there had been a meeting at the Murray Hill Hotel, and almost all of the leaders were there, and they had decided that Croker ought to go to the hall. Sheehan hurried down to Croker's office and told him what had happened. Croker said that some of the leaders had called on him and asked him to go to the hall, but that he wanted to do just what Mr. Sheehan wanted. Sheehan's eyes were beginning to open by this time, but he was absolutely helpless because the Croker ticket had been nominated and its success was assured. However, he went back to Tammany Hall and wrote a letter inviting Croker to the headquarters. That same afternoon he was informed that Delmour and Sheehy had approached every district leader in New York County and invited them to a conference. Twenty-two refused to go. One said, 'You ought to put bells on Croker's ears and send him back to England,' when he was invited. Croker has never forgiven that man.

"The thirteen leaders present were: Delmour, Featherson, Sullivan, Scannell, Dalton, Hayes, Plunkitt, McMahon, Stillings, Lantry, Ryan, Dowling, and Sexton. Sheehy, who was not a leader, was there. Sheehan made up his mind when he heard this that the reports of disloyalty which he had heard in regard to Croker were true, and he did what he could to protect himself. In the county convention the Sheehan forces defeated the Croker ticket made up of Grady, for District Attorney; Keenan, for Sheriff; Keating, for County Clerk, and Levy, for Register. The Sheehan ticket was made up of Gardiner, for District Attorney; Dunn, for Sheriff; Sohmer, for County Clerk, and Fromme, for Register. After election, Mr. Croker was recognized as the power in Tammany Hall, and took with him to Lakewood all of the leaders.

"Croker determined to drive John Sheehan out of politics and out of New York, because of the circulation of reports that Sheehan had tried to supplant him and had treated him unfairly and improperly. As a matter of fact, all that Sheehan did was to be faithful, and Croker abused his confidence and used his trust to kill him."

TREASURY OFFICIAL A MURDERER'S VICTIM

Frank H. Morris, Auditor, Killed in His Office.

Fancied Wrongs Said to Have Caused Samuel MacDonald, a Clerk, to Commit the Deed.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Frank H. Morris of Ohio, Auditor of the War Department, was shot and instantly killed about 2:10 o'clock this afternoon by Samuel MacDonald, also of Ohio, recently a disbursing clerk of the Treasury, in the former's office at the Winder Building. MacDonald afterward shot himself, and also slashed his throat with a penknife.

Auditor Morris was closeted alone with MacDonald when the shooting occurred, and the latter, in trying to make his escape, assaulted the watchman, Thomas Cusick, with the butt of his revolver. He was arrested while leaving the building. Before being taken into custody, however, he had shot himself in the stomach, and also made an ugly gash in his throat with a small penknife. When the officers arrested him he was heard to exclaim: "I did it. I know I'm done for."

The desperate character of the struggle between Morris and MacDonald is disclosed by the stories of the officials of the Auditor's office who were near the scene of the tragedy. The Auditor sat at his desk signing the day's mail, when MacDonald entered and asked for a few minutes' private conversation with him. Clerks in the adjoining office heard loud talking, and MacDonald was apparently threatening. Then they heard Morris turn in his chair and come toward the doorway. He was backed into the room, MacDonald following, a few feet away. The first shot had been fired just as Morris backed. It missed the mark and was imbedded in the doorway.

The clerks, horrified, stepped forward to intervene.

As they did so MacDonald reached forward and grabbed Morris by the coat collar and dragged him back into the Auditor's office. Now the men were breast to breast. There was not time for the clerks to rush in and no one saw what followed immediately thereafter, but two shots were heard in rapid succession. It is evident that Morris sought to grab the weapon from his assailant, and that his hand was over the barrel when the second shot was fired, for his hand is pierced, the ball imbedding itself in the wall.

MacDonald then put the revolver close to the Auditor's heart and fired for the third time. This time the bullet went to its mark and Morris fell lifeless. The clerks looked in and saw MacDonald standing over his victim. As they looked they saw him turn the weapon against himself and fire. Then he walked to the hall. MacDonald threatened the life of any one who dared intercept him. It was then that he struck Cusick, who was in the hall, and made an effort to stop him.

Going to the street, MacDonald sat down on a pile of bags and drew the penknife from his pocket and slashed his throat. Two police officers were near by and seized the man.

MacDonald was removed to Emergency Hospital, where the doctors have been busily engaged in trying to save his life. His was bleeding profusely from the gashes he had made across his throat, but it was found on examination that the jugular vein had not been pierced, and that the wound was not likely to endanger his life. The bullet wound proved to be more serious. An operation was performed and the ball removed. The doctors were hopeful the man would pull through unless blood poisoning or other unfavorable symptoms developed.

While MacDonald was in the hands of the surgeons a police officer sat near him and kept him under constant surveillance. Technically he is under arrest and in the custody of the police, but while the fight for his life is going on there will be no restraint beyond surveillance. Owing to the critical nature of his wounds the doctors have not permitted him to be seen for the purpose of giving a statement.

Employes who knew MacDonald said he had a grievance against Morris, who, he claimed, was responsible for having his pay reduced. Others who knew him said that they could not attribute his deed to anything but a diseased brain from overindulgence in liquor.

Frank H. Morris was a native of Cleveland, Onio. He was forty-nine years of age and leaves a widow and two sons. He entered the Government service at the beginning of the present Administration as Auditor for the Navy Department. During the first two years he made an exceptionally good record for efficiency, bringing the delayed work up to date and putting the office in a better shape than ever before. A year and more ago Morris was made Auditor for the War Department, changing places with Auditor Brown. In his new place he maintained his record as an executive officer, and soon had the work, which was much behind, up to date.

He was well regarded by the Treasury officials, but was not popular with some of the subordinates in his office, who complained that he was unnecessarily harsh in his treatment of them, and often exacted more work than they could do. It is said that, in order to keep the work up to date, he would require them to work overtime, and lose a part of their annual vacation. The Treasury officials do not agree with these statements, and say that he required from each clerk a good day's work and no more.

MacDonald is a brother of William H. MacDonald, the well-known baritone singer of the Bostonians, who is said to have educated him for the operatic stage. He is unmarried, fifty-eight years of age, and is tall and fine looking. He has been in the Government service since just after the civil war. In 1869 he was removed from his position as Chief of Division in the office of the Commissioner of Customs. In 1890 he was reappointed clerk in the office of the Auditor for the War Department. In 1897 he was made disbursing officer in that office, in addition to his other duties, receiving in all $2,000 a year.

In February, 1900, MacDonald's accounts were found short $1,000, and upon being requested to make an explanation he claimed that on one occasion he had forgotten to close his safe on leaving his office, and that it had been robbed of $1,000. He produced evidence which tended to exonerate him from the charge of taking the money, and, as he immediately made good the amount, nothing further was done except to reduce his salary to $1,400 and transfer him to the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department, where he was employed at the time of the tragedy.

It is stated that MacDonald has been a hard drinker at times, and that many of his misfortunes can be traced to this source. He has many friends, however, who regard him as a man of many excellent qualities.

STUYVESANT FISH WINS SUIT.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 22.—Stuyvesant Fish has won his suit against the City Treasurer of this city.

By an option entered in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, the case is remitted to the District Court of the First Judicial District with direction to enter judgment for the plaintiff for $126.41 and costs. The opinion says that at the time of the assessment the plaintiff was not the owner of the land in question. He had agreed orally to pay for it, but did not do so until March 14, 1898, at the time of the delivery of the deed. The defendant claimed that the plaintiff was practically the owner of the property, but the Court holds that this view could not be taken.

Utica Theatre Boycott Lifted.

Special to The New York Times.

UTICA, Dec. 22.—The Utica labor unions have removed the boycott from the Majestic Theatre, of which Sam S. Shubert is the lessee. Northrup & Latcher, the contractors, are part owners in the theatre. Differences arose between Northrup & Latcher and the labor unions, and boycotts were placed upon tenants of the property, including the theatre. By the terms of the agreement Mr. Shubert is not to release the property unless the unions and the owners of the property adjust their differences.

J. PROCTOR CLARKE APPOINTED.

Selected by the Governor to Succeed Justice Beekman.

ALBANY, Dec. 22.—Gov. Roosevelt to-night announced the appointment of J. Proctor Clerke of New York City to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Justice H. R. Beekman.

Mr. Clarke was seen last night at his home and said that he would accept the appointment to succeed Justice Beekman.

John Proctor Clarke is prominent among the Republican lawyers of New York City. He was Assistant Corporation Counsel during Mayor Strong's Administration. He served as counsel for the Fallows Committee which investigated the affairs of the Surrogates' office. With Frank Moss of the Mazet Committee he was associate counsel when inquiry was made into the administration of the city's departments under Mayor Van Wyck.

Gov. Roosevelt appointed Mr. Clarke a Deputy Attorney General last Winter to conduct the investigation of the alleged malicious rumors circulated about the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. He was President of the West Side Republican Campaign Club in the Roosevelt campaign two years ago, and accompanied Col. Roosevelt on his campaign trips about the State, making many speeches. He has been a member of the Republican County Committee, and belongs to the Union League Club, and the Republican Club of New York.

Mr. Clarke is a son of Col. J. Edward Clarke of Washington, D. C.

THREE VEHICLES WRECKED.

Occupants of All Are Thrown Out, but Escape Serious Injury.

Nathan H. Heyman of 4 East Ninety-third Street was driving in a runabout with Emanuel Paul of the same address yesterday afternoon at Fifth Avenue and Ninetieth Street when his horse ran away and struck another runabout, throwing out a man and woman. Both horses then ran down the avenue and hit a brougham, throwing out a woman and the coachman. The animals were caught further down the avenue. No persons were injured, but all the vehicles were wrecked and the horses slightly hurt.

The second runabout was driven by its owner, W. J. Ehrlich, and the brougham was occupied by Mrs. Schwartz and driven by her coachman.

Mr. Ehrlich lives at 54 West Seventy-fifth Street, and Mrs. Schwartz gave her address as the Lion Brewery.

TRUCK AND TROLLEY CRASH.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 22.—Three firemen, members of No. 2 Hook and Ladder Company of the Newark Fire Department were seriously injured in a collision of the truck with a westbound Forest Hill trolley car at Broad, Plane, and State Streets, about 8 o'clock to-night. Several passengers in the car were bruised and injured. Many women fainted from terror and all of the passengers were thrown into a heap on the floor. Some were cut by flying splinters of wood and glass. All were revived and taken home, the more seriously hurt in carriages. The fire truck was traveling at the highest speed with which a team of three spirited horses could draw it.

Neither the driver of the truck nor the motorman of the car could see the other until within a few feet of each other. Driver Philip Knox and Laddermen James Owens and William Gould were crushed between the truck and the car. All were seriously hurt, and were picked up unconscious. Knox's leg was broken, his chest crushed, and his head cut. It is feared his injuries will prove fatal. He was taken to St. Michael's Hospital. Gould and Owens were taken home. One of the truck horses had a shattered jaw and will have to be shot.

Frank Garret, Engineer of Engine No. 4, was run over and crushed by his own engine after reaching the scene of the fire by the backing of the horses attached to the engine. He was taken to St. Michael's Hospital in a serious condition.

The fire was in the Clark Lumber Company's works, Fourth Avenue. The damage was $10,000.

SAID HE WAS A BANK PRESIDENT

Special to The New York Times.

READING, Penn., Dec. 22.—A man who said he was "E. G. Andrews, President of the Corn Exchange Bank of Chicago," was in this city to-day acting strangely. He called at the Pennsylvania Railroad Station, and said he wanted to see President Cassatt about moving 3,000 cars of grain from Chicago to New York. He produced a letter written to Superintendent Pitcairn, telling him that he had 20,000 car loads of corn in the coal regions waiting to be shipped West. Receiving no satisfaction, he walked out in disgust.

A little later he was back, and acted still more queerly. He had just come from Chicago, he said, where he had given a Christmas dinner to 3,000 men. He talked in a rambling way about various big financial deals, and immense shipments of commodities that he wanted to send to various parts of the earth.

The man was in Douglassville early this morning.

TROOPS TO FIGHT INDIANS.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Tex., Dec. 22.—A dispatch from Oaxaca, Mexico, says the military authorities at Oaxaca had been advised that an additional force of 5,000 Government troops will be sent immediately to Yucatan to aid the troops already there in putting down the Maya Indian rebellion. The military railroad, which the Government is building from Progreso to Santa Cruz, where the Mayas have their principal stronghold, will soon be completed and the reinforcements will be rushed to the front over the new line as soon as they land at Progreso.

The troops now in the field against the Mayas are worn out from their long campaign. There has been much sickness among them, and many deaths have occurred. The persistent and annoying tactics of the Indians have also resulted in heavy casualties on the part of the Government forces.

MYSTERIOUS MATCH COMPANY.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 22.—There has been considerable talk in business circles the past week concerning the mystery which surrounds the Independent Match Company, the charter of which was filed Friday, Dec. 14, in the Baltimore County Court.

The title of the company would seem to indicate that it intends to be a competitor of the Match Trust, but no specific mention of its intention to manufacture or even deal in matches is made in the charter, although under the general powers of this instrument such a business can be conducted. The charter states that the principal office is to be in the City of Baltimore, but the names of none of the incorporators appear in the City Directory. Its capital stock is $2,000,000, while that of the Diamond Match Company, which is commonly known as "The Match Trust," and which is an Illinois corporation, is $15,000,000.

While stating that the operations of the company are to be carried on not only in Maryland and elsewhere, but also in New Jersey, the incorporators, however, have given their company a more dignified place of birth by securing a charter under the general laws of Maryland. According to the charter, the requirement of the State law that a majority of the members of the Board of Directors be citizens of Maryland, is complied with. This board is made up of the incorporators, and the men who compose the board are John B. King, George Aldrich, George L. Kellogg, Charles Lyons, and Thomas Donoghue.

Another singular feature of the charter is that, despite the declaration that a majority of the incorporators are citizens of the State of Maryland, all of them found it more convenient to travel to New York and make their legal acknowledgments before a notary public of that State, as the signatures are attested by a New York notary public, Edward F. Todd.

DEVERY TO GO, PLATT SAYS

Senator Intimates that Legislation Will Effect Removal.

Believes that the Police Bill Will Be the First Measure Passed—The County Chairmanship.

"Devery will go within thirty days."

This was the statement made by Senator Platt last night in his room at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. The Senator was talking about police legislation. He made it plain that Devery's removal is to be accomplished by Republican legislation at the coming session of the Legislature. When he was asked if he regarded it as certain that the Legislature would pass a police bill, he replied:

"I should say they will pass the police bill if they pass any bill. I believe it will be the first bill passed."

It is through this bill, which is to provide for a single Commissioner, that Devery's removal will be brought about. Senator Platt, when asked about the provision which it was reported would be incorporated into the bill providing that when the Chief of Police was removed, no member of the present police force might be appointed to the vacancy, said that he knew nothing about any such provision.

Senator Platt was seen after a conference in his rooms which was attended by Governor-elect Odell, Lieut. Gov. Woodruff, Fred Nixon, Speaker of the last House, and Chairman Dunn of the State Committee. The conference lasted for over two hours. It related principally to the appointment of legislative committees, and the prospective work of the Legislature. Mention was also made of the vacancy in the Chairmanship of the County Committee, caused by the resignation of Gen. Francis V. Greene.

When Senator Platt was asked whether a new Chairman of the County Committee had been decided upon, he said that no decision had been reached. The two persons most frequently mentioned for the Chairmanship are William H. Ten Eyck and Lemuel Ely Quigg. Mr. Ten Eyck is the present Chairman of the Executive Committee of the County Committee. He has said he does not want to be Chairman. Quigg is preferred by some of the leaders, but there are undercurrents which are carrying Mr. Ten Eyck to a position where he may have to accept the place. Senator Platt would not commit himself to a preference. The only reason for Gen. Greene's retirement, the Senator said, was that the General found he must give more time to his personal business.

"The man who is made Chairman of the County Committee," said the Senator, "should give all his time to the committee's work. There is enough to do to keep him busy all the time."

The Senator was asked who was to be appointed Supreme Justice to succeed the late Justice Beekman.

"I understand John Proctor Clarke is to be named," he replied.

"Has he been indorsed by the organization?"

"No, we will indorse him afterward. That has been what we have had to do almost invariably with Gov. Roosevelt's appointments."

The visit of George M. Varnum to the Fifth Avenue Hotel last night to confer with Senator Platt led to a report that he was to be made Chairman of the County Committee. Both Chairman Dunn and Mr. Ten Eyck said there was nothing in the report, but, notwithstanding their denials, there were some who affected to believe it.

National Committeeman Gibbs and Mr. Ten Eyck met in conference with Senator Platt late last night, and the succession to the chairmanship of the County Committee was still uncertain.

RAID ON GAMBLERS PLANNED BY MR. YORK.

Thirteen Men Arrested and Gaming Outfit Seized in Brooklyn.

A significant move in police affairs in Brooklyn was made last night by President Bernard J. York of the Police Board in a raid conceived and engineered by Mr. York on a gambling house at 41 Rockwell Place, near Fulton Street. The proprietor and twelve men were arrested and a wagon load of gambling paraphernalia was seized and taken to Police Headquarters.

The arrests have a double significance inasmuch as they signalize the return of Deputy Chief P. H. McLaughlin to his old post. The gambling house was situated in the precinct commanded by Capt. Eason and was made without the Captain's knowledge.

Those versed in police affairs take the raid to mean that Mr. York is determined to keep his word good that there shall be no gambling in Brooklyn.

President York appeared at Police Headquarters at 7 o'clock last evening. He first had a talk with Deputy Chief McLaughlin. Then Inspector Brennan was summoned, and quickly following him Sergt. Edward Poole of the Adams Street Station, who is in line for promotion to a Captaincy, and Sergt. Thomas Humphreys, in charge of the Detective Bureau, were called in.

The raid was carefully planned, and at 11:30 o'clock Inspector Brennan, with Detective Humphreys in command of Detective Sergeants Brady, Carroll, Gilpin, Hughes, and Farrell of the Brooklyn Central Office, set out for Rockwell Place. Some of the detectives made their way to the rear of the house by scaling back fences, while others ranged in the street in front ready to arrest all who might come out that way.

The detective in the yard broke in the basement door. The noise had startled some of those engaged in play, but before they could make a move, the police rushed up stairs to the parlor floor and found several games of chance in full operation—craps, faro, poker, and roulette. The alleged proprietor, William Dubois, and twelve men who were in the place, submitted to arrest quietly.

News of the arrest spread surprisingly quick in the quiet neighborhood, and while the men were being bundled into a wagon a crowd collected and jeered the prisoners. The detectives collected the outfit, which was of expensive make and included a crap table, faro layout, roulette wheel, several thousand poker chips, hundreds of packs of cards, and other paraphernalia.

The prisoners were first taken to the detective room in the Municipal Building, and later to the Adams Street Station, where they were locked up. All gave fictitious names.

"TOUCH" CARNEGIE FOR $30,000.

Washingtonians Get Him to Promise a Library to Fort Dodge, Iowa.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The Star says: "Mr. Andrew Carnegie of Pittsburg, donor of libraries, stepped out of the Shoreham Hotel yesterday morning and started for Senator Hanna's residence, just around the corner, on Lafayette Square. Two men who were waiting for him at the hotel approached and asked for five minutes' talk with him. 'All right,' responded Mr. Carnegie, 'but just walk along with me; I am behind time.'

"So they went along together, and as they walked the men laid before Mr. Carnegie the necessity for a public library at Fort Dodge, Iowa. They said Fort Dodge needed a library, and the way things were going it seemed that the only chance of getting one was for some great and good philanthropist to give one. They talked their case for the square and a half between the Shoreham and Senator Hanna's house, and when the party reached the Senator's door the library was won.

"'Surely,' said Mr. Carnegie, 'Fort Dodge shall have a library building. Let the city donate the site and agree to maintain the library, and as soon as this is done draw on me for $30,000 for the building. Good day.'

"The two men were Solicitor O'Connell of the Treasury Department and Director of the Mint Roberts. It was one of the most successful cases of 'touch' on the public streets on record."

COL. GARDINER IS REMOVED

Governor Ousts the District Attorney.

SUSTAINS THE CHARGES

Appoints Eugene A. Philbin, a Democrat, to the Office.

Decision Based Principally Upon the Conduct of the District Attorney at the Time of the Devery Indictment.

ALBANY, Dec. 22.—Gov. Roosevelt announced to-night that he had removed from office Col. Asa Bird Gardiner, District Attorney of New York County, on charges preferred by Deputy Attorney General H. H. Hammond. At the same time the Governor made it known that he had appointed Eugene A. Philbin of New York City, a Democrat, to fill the vacancy.

In a lengthy memorandum the Governor sets forth his reasons for removing Col. Gardiner. He says:

"The charge vitally affecting the conduct of the District Attorney is that which relates to his attitude at and about election, toward the indictment of Chief of Police Devery, after the latter had issued a scandalously improper and seditious order to the police force under him.

"Where the conduct of the District Attorney of the County of New York affects elections, this conduct becomes a matter not merely of county, but of State and National concern. Fraud or violence at the polls in New York County in a National election may concern not merely the county itself, not merely the other counties of the State, but also the other States of the Union. It is a mere truism to assert that honest elections, free from both fraud and violence, stand at the very basis of our form of republican self-government.

"There is no use in discussing the principles and issues unless it is settled that the conclusion which the majority reaches upon such principles and issues shall be honestly recorded in the election itself. There can be no possible justification for any man, and above all for any police officer, failing to do everything in his power to prevent crime against the ballot-box. No more serious crime against the State, and in time of peace no crime as serious, can be committed.

OPEN INCITEMENT TO VIOLENCE.

"Before the election last November there was the most open incitement by certain leading politicians to violence and fraud at the polls. In New York State in particular this incitement took the form of a naked appeal to mob violence—the leader of one of the two great parties in this State urging his followers in repeated public utterances to gather at the polls and criminally assault the officers of the law in certain contingencies. Utterances such as these, of course, excited great public uneasiness and bade fair to cause the most serious disturbances, but there was nothing to be done regarding them so long as they were only the utterances of individuals in private life.

"When, however, the Chief of Police of the City of New York issued a public order to his subordinates in which he incited them to criminal violation of the law—an order which was certain to cow and terrorize some men and to encourage the entire disorderly and lawless element—the situation became so grave as to call for the interference of the Chief Executive of the State.

"Accordingly, the Chief Executive notified the Mayor, the Sheriff, and the District Attorney that in view of the issuance of this order they would be held to a strict accountability for their acts in preserving or failing to preserve the public peace.

"The Mayor and the Sheriff promptly responded to this notification expressing and showing their desire to see that the laws were observed, the Mayor taking immediate steps to force the Chief of Police to rescind the obnoxious order itself. About the same time the Grand Jury found an indictment against the Chief of Police for having issued it.

AID AND COMFORT TO DEVERY.

"Alone, among the other city officials charged with the solemn duty of enforcing the laws, the District Attorney, on whom rested the heaviest responsibility of the enforcement of the law, gave by public utterance, aid and comfort to the Chief of Police.

"There is a flat conflict of veracity between the District Attorney and his accusers on this point. In the newspapers of the day following those containing the publication of the Chief of Police's order there appeared interviews with the District Attorney, in which he attacked the Grand Jury and justified the action of the Chief of Police. To give out such interviews was, of course, to give active encouragement to every element in the community which was enlisted upon the side of fraud or violence."

The District Attorney denies that he gave them out. Two witnesses have testified that he independently gave them interviews which were substantially the same, and in one case the testimony is explicit that he is informed that the interview is for publication. These interviews, and others like them, appeared conspicuously in the various morning papers, and were never repudiated then or afterward by the District Attorney.

"He never acknowledged in any way the receipt of the notification by the Chief Executive, which, if anything had been needed, would certainly have called his attention to the gravity of the situation and have aroused his vigilance as to anything he might say or had said.

"Under the circumstances it is impossible to believe that he did not give such interview or that he was ignorant of its publication.

"It is equally incredible that he could be ignorant of the effect that might be produced by such public statements from that county official whose special duty it should be to see to the observance of the law in the county.

"Had the other officials concerned assumed or preserved a similar attitude the very gravest consequences might have ensued, and the District Attorney cannot be allowed to profit by the fact that the action of others prevented the evil consequences of his own acts.

GARDINER FAILED IN HIS DUTY.

"As to the charges that the District Attorney failed in his duty in assisting the officials of the Attorney General's office who were concerned in preventing violations of the Elections law, it appears that there was such failure in at any rate certain cases prior to the election. This does not appear to have been the case after the election.

"It is impossible again to accept the plea that acts like these are to be excused on the ground that they spring from folly rather than from intent to do wrong.

"Under these circumstances the District Attorney of the County of New York is removed from office."

During his term of office Gov. Roosevelt has removed four State and county officials against whom charges were preferred, three of whom were Republicans. Those removed were:

Thomas Hutson, (Rep.,) County Treasurer of Chautauqua, Oct. 17, 1899; John M. Hitchett, (Rep.,) Sheriff of Washington County, July 7, 1900; Peter Wise, M. D., Commissioner in Lunacy, Dec. 20, 1900; Asa Bird Gardiner, District Attorney of New York County, Dec. 22, 1900.

After announcing his decision in the Gardiner case Gov. Roosevelt left on the midnight train for Oyster Bay, where he will spend Christmas week.

THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Col. Gardiner looked calm and unruffled as he entered the chamber this morning accompanied by his counsel, Col. Franklin Bartlett. Following in his wake were Assistant District Attorneys James W. Osborne, James D. McClelland, Henry W. Munger, James Lindsay spoken about the jury being a Republican body.

THE SECOND CHARGE.

Major Tyron Hughes Edwards testified that he had overheard Col. Gardiner tell Mr. Buell that the conversation he had with him was to be considered as confidential.

Gov. Roosevelt then took up charge No. 2, to the effect that Col. Gardiner had refused to render aid and assistance to the Attorney General in issuing subpoenas for offenders against the election law.

Mr. Hammond took the stand again. His testimony in brief was that he had gone to Col. Gardiner with a request from Judge Newberger for subpoena blanks, and the District Attorney had flatly refused to give him any, saying that he would not stand any nonsense from him (Hammond.)

Col. Bartlett then took up a line of questioning tending to show that Mr. Hammond had the power to get out his own subpoenas, and that he did not need to go to Mr. Gardiner. The witness admitted that such was the case, but alleged that he did not have the forms, and therefore he applied there. He contended, in answer to the assertion that blank subpoenas were never issued in criminal cases, that such a thing had been formerly done by Mr. Gardiner.

Called to the stand Col. Gardiner testified as to his refusal to give the blank subpoenas, saying that he told Mr. Hammond that it was against the practice of the office and that he did not need them anyway, because he could issue his own. He claimed Hammond was irritated and that he told him to put his request in writing. He said: "I have always aided the Attorney General's office and have done more to assist them than even the law contemplates." He reiterated that Mr. Hedges and Judge Werner could both testify to that.

Asked as to his interview with Hammond he said that it only took a minute and a half, and that he waited all day for an answer, but got none.

ASSISTANTS TESTIFY.

Assistant District Attorney John F. McIntyre was called and gave in detail the conversation that had ensued between Col. Gardiner and Mr. Hammond over the question of the issuance of Grand Jury subpoenas prior to election day. Witness deposed that the District Attorney had told Mr. Hammond that it was not the custom or usage of the office to give out blank forms unless filled in by himself. If Mr. Hammond would give him the names he would fill them in and have them served by his process servers.

Asked by Col. Bartlett what prompted the custom of refusing blank subpoena forms, witness replied that in several instances subpoenas had been surreptitiously secured for blackmailing purposes.

Assistant District Attorney Henry W. Unger was called. He testified that he could name a specific case in which Judge Gaynor had severely censured the District Attorney's office for issuing blank subpoena forms. Mr. Unger said that there was not the slightest intent on the part of the District Attorney's office to obstruct, hinder, or delay the Attorney Generals office in the matter of issuing subpoenas.

Mr. Hammond was asked by the Governor how long he had been delayed in securing his subpoenas. Mr. Hammond replied that he had been set back about four days, as he had to get them printed.

Col. Bartlett interrupted to say that blank forms could be purchased of Martin B. Brown, stationer and publisher. Mr. Hammond retorted that he had never heard of Mr. Brown, and never knew that such blank forms were for sale.

Col. Gardiner was recalled. He denied that he had ever said to Mr. Hammond that he would stand no nonsense from him.

Mr. Hammond again took the stand. On cross-examination by Col. Bartlett he admitted that he only used two or three subpoenas after securing the blanks.

DELAYED CASES.

Col. Bartlett, turning to the Governor, said he thought that the allegations of Mr. Hammond had narrowed down to the charges in the Devery matter, his refusing to issue subpoena blanks, his obstruction of calendar cases, and the individual charges against Mr. Unger.

The Governor then took up the charges that Col. Gardiner had refused to file the papers in the Miller and Lynch cases, and in consequence of the delay the writs were dismissed by the courts. Mr. Hammond in his testimony reiterated the charges made by him relative to these cases.

He admitted that the miscarriage of justice had resulted through the delays in the cases mentioned, as he had obtained a verdict in his favor in the Lynch case, and had secured the order asked for in the Miller case.

Assistant District Attorney Collins testified concerning the Bellevue Hospital medical student case, in which he stated that he had been called upon on the night of the arrest by the Election Inspectors to be present at the arraignment of the prisoner next morning. He did so, but withdrew when he found that Deputy Attorney General Hammond had taken charge of the case.

Assistant District Attorney McClelland and Deputy Assistant District Attorney McCann were then sworn. The latter, on cross-examination, denied that he had asked for an adjournment in the Miller case on the ground that the District Attorney wished to settle the matter as to whether he or the Attorney General had the right to argue the case when disposed of.

Assistant Deputy Attorney General Ware, who was called to corroborate Mr. Hammond's testimony, acknowledged under cross-examination that he had defended a person charged with larceny while acting in his capacity as an assistant to Mr. Hammond.

The specific charge that Col. John Bartlett, librarian in Col. Gardiner's office, who was arrested on the charge of illegal registration, had been discharged by Magistrate Crane without informing the Attorney General's office was dismissed by the Governor as being unimportant. Samuel S. Hotchkiss gave testimony which showed that Col. Bartlett had registered in the city but mistakenly had given his residence to the Magistrate not to vote, whereupon the charge against him was dismissed.

GOVERNOR ARRAIGNS GARDINER.

The Governor then took up the charge that the District Attorney had prevented election cases from going on the calendar in Part II. of the General Sessions. It was shown from the testimony of James Lindsay Gordon, Deputy Assistant District Attorney, and William J. McKenna, Chief Law Clerk in Col. Gardiner's office, that the "divorce mill" case of Henry Zelmer had taken precedence over all the other cases under consideration by the court.

Gov. Roosevelt placed great stress on the fact that Col. Gardiner had failed to acknowledge his letter, which had been opened at his office and the contents communicated to Chief Devery, and had never even deigned to clear his skirts of the allegations made against him.

"The appeals of Mr. Croker and others tending to incite riots and violence followed up by Chief Devery's orders," continued the Governor, "justified me in taking the action that I did. And the one public officer who should have supported me in the stand I had taken—the District Attorney—failed to do so, and according to these newspaper articles here before me, he backed up Chief Devery in the stand he had taken."

Col. Bartlett—Supposing you convict Col. Gardiner, your Excellency, it will be for malevolent and seditious slander only, and that does not warrant a dismissal from office."

Col. Gardiner, in his own behalf, told the Governor that the reason he had not answered his letter was that he did not think it was necessary, inasmuch as when he did finally receive it Chief Devery's order had been revoked, and the election had passed off quietly. With Mr. Hammond, he said, he was not very highly impressed, although he showed him every courtesy. He was more than glad when informed that the Attorney General would take charge of all election cases, as they were a nuisance.

THE NEW DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

Eugene A. Philbin was at the Manhattan Club last night when news of his appointment was brought to him. In speaking of his appointment, he said:

"I wish to say that the appointment comes to me as a surprise. I had no intimation of it from Gov. Roosevelt. Gov. Roosevelt, I imagine, took a liking to me because of the manner in which I conducted the investigation of the Soldiers and Sailors' Home, at Bath. I have always been a Democrat, and I am a thorough believer in Democratic principles, but I never allow partisan considerations to interfere with any public duty with which I am charged. In the investigation of the Soldiers and Sailors' Home, I started in to bring out the truth, and the showing of abuses made in my report led Gov. Roosevelt to refuse reappointment to the Trustees of the institution. He did this despite the strong efforts made by Senator Platt and Judge Parkhurst to have my report ignored.

"When I go into the District Attorney's office it will be with the determination to do my full duty without respect to any influence except the right to do my duty in the manner the citizens of New York have a right to expect of me. I will be guided by the example of Theodore Roosevelt when he was Police Commissioner of the City of New York."

Mr. Philbin, after the above remarks, handed to the interviewer several sheets of typewritten copy, which contained a sketch of his life, which he had prepared. From this sketch the following data is derived.

Eugene A. Philbin was born in the year 1857. His father, Stephen Philbin, was a very prominent Catholic. Eugene was educated at Seton Hall College. At the age of twenty-six he left mercantile life to study law at Columbia College, and was graduated in the year 1885. He was admitted to the bar in the year 1886.

After serving some time in a law office he was, in 1887, employed by the firm of Beekman & Ogden, of which the late Justice Beekman was senior partner. He was connected with that firm until it was dissolved in 1894 by the death of Thomas L. Ogden, and the election of Justice Beekman. Prior to that year some changes had occurred in the firm, and shortly before its dissolution he was given an interest in the firm, which was then known as Ogden & Beekman. The old partnership was immediately succeeded by the present firm of Philbin, Beekman & Menken, the two junior members being Charles K. Beekman, a nephew of Justice Beekman, and S. Stanwood Menken.

Mr. Philbin was appointed a Commissioner of the State Board of Charities in August, 1899, by Gov. Roosevelt, and in the following December, as Chairman of a committee of the board, made an investigation of the Soldiers and Sailors' Home at Bath, the result of which was that the Governor refused reappointment to all the Trustees whose terms expired. The final report of the investigation has recently been filed with the Governor.

The new District Attorney is a member of the Catholic Club and the Bar Association, and was, previous to his appointment as Commissioner, connected with many of the Catholic charities.

TAMMANY MEN ANGRY.

Word reached the Manhattan Club at 11 P. M. that Gov. Roosevelt had removed District Attorney Gardiner from office. There was a hum of talk over this news among those who were attending the reception there. The Tammany men present said that they expected such action, but they condemned Gov. Roosevelt.

Congressman William Sulzer said: "The removal of Col. Gardiner is a notice on the Democracy that the Republican Party intends to steal New York City. It is one of the most despicable acts ever committed by a Governor. The Republicans had no more cause to remove Gardiner than they have to remove me from Congress."

Congressman Jefferson M. Levy said: "The removal of Col. Gardiner is a serious political blunder. The District Attorney is an honest man, and I think he will be upheld by the people of the city."

Councilman John T. Oakley said: "I expected it, but it was a wrong thing to do."

GARDINER'S STAFF TO CONFER.

Ex-District Attorney Asa Bird Gardiner reached this city from Albany on the Empire State Express last night shortly after 10 o'clock. He left at once for his home in Garden City. At 1:25 o'clock this morning Assistant District Attorneys Osborne, Gordon, and Unger, with a number of clerks from the District Attorney's office reached the Grand Central Station on their way home. They were met by Assistant District Attorneys O'Reilly, Blumenthal, and McIntyre, and a number of Tammany politicians.

None of the men would talk except Assistant District Attorney O'Reilly, who said that Col. Gardiner had already reached the city. He said there would be a meeting of the Colonel's staff to-day. He did not know just where this meeting would take place, but thought at the Criminal Courts Building. The men then entered cabs and drove away.

None of the others of the party would talk about Col. Gardiner's removal.

GARDINER'S CAREER IN OFFICE.

Asa Bird Gardiner was elected District Attorney of the County of New York on the Tammany ticket in 1897. For eight years before that time he had served the organization as Chairman of the Tammany Hall Legal Committee. During this municipal campaign Col. Gardiner originated the famous slogan "To Hell with Reform." The statement was made at a Harlem political meeting and was in reference to the derelictions of one of ex-Mayor Strong's appointees.

The three years of Col. Gardiner's incumbency of the District Attorney's office have been very stormy ones for him, and very short intervals have witnessed new troubles brought about his head, either by his own action or those of his political enemies. In the three years three separate petitions for his removal from office have been made to the Governor of the State.

The first was by Col. Lovell H. Jerome, in 1898. Col. Gardiner's action in dismissing an attache of his office, a veteran, having been pronounced illegal by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Col. Jerome petitioned for his removal. One year later the City Club formulated charges alleging misuse of power, neglect of duty, and unfitness for office. Gov. Roosevelt appointed Ainsley Wilcox of Buffalo a Special Commissioner to take testimony, and a few months ago dismissed these charges also. The charges which resulted in Col. Gardiner's removal were preferred by Deputy Attorney General J. H. Hammond.

The increased powers of the State Superintendent of Elections by legislative enactments has long been a sore point with the District Attorney, and the constitutionality of the act has been questioned by his friends. Col. Gardiner, soon after assuming office, clashed with Recorder Goff, and warfare between the two has been bitterly waged ever since. The Recorder has frequently criticised the District Attorney from the bench, and the latter has replied in kind personally and officially.

During his term Col. Gardiner also antagonized the Judges of General Sessions. When subpoenaed by the Mazet Investigating Committee he refused to answer the subpoena. In several important instances, notably the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Inquiry and the election frauds last year, Special Deputy Attorney Generals have been appointed to prosecute instead of the District Attorney. John Proctor Clarke was designated to appear in the Brooklyn Rapid Transit case, and Job Hedges was delegated to prosecute the election frauds before the extraordinary Grand Jury.

Col. Gardiner's friends claim that a lack of cordiality has existed between the Governor and the District Attorney since the latter walked from the banquet hall where Gov. Roosevelt sat, during the Gubernatorial campaign, two years ago.

Col. Gardiner's name was changed from Gardner to its present form by the Court of Common Pleas in 1884.

FRANCIS WILSON BEGINS SUIT.

Foreclosure on Mortgage He Holds Against Chicago Property.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Francis Wilson, the comedian, has begun a foreclosure suit for $18,500 on a mortgage he holds against some property here in Cicero, just west of the city.

The money was advanced to the owner of the property, Gilbert Lehmer, a young man supposed to be worth $300,000. What worries Mr. Wilson's attorney is that he cannot get personal service on Mr. Lehmer, who is not in the city. If he does not serve the notice personally, three years must elapse before a decree of foreclosure can be made absolute. The total indebtedness is $20,500.

Mr. Wilson is a heavy holder of Chicago real estate, the total of his investments being, it is said, more than $300,000. He has made his investments carefully, as a rule, and is drawing a handsome income from them. The Lehmer property is worth nearly twice the amount of the loan.

EMPLOYERS' CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

Money and Turkeys Distributed by Chicago Business Firms.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—There has never been such a lavish distribution of Christmas money and presents by employers to their employes as this year.

The Crane Elevator Company and the Chicago and Eastern Illinois made their distributions early in the week, and the American Express Company distributed its gold to-day as already reported. Turkeys and cigars will go to those who have labored for the Adams Express Company. Every married man and every boy living at home receives a turkey.

A. O. Slaughter, the broker, gave his office force $5,000. Other brokers who will give presents of money, turkeys, or other remembrances for the holidays are John H. Wrenn, E. L. Brewster & Co., and C. A. Whyland & Co. The Fair Department Store will distribute $15,000, Siegel, Cooper & Co. will give away quite as much, if not more, and A. M. Rothschild & Co. will dispose of about $10,000.

The Illinois Central, the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, the Northwestern, and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul will give presents in the shape of money, turkeys, or other remembrances to their employes.

Employes of The Hub received their Christmas presents on the co-operative plan, profits of the firm being divided pro-rata among the clerks.

ANOTHER BALTIMORE BANK CLOSES ITS DOORS

Economy Savings Bank Is Forced to Suspend Payment.

Poor Depositors Crowd About the Institution and Threaten—Crash Caused by American National Failure.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 22.—The failure of the American National Bank of this city carries down other institutions with it. The Economy Savings Bank, which occupied quarters in the same building, closed its doors to-day.

Russian Hebrews and people of the poorer class are the chief depositors. More than 600 of them crowded about the doors of the bank to-day. Some were crying, others cursing, and at one time the crowd became so threatening that a squad of police was summoned to disperse them. The Directors issued this statement:

"Owing to the fact that our cash funds are deposited in the American National Bank, we have been compelled to suspend payment. We expect, as soon as its affairs are straightened out, to pay our depositors in full, and hope that they will only suffer a slight inconvenience from a possible shortness of Christmas money."

Rumors concerning other institutions in the building elicited a statement that neither the Old Town Building Association nor the St. Vincent de Paul's Building Association would be affected, but it is not definitely known yet what institution may be involved in the American Bank failure. It is believed that the Economy Bank's failure was partly caused by loans to the American Bank. Some of the stockholders in the American Bank are Directors in the Economy Bank.

The total amount of deposits in the Economy Bank is about $350,000, mostly in small accounts.

The failure of the American Bank also appears to be worse than first reported. Receiver Aldrich and National Bank Examiner Griffith were busy examining the accounts to-day.

Through the good judgment of Mayor Hayes, Baltimore City narrowly escaped being involved to the extent of $500,000 in the American Bank. During the administration of his immediate predecessor, William T. Malster, who was a Director in the American Bank, it was the city's depository, and at one time the city had on deposit $600,000, but when Mr. Hayes became Mayor he demanded that the whole amount be immediately withdrawn.

It is reported that the chief cause of the American Bank's failure was the fact that it held the paper of the Traders' National Bank, which was liquidated by the Baltimore Clearing House some time ago. A syndicate purchased the stock of the Traders' National Bank, and this stock was hypothecated with the stock of the American National Bank.

The depositors of the Traders' Bank were paid in full, but a loss of about $50,000 in the shrinkage of the value of the Traders' stock fell upon the American National Bank. It is also understood that the bank lost in the City and Suburban Real Estate Company, in which Joshua Horner, President of the bank, was interested. It is also rumored that the Columbian Iron Works caught the bank heavily.

George Gaither, counsel for the bank, says the assets are amply sufficient to meet its liabilities, and plans are being considered for the restoration of the bank.

President George A. Hartman of the Economy Bank said to-night that the concern was perfectly solvent, and that depositors would get their money in full when the bank received its deposits back from the American National Bank.

Mr. Hartman is also a Director in the latter. He says the receivership for the National bank was a coup on the part of the Clearing House, and he thought it a pity that they could not have put it off until after Christmas at least.

A member of the Clearing House Association said the affairs of the American National Bank were such as to indicate that the entire capital and surplus was impaired. It is understood that the bank has loaned about $140,000 on stock of the Automatic Telephone Exchange Company, which controls valuable patents.

MASSACHUSETTS CAR LINES.

Boston Elevated, Electric, and Other Companies to Harmonize.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 22.—The multiplicity of street railways in Eastern Massachusetts has given rise to numerous problems, among which none more nearly concerns the community than that of the joint use of tracks, whereby through traffic may be accommodated without change of cars.

It is announced to-day that the Boston Elevated, Boston & Worcester, and Massachusetts Electric Companies, which represent the principal street railway interests in Massachusetts, have been harmonized, and negotiations are now under way which will do a great deal more to cement this agreement in a substantial form. With the exception of the Newton roads, practically all of the street railways which connect with the Boston elevated lines are those of the Massachusetts Electric Companies, and within the last few weeks, it is asserted on good authority, the Boston Elevated Railway Company has obtained possession of a majority of the stock in the Boston and Newton Street Railway, in which President Claflin of the Commonwealth Avenue Electric Railway has succeeded President Parker. With the Boston and Worcester Street Railway allowed an entrance to Park Square, this brings practically all the street railways in Eastern Massachusetts under managements which are in entire harmony.

As is well known, the J. P. Morgan interest in the Boston Elevated Railway Company is paramount, and the same interest held enough of the Massachusetts Electric Company's stock last year to call off the support of those companies from the Boston and Worcester in its fight with the Boston Elevated Railway Company for an entrance into Boston. Within the last two weeks there has been a great deal of buying of the common stock of the Massachusetts Electric Companies, and it is now confidently asserted that the Morgan interest is also seeking to control this organization.

STEAMER TOWED 800 MILES.

British Steamer Found Helpless in Mid-ocean.

QUEENSTOWN, Dec. 22.—The British steamer Haddon Hall, Capt. Petersen, was towed into the harbor this morning with her propeller gone by the British steamer Springwell. The Haddon Hall sailed from Swansea for Baltimore, Nov. 28, and had been in tow of the Springwell, which was bound from Galveston for Bremen, since Dec. 15.

The Haddon Hall broke her shaft Dec. 7 in latitude 49 north and longitude 38 west during terrific weather. She was helplessly tossed about for two days. The Springwell appeared Dec. 10, but the fury of the gale precluded towing connection. Both steamers drifted before the gale, eastward, for three days. When the weather moderated the Springwell sent a lifeboat and attached hawsers. There were frequent partings, but the 800 miles of towage were finally accomplished.

The Schooner Leaming Wrecked.

NORFOLK, Va., Dec. 22.—The three-masted schooner Frank Leaming, Capt. Campbell, from Norfolk to New York, lumber laden, became waterlogged and was abandoned on the outer end of the Horseshoe during the severe storm of yesterday morning. Her crew were rescued by the schooner W. D. Hilton, Capt. Lippincott, from New York, which brought them to Norfolk this morning. The Leaming was found by the tug Walter A. Luckenbach and towed into port to-day. She now lies on the Berkley Flats.

Miners Insist on Employes' Discharge.

SHAMOKIN, Penn., Dec. 22.—The Shamokin Coal Company, operating the Natalie Colliery, discharged twenty non-union employes to-day under penalty of 1,200 men and boys going on strike. The discharged men refused to join the United Mine Workers. Fifty more men would have been dismissed, but they joined the organization.

Boy Santa Claus Burned.

Leroy Sargeant, fourteen years old, a pupil in Public School No. 1 of Belleville, N. J., was seriously burned yesterday afternoon at the school while impersonating Santa Claus for the benefit of the kindergarten children of the school. The lad's costume was ignited by coming in contact with a light on the Christmas tree. Prompt action saved his life.

A COUNTY QUARANTINED.

Greenup (Ky.) Authorities Refused to Take Measures Against Smallpox, and People Must Now Suffer.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENUP, Ky., Dec. 22.—From noon to-morrow until it suits the pleasure of the State Board of Health Greenup County, with the exception of the town of Russell, will be in a state of absolute quarantine. It is the penalty for defiance of the health laws. Smallpox is epidemic in twenty counties of Kentucky, and Greenup is one of them. The Greenup Fiscal Court and the county officers have refused to take proper steps to stamp out the disease. The local Health Board has resigned in disgust.

The county thus refusing to order vaccination and the segregation of patients has been brought to a serious pass. There will be no Christmas packages from far away friends. The embargo is against mail and express matter, as well as against freight and passengers, by river and rail, either incoming or outgoing. No train can stop in the county, nor a steamer land, save at Russell. The people of Russell, through their own Health Board, have acted properly, and are relieved from the quarantine, though the latter extends nearly all around them.

The Greenup people to-day realize their serious position. The town of Greenup was filled with people from all sections of the county making Christmas purchases. Indignation was freely expressed at the action of the State Board, but more so against the fiscal court, composed of the Magistrates from each district. There was also an exodus from the county, all the trains being crowded. The people are not afraid of smallpox, but they are afraid of quarantine.

One merchant pasted this sign in his window:

"Come in and buy your Christmas goods cheap. You can't get out of the county, and if you get out you can't get in again. Now is the time to buy."

TWO MORE SMALLPOX CASES.

Both on East Side, Though More Than Fifty Blocks Apart.

Two more smallpox cases were reported by the Board of Health last night. They were those of Jennie Claxton, twenty-eight years old, of 109 East Ninety-fourth Street, and R. A. Clark, twenty, of 329 East Eighteenth Street. In both instances all the persons in the houses were vaccinated and the patients removed to North Brother Island.

T. J. Chabot, of the firm of Lyons & Chabot, One Hundred and Fiftieth Street and Third Avenue, denies that there was any objection on his firm's part to the vaccination of its employes. Mr. Chabot says that when he returned from lunch he found the doctors in charge and his employes running excitedly about with bleeding arms. He at once ordered them out. He says they were arrogant and overbearing, although he told them that if they would go to an upper floor he would send the employes up in groups. It was he and not the doctors who complained to the police.

Later all the firm's employes were vaccinated, at its expense, by doctors employed for the purpose before the city physicians called.

PORT CHESTER TRAMPS' HAVEN.

Given Tobacco and Pipes and Night's Lodging in Comfortable Lock-Up.

Special to The New York Times.

PORT CHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 22.—More tramps are brought before the five Justices of Port Chester in the course of a day than are arraigned in many other towns in a year. Port Chester is a terminus for freight trains, and the hoboes ride out of New York, alight at Port Chester, and then seek out the town constables whose professional card they may have.

Besides getting a night's lodging free in the village lock-up, they are often given bags of tobacco and pipes and occasionally a free meal. The following morning they are brought before one of the Justices and often given their choice of going to the warm county jail or being put out in the cold to tramp more, and perhaps be arrested again by another Constable, given some more tobacco, and brought before another Justice.

The law allows all this, and there is money in tramps for both constables and Justices. The Town Auditors have been passing upon bills this week, and find the following record of tramps brought before the five Justices: W. F. Wakefield, 1,314 tramps; Justice Bernard Baruch, 485; Justice Stephen Marshall, 823; Justice Theodore Parker, 181; Justice Hains, 40. Total, 3,243.

The auditors have cut down the constables fees. The latter object (and may secure counsel to collect what the law allows. Port Chester tax-payers growl and grumble and say that if inducements were not offered the tramps by the prize-package constables they would not come here or carry in such numbers. The constables say they are doing their duty in arresting the hoboes.

COMPLICATION WITH CANADA.

Arrest in the Dominion by American Constables Causes Friction.

PLATTSBURG, Dec. 22.—An international complication has arisen out of the arrest of Frank Coolidge, an Italian, for the murder of John Julian at Alburgh, Vt., on Wednesday last.

After the murder Coolidge went to Lacolle, Quebec, where he was found and arrested by American constables. He is now in Plattsburg Jail and refuses to go to Vermont unless requisition papers are procured.

Canadian officials claim Coolidge was arrested in Canada by United States officers without the authority of the Dominion Government.

BIG HORIZONTAL TELESCOPE.

Prof. Pickering Expects to Obtain More Perfect Photographs of the Moon.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 22.—Recent advices from the West Indian Station of the Astronomical Observatory of Harvard University, situated at Mandeville, Jamaica, state that Prof. W. H. Pickering and his assistants have completed the necessary foundations for the great horizontal telescope, and erected a building to cover the instrument. Serious trouble was experienced at first with the excessive fall of dew, but a building has been constructed around the great mirror at the foot of the telescope, so as to remedy the difficulty.

In this telescope the operator looks downward instead of upward toward the star, as is ordinarily the case, and the telescope being parallel to the earth's axis does not have to be moved. This enables the observer to remain in one position and devote his whole attention to study.

Prof. Pickering expected to have the telescope ready for use yesterday. It is hoped because of the great length of this telescope to obtain more perfect photographs of the moon than has yet proved possible, and by following it through all its phases to obtain a complete and correct atlas of the surface visible to the south.

KIMBERLEY THREATENED?

LONDON, Dec. 22.—The Evening Standard of yesterday said it heard that a report had reached London that Kimberley was seriously threatened by the Boers.

None of the leading South African firms interested in Kimberley has received information tending to confirm The Evening Standard's report.

Blizzard Raging in Nebraska.

Special to The New York Times.

LINCOLN, Neb., Dec. 22.—A blizzard is raging in Nebraska. During the fore part of the day a light rain fell, which turned to snow at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

A strong northwesterly wind is blowing, and the air is filled with snow. The weather is not cold, but is growing colder and the storm shows little sign of abatement. Should the storm continue severely to-morrow stock on the ranges will suffer and railroads blockaded may be expected.

The weather up to this time has been very mild and stock is not in the best of shape to stand a storm. Railroad trains are running late and losing time.

Big Judgment Against Mine Owner.

DENVER, Col., Dec. 22.—A judgment for $130,000 was given in the United States Circuit Court here in favor of Orrin B. Peck of Chicago against Winfield S. Stratton, the Cripple Creek millionaire. Peck had contracted to erect a concentrating plant at the Independence Mine, and Mr. Stratton claimed the contract was not fulfilled.

LITTLE MOTHERS' DINNER.

Fifty Girls Cooked and Ate Turkey and Ice Cream—A Present to Their Teacher.

Fifty little girls ate one of the best turkey dinners of their lives at the rooms of the Little Mothers' Aid Association, 304 East Twenty-first Street, yesterday noon. It was their Christmas dinner, and the little girls knew just how good it was from practical knowledge, for they cooked it every bit themselves. They are the fifty little girls who belong to the cooking classes which meet twice a week at the association headquarters and at a branch on West Street. Mrs. Emily Van Blei, one of the officers of the association, made them a present of the materials for the dinner and they did the rest.

It was an exciting day. The children were up bright and early in the morning to get the babies they have to mother at home ready to be left to other little girls who were engaged for this one time to come and assist. At 10 o'clock they were all at the "Happy Day House," as they call the place where they have had so many good times. The cooking teacher was there before them, and a number of turkeys, looking very plump and white, were stuffed ready for the baking. Turkey is a too expensive dish for little maids of nine and twelve to practice upon, and they have not had experience in turkey dressing. But they knew how to do the roasting and prepare the vegetables, and, as soon as the little checked aprons and white caps were on they went to work.

It was not much work, for there were so many cooks, but it took a good while, for every one of the fifty little girls had to do something, and there was only one not very large kitchen to work in. They made cranberry sauce, prepared creamed cabbage, boiled and mashed potatoes, cooked onions, cleaned celery, and prepared the tables. There were three of these, two in the kitchen and one large one in the dining room. The children said grace together, and just at 2 o'clock sat down. At the cooking classes there are always two little housekeepers for a small number of girls who wait on the tables. But yesterday the grown people were glad to come in and help, and it was a pleasure to see the fifty little white-capped cooks eating their dinners as if they enjoyed them.

The turkeys, which were roasted to just the right rich brown, were so good that it was hard to let the bones go, and one little girl lingered so long over her drumstick that it was almost polished when the grown-up waiters took the plate from the table. The table was decorated with holly, and there was a nice dessert which was a surprise for the children. Their cooking does not include many desserts, and this for the Christmas dinner was ice cream and cake, and there were plates of shiny red apples on the table as well.

Between dinner and dessert there was a diversion which took the form of recitations, and different little girls were called upon without previous notice, and not one of them said that she had not expected to speak and was not prepared. Each little face beamed all over at the idea, and there were Christmas poems and recitations about "Little Ned, who went to bed and always said his prayers," and other equally interesting, loudly applauded each time by all the little cooks. There were songs in between, sung by the children together, and it was a very lively time.

There was a presentation, too, for the little girls each brought a penny for a basket of fruit to give to the cooking teacher, Mrs. Caroline Fielitz. One of the little girls made the presentation and told the teacher of the gratitude and love of all the children in a voice so loud that it could be heard through the two rooms. After the ice cream was finished the children gave three big cheers for the giver of the dinner, and while some of them were obliged to go home, the others went up stairs to sing and play games.

The children make great progress with their cooking, and one father has been in to tell the teacher that he does not have to spend so much money for drink now, for he has a nice, warm breakfast every day, and the mothers who go out to work say that they do not have to leave food prepared, for the little mother left behind can cook everything that is needed.

The one great want of the association now is a new home. This is to be the old Candee house, at 236 Second Avenue, and $1,000 has been paid on it. Four thousand dollars more must be paid before it can be occupied. It is greatly needed, for the large parlors in which to entertain the older girls evenings, the upper rooms for lodgings for them, as well as the additional room for the other regular work.

THROWN INTO A DITCH.

Highwaymen in the Bronx Try to Drown a Man After Clubbing and Robbing Him.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Dec. 22.—Richard Jenks, employed by Henry Musculus, a grocer, of 132 North Ninth Avenue, Mount Vernon, was sandbagged and robbed Wednesday night by two highwaymen near the Morris Park race track. They beat him into unconsciousness, looted his pockets, carried off his overcoat and a new suit, and then tried to drown him in a ditch. Jenks had been to New York, and rode on a trolley car to West Farms, and then boarded a Westchester car in mistake for a car for Mount Vernon. He jumped off near the road leading to the Morris Park race track, and waited for a Mount Vernon car. He saw two men come toward him from the rear. One of them struck him a heavy blow over the right eye with a sandbag, which felled him. When he tried to rise he was struck again and then showed fight when he was hit a third time, the blow rendering him

BANQUET OF THE NEW ENGLAND SOCIETY

Senator Beveridge Talks of the New Era of the Nation's Life.

THE CONSTITUTION AND FLAG

Speeches by W. E. Dodge, President Hadley of Yale, St. Clair McKelway, Prof. Wilson, Gen. Miles, and Admiral Barker.

For the ninety-fifth time the New England Society last night celebrated its annual festival, and the sons of New England, representing business and law, science and medicine, theology and pedagogy, and leisure, begot by wealth, sat to the number of five hundred or more at table in the Waldorf-Astoria and listened to panygerics upon the mother section of the American Commonwealth, mixed with discussion upon modern statesmanship and conditions at the birth of the new century, each man of the society happy that he was by birth a New Englander and with no serious apologies to offer that in maturer years he became a New Yorker.

The grand ballroom of the hotel was utilized for the occasion, and as a pleasant reminder of the early stamping ground big sheaves of corn, with rakes and three-tined wooden pitchforks, deftly peeping out from stock and tassel, fairly filled the space on the dais back of the table for the speakers' and invited guests, of, whom there were many, representing various States of the Union. Over the dais between a wealth of Stars and Stripes hung the shields of the New England States, with, for a centrepiece, an oil painting of the Mayflower the picture bearing the legend of "The New England Society of New York." Above this was the shield of the United States as representing the bond of American fraternity. Around the room the Union's colors formed the only embellishment, with the exception of groups of women in the boxes.

The keynote of the dinner of course was the Puritan Father. This was borne out on the cover of the menu, upon which the old Mayflower bears landward on a fair sea, while down in one corner is a picture of early New England life—the pioneer settler, gun in hand, giving greeting to an aborigine with a spear, in peaceful attitude. As a supplement to the main theme, the words of Senator Albert J. Beveridge, hirsell a Hoosier, that "the Puritan was the greatest maker of precedent that the world ever saw," to serve to make the sons of Yankeedom smile their hands together and give the son of a later civilization assurance that the bond between East and West is not weakened either by time or distance from the stepping stone of the New World.

William E. Dodge, President of the society, presided. On his right and left sat the speakers and guests of the evening, who were:

Senator Beveridge,	Robert B. Roosevelt,
President A. T. Hadley of Yale,	Senator Depew,
St. Clair McKelway,	James McKeen,
Prof. Wilson,	Henry L. Stoddard,
The Rev. Dr. Babcock,	Stewart L. Woodford,
Lieut. Gen. N. A. Miles,	Henry E. Howland,
Rear Admiral Barker,	James A. Gierman,
J. Pierpont Morgan,	R. De Peyster Foster,
Major Gen. J. R. Brooke	George Gray Ward,
D. F. Appleton,	John T. Terry,
Horace Russell,	Milton J. Southard,
F. J. De Peyster,	Julien T. Davies,
	Morris K. Ferris,

Many prominent men sat among the diners, notable being ex-Speaker Thomas B. Reed, who became a member of the New England Society a few weeks ago.

Mr. Dodge opening the intellectual part of the feast, proposed a toast to the President of the United States, which was drunk standing, while the society, reinforced by the orchestra, sang the National hymn.

Mr. Dodge began his remarks by saying that the ballroom in which the society met was one of the evidences of advancement of the last fifty years. Some of the members, he said, remembered the old square room in the Astor House, where the society so often met, bare and cold, half-lighted by non-illuminating and ever-fragrant gas, but all being kept from being insufferably bad by the good cheer of those who were there. He went on to refer to the virtues of the Pilgrim Fathers, whom he eulogized as men of faith, courage, and common sense, adding: "We are all proud to know that our mothers and wives and sisters are such worthy descendants of those whom we revered and loved in the past."

Mr. Dodge paid a tribute to the famous men of New England, speaking of the hard life and trials of the founders. He continued:

"But we have, gentlemen, the overlove for wealth, the danger of luxury and self-indulgence, and apathy in affairs—for a republic greater danger than those that our forefathers met with and we need to bring out that strain in our blood which we have inherited from them, and use our powers as they used theirs, to make the world better and stronger. The narrowness and hardness of which we complain too much of these good men has been softened and mellowed in our time, but if we wear a velvet glove the steel of mail beneath should be willing to strike sturdy blows for truth and justice, for God and for right, and for our country—and now, gentlemen, for our city; we never needed it more.

"It is the proud boast of many of us that we have descended from those men. It ought to be our high ambition to follow them, and to make our individual influence and our influence as a society tell upon this city, where we are living."

ST. CLAIR McKELWAY'S VIEWS.

St. Clair McKelway responded to the toast, "New England Spirit in Press and Pulpit." He said:

"'The New England Spirit in Press and Pulpit'—what is—or was—the New England spirit? On its mental side it stood for inquiry and reason. On its moral side it stood for conscience. It wanted to know the what, the why, and the whence of things. That ascertained, spelt duty. And life was duty to the New England spirit.

"Conditions to favor it were rife in Europe. Faith was formalism and authority. Hard that to believers in the divine right of private judgment. Government was tyranny or dissoluteness. Hard that to lovers of liberty and of purity. The Old World was a good one to leave. The New World had been discovered by navigators. It was being exploited by adventurers. To it came those who here sought freedom to worship God. The rest is the story of America. No need to tell it to hearts that know it. Persecution was the scourge. Hope was the wand. Opportunity was the goal.

"Now, what of this spirit in press and pulpit? Rather what of it everywhere? Printing is the medium of every manifestation of that spirit. Whatever of that spirit shows in art or literature or science or law or politics or economics journalism reflects and incites. And the pulpit applies to all of it the contemporary conception of Deity, which becomes ever broader and finer. So, when we speak of the New England spirit in press and pulpit we speak of forces which chronicle and moralize it wherever it is.

NOT EXCLUSIVELY NEW ENGLAND.

"That spirit could be summed as the conscience in and under things. The spirit is not exclusively New England. Puritan and Pilgrim did not originate it. They only made it dominant in an immigration to this Western world. But the doing of that is their honor's crowe of honor, and the glory of their immortality. One need not say they exclusively did it. They did it, and these anniversaries of their coming magnify the deed. Hence the doing was a great thing, and the celebrations of it are worthy memorials.

"We pay tribute to-night to those who dared distance, desolation, danger, and death for an idea certain of eternal life. A credit they lent to the race. Benefactors they to all the times to come. If we endow them with qualities they did not know they had, we do not exaggerate. They knew that under them were the everlasting arms. That sufficed for them. They did not know that the arms would lift them to endless fame as builders of Church and State. That concerned them not. For them was duty. Not for them were consequences, even though one of them were deathless distinction. That was as the Master pleased.

"Can the old spirit be maintained without the old incentives? Persecution was a spur. Persecution is no more. It has dropped into oblivion from the cold heel of dead power. Hope was the inspiration, but hope has changed to full fruition. Opportunity was the search, but it has been found, and is now an heirloom. The wand that beckoned is now a pointer to monumental achievements. The beginning was on lines of most resistance. Life now moves on lines of the least. Adversity was the brother of the Pilgrim. Prosperity is the heritage and boast of his descendant. Can the old fire be kept alive under the new facts?

"For answer, let us see what Pilgrim land has come to be. It is the safe and free home of all faiths, instead of the preserve of one. Far better that than any monopoly of belief or worship. Puritanism itself has divided into orthodox and liberal theology. Jonathan Edwards is not alone in the temple of fame, here—or hereafter. William Ellery Channing nudges and neighbors him here—and there! By gunners many the propositions each espoused kept up a terrific bombardment through the centuries. But with those who accent Godhood and with those who accent manhood the Maker of both, let none doubt, is equally well pleased. In both was the New England spirit—the conscience in and under things for nations and for men.

NO SLAVERY UNDER THESE FLAGS.

"And to-day there is no slavery under the heavens beneath the Stars and Stripes or the Cross of St. George. And it was the Puritan-Pilgrim conscience which, by abolishing it in its own domain, abolished it everywhere else. Under the new facts burns the old fire.

"We must see that the old spirit becomes not a mere tradition. The old order has changed, giving place unto the new, but the old spirit in the new order must be the salvation of the times that are and of those that are to be. When the spirit was born here poverty was universal. That made simplicity obligatory. Then plain living was a necessity. Was high thinking a product of it or a protest against it? We might differ about that. But we cannot differ on the fact that high living carries in it the temptation to sordid thinking. Against that we must set ourselves. For spiritual thinking, altruistic thinking will be the best antidote to plutocratic politics, to smooth pulpiteering, to a journalism of polished heartlessness, to a time serving art, to a diabolical or decadent literature, and to an attitude of education toward money as cringing as that of authorship in not remote centuries to titled ignorance or to illiterate power.

"The old New England spirit of conscience can in press and pulpit introduce high thinking into conditions of complex life, as competitive as complex, and nothing else can so well introduce it. Happily that kind of journalism is best respected and that kind of preaching is most potential. Neither may be temporarily the most current, but all the forces of right and of true interest are on the side of such journalism and of such preaching. Let the best readers prefer the best journalism and the best hearers encourage the best preaching, and the New England idea of conscience in conduct and in character for nations and for men will continue to be dominant in the America which has long been the wonder and the hope and which is now the leader of the world."

SPEECH BY PRESIDENT HADLEY.

Mr. Dodge introduced President Hadley of Yale, who spoke on "Forefathers' Day." He said:

"Our theme is an old one; its application is vitally and intensely modern. As an event of history, the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers is receding into the past, and tends to be overshadowed in our minds by other events of greater popular interest; but as an example for men's lives it is no clearer more important than at this opening of the twentieth century, and in the face of the new political and industrial problems which that century brings.

"It not infrequently happens that the meaning of a great anniversary is for the time partly lost; and then found once more when some renewal of the old conditions arises, and it becomes an inspiration for the present, as well as a remembrance of the past. So it was with the birthday of our National independence. In the first half of the nineteenth century the celebration of the Fourth of July was becoming perfunctory. To those who knew not what it was to fight for an idea, the memory of Revolutionary heroes became obscured; their principles mere phrases, from which the vital meaning had gone out. But when hearts were tried in the fires of another war, then in this anniversary rise into something more than an empty form of commemoration of the dead, and make itself an occasion of patriotism in the living.

"So it has been, to some extent, with our remembrance of the Puriten, both of the old England and of the new. Although we have not ceased to render him gratitude for the hardships which he bore in order that his descendants might live a life of freedom, we have in some measure lost personal contact with the man and understanding of what he really was. By nine persons out of ten, the Puritans of this seventeenth century are remembered chiefly for the pattern of their clothes or the phraseology of their creeds; and even the tenth man who really goes below the surface often have wrong emphasis on the different parts of their activity, and fails to understand the true reason of their power. He thinks of the Puritan not so much for what he did as for what he refused to do and forbade others to do; as one who held himself aloof from the joys of life and apart from the sympathies of humanity.

HIS STRENGTH OF CHARACTER.

"Not in such restrictions and refusals was the strength of the Puritan character founded. Not by any such negative virtue did he conquer the world. The true Puritan was intensely human—a man who 'ate when he was hungry, drank when he was thirsty, loved his friends, and hated his enemies.' If he submitted to self-imposed hardships and practiced abstention where others allowed themselves latitude, it was not because he had less range of interest than his fellows, but because he had more range. He did these things as a means to an end. His thoughts went beyond the limits of the single day or the single island. He was a man who considered power as more than possession, principles as better than acquirements, public duty as paramount to personal allegiance. He regarded himself as part of a universe under God's government. For the joy of taking his place in that government he steeled himself to a temper which spared not his own body nor that of others. His life, his time, its powers, was held in trust. To the fulfillment of this trust he subordinated all considerations of personal pleasure.

"Men are always divided more or less clearly into two types—those who recognize this character of life as a trust and those who fail to recognize it. But not in all ages and in all countries does the distinction between the two types manifest itself sharply in historic action. For often the range of possible interest is so small and the conduct of life so bound down by conventions that the man who would pursue pleasure finds no opportunity for adventure, nor does the man who is ready to accept large trusts find occasion for their exercise.

"But in England, at the beginning of the seventeenth century, the discovery of new worlds abroad and the development of new problems at home gave opportunity for this divergence of character to show itself to the utmost. The explorer who journeyed for adventure or for gain was differentiated from him who journeyed for freedom's sake. The citizen who was ready to seek his fullest enjoyment in the old political order was separated from him who would hazard that enjoyment for the sake of what he believed to be eternal principles of human government. It was because England had men of the latter type that her subsequent progress as a free nation has been realized. It was the Puritan who, by subjecting his power and his love of life to self-imposed restraints, made freedom possible in two hemispheres.

"Once more we come to a similar parting of the ways. The close of the nineteenth century has witnessed an extension of the geographical boundaries of men's interests comparable only to that which came 300 years earlier in the days of Queen Elizabeth. It is for the next generation to decide how these new fields shall be occupied. Shall it be to gratify ambition, commercial and political, or shall it be to exercise a trust which has been given us for the advancement of the human race? Shall we enter upon our new possessions in the spirit of the adventurer or in the spirit of the Puritan? The conflict between these two views will be the really important issue in the complex maze of international relations during the half century which is to come. The outcome of this conflict is likely to determine the course of the world's history for ages thereafter.

THE INDUSTRIAL QUESTION.

"Nor is it in international politics and in problems of colonization alone that this issue is arising between those who regard the world as a field for pleasure and those who regard it as a place for the exercise of a trust. The development of modern industry has placed the alternatives even more sharply before us in the ordering of our life at home. The day is past when the automatic action of self-interest could be trusted to regulate prices, or when a few simple principles of commercial law if properly applied secured the exercise of justice in matters of trade. The growth of large industries and of large fortunes enables those who use them rightly to do the public much better service than was possible in ages previous. It also permits those who use them wrongly to render the public correspondingly greater injury. No system of legislation is likely to meet this difficulty. The outcome depends on the character of the people.

"Is our business to be dominated by the spirit of the adventurer or by the spirit of the Puritan? Shall we regard wealth as a means of enjoyment and commercial power as a plaything to be used in a game of personal ambition, or shall we treat the fortunes which come into our hands as a trust to be exercised for the benefit of the people, rigidly abstaining from its abuse ourselves and unsparingly refusing to associate with others who abuse it? We have no right to sit here this evening and commemorate our descent from the Pilgrim Fathers if we have any doubts concerning our answer. Let us throw ourselves heart and soul on that side of the industrial question which proves us worthy of Puritan ancestry—the side which regards wealth as a trust to be used in behalf of the whole people and in the furtherance of the purposes of God's government.

"Abroad and at home the issue is defining itself. We have the chance to prove whence we sprang. We cannot add to the glory of those whose deeds we celebrate, but we can help to carry their work one historic step further toward this accomplishment. In the words of Abraham Lincoln, no less appropriate now than in the day when they were first spoken at Gettysburg—'It is for us to be dedicated to the great task remaining before us; that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause to which they gave the last measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.'"

SENATOR BEVERIDGE'S SPEECH.

Senator Albert J. Beveridge's speech was received with great enthusiasm. He was greeted with applause from the start, and was frequently interrupted with cheers and hand clapping. His theme was "The Puritan Spirit and the New Epoch in Our National Life." He said:

"The Puritan spirit is constructive. The new epoch in our National life will be constructive. The Puritan spirit never criticised except to propose something better. It felled forests only to erect buildings. The word of immortality in Puritanism is the master word 'create.' Build, build—this is the message of Puritanism to the American people in the new epoch of our National life.

"This new epoch is caused by our new possessions, the new responsibilities they place upon us, and the new powers they call into action. It is unavailing to argue that the recent change wrought on the map of the world ought never to have been made. The change has occurred.

"The Philippines are ours. Hawaii is ours. The Pacific is the American ocean. The canal will be ours. Look at your map and you will see that the Gulf is, in practical effect, an American lake. Our flag floats over the Antilles and has not yet been lowered even to the half-mast; and when the Stars and Stripes is hauled down in Cuba, let it hang a while at half-mast, in mourning for the people of Cuba abandoned and the duty of the United States deserted. These are epochal facts. The future of the world is in our hands. This is not enthusiasm; it is geography.

"The constructive and righteous Puritan spirit must dominate this intense situation. We ought not to be merely imitative any more than we ought to be corrupt. New circumstances require new laws. It is not against these that, they are different in method and even principle from the old laws. New laws and new methods are not bad just because they are new. The important thing is that they shall fit the case. The Puritan was practical. If old forms and ancient principles did not apply to actual conditions, he developed principles and devised forms that did. Thus in our new epoch it is helpful to complain of unalterable facts and declare that we cannot deal with them because the old methods do not fit them. There is nothing so narrow as the egotism of precedent.

GOVERNMENT OF PHILIPPINES.

"Let us be specific. The Philippine people are to be governed. We can govern them best by considering them as they are. We cannot deal with them as we would with New Englanders. We must not ignore differences of location, condition, climate, race. With all our new dominions we must deal as facts demand. A common code for the Malay archipelago, the Hawaiian Islands, and our possessions in the Gulf, and that code the method devised for our American peopled territories, would be unsatisfactory to them and to us.

"To govern them by a method not appropriate to them merely because we have used such methods heretofore is not Puritan, but Chinese reasoning. We must have the adaptability of common sense. The Puritan was the greatest maker of precedents the world has ever seen. And to make a precedent when needed is as noble as to follow a precedent when proper. Construction is the office of our epoch, and therefore we invoke the creative spirit of the Puritan.

"Our Constitution does not prohibit this. It says, 'Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting territory and other property belonging to the United States.' Even if this present development was not dreamed of when the Constitution was framed, that ordinance of National life still authorizes it. For the Constitution grows as the people grow. Otherwise, the people would have to stop growing or the Constitution would have to be destroyed. Neither is necessary. The Constitution was made for the American people for the Constitution. The Constitution does not give immortality to the Nation; the Nation gives immortality to the Constitution.

"The saying that 'our Constitution follows the flag' is only partly true. The whole truth is this: Our institutions follow the flag. Our Constitution is only one of our institutions. Our Constitution did not give us our institutions; our institutions gave us our Constitution. Our institutions follow the flag, the simplest first, later the more complex, and finally, when the way is prepared, our noblest institution, the American Constitution, follows the flag. Free schools, equal laws, impartial justice, social order, and at last, when these have done their work and our wards are ready to understand and rightly use it, our Constitution, which is our method of government, follows the flag. The American Constitution follows the flag when the American people deem it best, and the American people may be trusted.

AN AMERICAN CANAL.

"The Puritan insisted upon settling his own questions in his own way, and he knew what his own questions were. He had the logic of geography, and we, his children, must have it, too. Any canal which joins the American Pacific to the American Gulf must, therefore, be itself American. The Antilles are the major premise; the Philippines and Hawaiis are the minor premise. Central American and isthmian canals finish that syllogism.

"The Puritan had that independence which consists in self-dependence in his own affairs. Apply this to present facts. The Philippine question is an American question; the American Nation must work it out—we cannot permit a concert of powers in solving it. The Cuban question is an American question; the American Nation must work it out—we cannot permit a concert of powers in solving it. Atlantic and Pacific canals and the future of Central America so far as affected thereby are American questions—we cannot permit a concert of powers in solving them.

"This sentiment is not anti-foreign; it is only pro-American. International respect is based on respective National strength as well as on justice. Remember that the figure of Justice always bears a sword. Geography and interest, not altruism, are the basis of fundamental National rights.

"All this means construction, and construction involves the probability of occasional mistakes. But this will not give us pause. Progress is built on mistakes. Conservatism and construction are what we need. Do-nothing statesmanship is fatal; slap-dash statesmanship is fatal, too. Both are non-Puritan and un-American. Constructive conservatism, cautious daring, active moderation—a progress that is sane—these are the qualities we must have in the new epoch in our National life, and these are the qualities which, combined, men call the Puritan spirit.

"In carrying out this programme of construction the stern spirit of Puritan honesty must rule. Not exploitation, but development; not waste, but growth. Develop, build, cultivate, create. No robbing, no looting, no piracies in the name of commerce. We cannot run away from these tasks. Where the Puritan landed he remained. The Puritan spirit has never known retreat. We will not be cowards any more than we will be robbers.

"Let no man fear because the Constitution gives the American people a free hand to do this giant's work. Let no man fear because our treaties and our foreign relations shall be so arranged that the American people shall have a clean future in which to do this work. The motto of Americanism henceforth must be 'A clean future and a free hand.' Let us trust posterity as much as we revere ancestry. Otherwise we discredit both. I propose this sentiment: 'America, the Young Man of the Nations—the proudest development of the Puritan spirit. Give him a clean future and a free hand, and he will make of the new epoch the beginning of mankind's golden age.'"

PROF. WILSON'S HUMOR.

Prof. Woodrow Wilson of Princeton responded to the toast "The Puritan Example in Letters and Affairs." He said that he regarded it as a whimsical fortune that a Scotch-Irishman should be brought to contribute to a New England dinner.

After saying that it was necessary races of different characters should exchange their ideas as well as their compliments, Prof. Wilson said, amid laughter:

"The Puritan was, as Dr. Hadley has said, intensely human, but you will remember that he apologised to God as many as three times a day for the fact, and that it was an imperative part of his creed that he should root out diligently, in season and out of season, the pestiferous elements of the flesh that were in him. Now, I have no objection to the hatred that Dr. Hadley referred to. I believe in a certain degree of intolerance. It is an eminently comfortable indulgence.

"'But that intolerance can express itself, if not exactly as a dear old President of Princeton expressed it, at any rate in more parliamentary form. I refer to that occasion when he brought all the strong flavor of his Scotch-Presbyterianism to a meeting of the Evangelical Alliance—one of the early gatherings of that interesting association—and Dr. Huntington arose and proposed that they adopt the Apostle's Creed as our platform upon which we will all stand. 'Tut-tut,' Dr. McCosh exclaimed, 'I'll not descend into hell with the Episcopallans.'.

"There is in this, gentlemen, the flavor and the definiteness which goes with the Scotch character, and yet I believe that if you will look into it you will find that you are worshipping your ancestors at a safe distance."

Prof. Wilson said that when he thought of the shock and change which the Puritan principles underwent when they came to the City of New York he was reminded of the story of the woman who asked the brakeman if the train stopped at Forty-second Street, and he answered: "Well, Ma'am, if it don't you get the dumbdest bumping you ever got." Now, I have sometimes thought," added the speaker, "that the New England principles when they stopped at Forty-second Street got the 'dumbdest bumping they ever got.'

NEW ENGLAND EXPANSION.

"The contribution of the Puritans to civilization is worth considering. I have been obliged to read many of the historians of this country and found most of them were also celebrating their descent from the Pilgrim Fathers. I have read in their pages, and for a long time believed, that the history of this country was the expansion of New England. If it was the expansion of New England, it spread thin.

"The Puritans stood for the discipline of life. They did not stand for the quick pulses which have operated in some of the most momentous things that have taken place on this continent, but they stood for those lessons of duty which they read out of a Bible, interpreted in the light of a Calvinistic creed cut in a definite pattern, not allowing elasticity of interpretation and forcing men to settle in different parts of New England, because if they differed with each other, they had to go and live somewhere else and they could not continue to live with each other.

"And there is a sense in which the development of America is represented by that movement of people out of Massachusetts into that wild Cave of Adullum in Rhode Island, where all who were heretical, all who were discontented, all who were ungovernable betook themselves, and where they might find that fine effervescent mixture which is more like the rest of the country than the plain unmixed material of the places of older settlements, and those men who struggled South through the Narragansett country though the cold, forbidding woods, and made their new homes on the delightful prospects along the Bay of Narragansett, who made those places destined to have a distinction of containing the most fashionable resort in the United States—they represented that expulsive power of New England which certainly has been one of the causes of the growth of this country.

"Most of our forefathers are retro-reformers. They want to hail us back to an old chrysalis which we have broken, to have us resume a shape which we have outgrown, to take back the form of a principle which they don't think can live in a new habiliment, can prosper under new forms and conditions. It is not the forms of our lives; it is the principles of our lives. There was an old darky preacher who said, 'The Lord said unto Moses, Come forth, and he came fifth and lost the race.' Now, I think we ought to come forth, and not to come fifth and lose the race.

"I pray that the time may never come when we are not ready to do new things, when we are not ready to acknowledge that the age has changed."

GEN. MILES AND ADMIRAL BARKER

Lieut. Gen. Nelson A. Miles and Rear Admiral Barker responded to the toast "The Army and the Navy."

Gen. Miles said in part:

"Something has been said of what has been achieved during the last two or three years, and, as we sat here, the Admiral and myself, referring to matters, we were reminded of the fact that the achievement of the gallant navy, aided by the army, has changed, perhaps, for all time the map of the world. It has certainly liberated twelve millions of human beings from the oppression of a Government; it has erased the power of a Government to a certain part of the world; it has destroyed a navy, captured an army, and placed the flag of our country over twelve millions of people who were strangers to it but a short time ago.

"That work has been nobly done by the army and navy, and I trust that the lawgivers, the executives, the legislators, will have wisdom, justice, and patriotism to carry on the great work that the army and navy have left in their hands."

Admiral Barker, who spoke briefly, said, in part:

"As your President has said, the navy has spoken for itself. There is no need to add anything to what it has said. But I thank you for calling upon me at this time to respond for the navy, although very unexpectedly. There is one thing that the Senator said: 'Our conduct in the Philippines must be honest.' If I had my way I would hang a man in the Philippine Islands for being dishonest as soon as I would if he committed murder." [Applause.]

The Chairman, in conclusion, proposed a toast to "Our Sister Societies," which was given.

PILGRIMS MADE CLAM CHOWDER.

Other Historical Incidents Brought Out at the Dinner of the Pilgrim Mothers.

Valuable historical information of interest to the unnumbered descendants of the passengers of the historic Mayflower was dispensed at the Pilgrim Mothers' dinner yesterday. The dinner, which is an annual offering at the shrine of woman, was held in the Astor gallery of the Waldorf-Astoria under the auspices of the New York Legislative League, with Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, its President, presiding. There was a smaller attendance than usual, due more to present day politics than a lessening of interest in the dames who helped to make the first history of the country.

An interesting fact, brought out by the Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell, who spoke upon "Our Legacy from the Pilgrim Mothers," was that the famous New England clam chowder was a heritage from them. This is in the form of a talent, for no receipt, written or traditional, was ever known to exist. Mrs. Blackwell dwelt largely upon the need of women taking up the questions of the day and combating evils as the pilgrim mothers did physical hardships.

"The Pilgrim mothers had not the slightest idea of landing in New England," said Mrs. John Trow, who did not give the authorities for any of her historical statements, "but fate and the wind were against them, so they actually landed in Cape Cod, and officially on Plymouth Rock. They expected to land on New Jersey, and if they had, the New Jersey flats would have been drained long ago."

"Some of the spirit of the Pilgrim mothers has drained down through the years upon the women of to-day," said Mrs. Hartshorn, President of the New Jersey State Federation of Women's Clubs. "and we will drain those Jersey meadows yet."

"We need mothers in our schools," said the Rev. Phoebe Hanaford, "and where ever there is a man Superintendent there should be a woman to whom the boys and girls can go for sympathy and advice."

Family tree announcements showed that Mrs. Theodore C. Goss, a Vice President of the league, is descended from Peregrin White, the only child born on the Mayflower, "and whose mother," as Mrs. Blake interpolated, "took to herself a second husband as soon as she had landed." The Rev. Phoebe Hanaford is descended from one of the thirty-nine signers of the Mayflower contract.

Forefathers' Day Observed in Boston.

BOSTON, Dec. 22.—The Massachusetts Club celebrated Forefathers' Day this afternoon by a banquet at Young's Hotel. A pall was cast over the gathering by the death of ex-Gov. Wolcott, touching references to the loss the State and Nation had sustained in his death being made by most of the speakers. Robert O. Fuller of Cambridge, Vice President of the club, presided in the absence of the President, ex-Gov. Claflin. The guests of the club were Major Gen. O. O. Howard, United States Army, retired, who spoke on "The Soldier as a Citizen," and President Booker T. Washington of Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, who made an address on "The Event of the Nineteenth Century."

Poughkeepsie New England Society.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Dec. 22.—The Poughkeepsie New England Society observed Forefathers' Day with a banquet at the Nelson House last night. Among the speakers were Norris G. Osborn of The New Haven Register, David H. Goodell, ex-Governor of New Hampshire, and the Rev. Donald S. Mackay, D. D., pastor of the Fifth Avenue Collegiate Church, New York.

DEMOCRATIC LOVE FEAST

All Factions Meet in Harmony at the Manhattan Club.

FORMER FOES ARE FRIENDS

Club Anniversary Made the Occasion for a Political Reunion—President Truax Gives a History of the Club.

There was talk of the "New Democracy" and the "Old Democracy" in the Manhattan Club last evening. It has been many years since there has been such a genuine "love feast" as that held under the auspices of the club which Richard Croker threatened to put out of existence. It was the thirty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the club.

There was an historic touch to the gathering. The men who have been fighting each other in New York State politics, and who lined up either with Richard Croker or David B. Hill, for the time buried the hatchet. There was talk that the truce between men who have been old foes would continue for some time, and that, out of the meetings and consultations held last evening, there would come a spirit of the "true Democracy," which would brook no dictation from any "boss."

Many friends of Grover Cleveland were there. They mingled with personal friends of David B. Hill. One of the surprising little consultations of the evening was held between David B. Hill and ex-Senator Edward Murphy.

It was announced by President Truax that there would be no speeches, but that some of the guests might make "short talks." David B. Hill said at the Hoffman House that he did not expect to make a speech.

John G. Carlisle, who was Secretary of the Treasury under President Cleveland, was very much in demand among a group of friends. Controller Coler talked with men who have combated him. John D. Crimmins was made much of by many of the members. Mayor James K. McGuire of Syracuse and a large delegation of Hill Democrats from above the Harlem River were present.

The clubhouse was handsomely decorated. Holly and Christmas greens were tastefully draped over the walls on every floor. The large dining hall was a bower of greens. The tables were elaborately decorated. Wild turkeys in all their gorgeous plumage craned their necks above the tables. Banks of red roses were in front of the tables of the principal guests. Ferns were banked up in every corner of the large house.

David B. Hill was met at the door of the clubhouse by a number of friends, and he received quite an ovation as he walked about the reception rooms.

To prevent any break in the programme it was arranged that President Truax would make the only speech of the evening before supper, which was served after 10 o'clock.

THE HISTORY OF THE CLUB.

President Truax said in his speech:

"In the Spring of 1865 a number of Democrats met at the office of the late Augustus Schell for the purpose of founding a Democratic club in the City of New York, stimulated thereto by the actions of the Republicans in founding the Union League Club. Various meetings of these gentlemen were during the Spring and Summer, and early in the Fall it was determined to organize a club which would be known as the Manhattan Club.

The club was organized at a meeting held at Delmonico's, Fifth Avenue and Fourteenth Street, on the 25th of September, 1865, at which time John Van Buren was elected President, Augustus Schell Vice President, Wilson G. Hunt Treasurer, and Manton Marble Secretary.

The officers immediately went to work to find a clubhouse, and finally the Benkard House, on the southwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifteenth Street, was purchased and fitted up as a clubhouse. It was opened for the use of members on Saturday, Dec. 16, 1865.

"The first President of the club, John Van Buren, died on board the steamship Scotia on the 13th day of October, 1866, while the boat was on its way from Liverpool to New York. It would take me too long to name the prominent Democrats of the city and State who have been members of the club. I may mention, however, that Samuel J. Tilden, Horatio Seymour, Judge William F. Allen, and Stanford E. Church of the Court of Appeals have served on its Board of Governors. Two men who have filled the high office of President of the United States, and one man who was elected to the office but was prevented by the manipulations of his political opponents from holding that office, have been members of the club. Every Democratic Governor of this State, except one, and every Democratic Mayor of this city, except one, has been a member of this club, and nineteen of the twenty-two Justices of the Supreme Court in this district are members.

"From the very beginning the club was noted for its good-fellowshipand its cuisine. We, its present managers, do not think it has lost in either respect.

"I have told you that the club started at the southwest corner of Fifteenth Street and Fifth Avenue. It remained there until 1890, when, suffering from an overflow of wealth, it removed to the northwest corner of Thirty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue. Its sufferings were soon relieved, and in 1899 it removed to its present quarters. Immediately upon coming to this building the club began to prosper, and to-day, for the first time in many years, its income exceeds its expenses.

"Its constitution says that the object of the club is to advance Democratic principles, to promote social intercourse among its members, and to provide for its members the conveniences of a clubhouse, and we believe that the club is living up to its constitution.

"Ever since the organization of the Democratic party it has contained many idealists. Jefferson was an idealist. His great idea was the Declaration of Independence, his great idealism that all men were created free and equal. Monroe was an idealist. His idea was America for Americans. Now, where you have a body of men of pronounced ideas, you are likely to have men of different ideas, which means a difference of opinion, which is the case at the present time in the Democratic party. Differences have arisen in the party, but it is to be hoped that they are not of so serious a nature that they cannot be reconciled. But, whatever differences in the party have arisen, this club has never taken any part in them.

"It has been the tradition of the club from its organization that it should be the home of all Democrats, from the East, from the West, from the North, from the South, and that when they entered the doors of the Manhattan Club they left all differences behind them, and met within its walls as men having but one object—the success of the Democratic party."

CHINA JOINT NOTE SIGNED.

All the Ministers at Peking Subscribe to Its Terms.

It Has Been Transformed into a Virtua Ultimatum Owing to the Strange Blunder of Mr. Conger

PEKING, Dec. 22.—The last obstacle having been removed, the joint note was signed to-day by all the foreign Ministers, including the envoy from the Netherlands, who arrived only recently.

The note will be delivered to Li-Hung-Chang and Prince Ching, the Chinese Plenipotentiaries, as soon as the former shall have sufficiently recovered from his indisposition.

Earl Li's condition is reported to-day to be so much improved that he was able to be out of bed for a short time.

The Chinese close to Li-Hung-Chang still prefer to believe, despite the signing of the note, which they did not think would take place, that the principal negotiations must be carried on in Europe or America. They resent the British modification of the note, for, as they say, some power or powers might not be satisfied until the indemnity had been paid in full, which would mean the occupation of Peking for an indefinite time, as it cannot be expected that China can raise what would be required—possibly 1,000,000,000 taels ($720,000,000)—all at once. As a matter of fact, it will take several years.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The agreement regarding the Powers' joint note was reached only by surrender on the part of Great Britain and the United States in their fight against the word "irrevocable," which makes the projocol an ultimatum.

The loss of this point was entirely due to the blunder of Minister Conger. The word had been erased from the protocol, and the other powers had reluctantly agreed to sign without it. Minister Conger then induced them to reinsert it. After his mistake was made clear, the British and American Governments attempted to have the word again stricken out. The other envoys at Peking, however, refused to again strike out the word after it had been inserted at the request of the American Minister. It is possible that they might in time have been compelled to do so, but Minister Conger reported to his Government that to protract the dispute would be dangerous, and that if the two Governments insisted on again amending the protocol the other powers would reopen the whole subject and the protocol might be amended in ways that would be still more objectionable to Great Britain and America.

In plainer words, it was necessary to stand by Mr. Conger's blunder for fear that a worse situation would arise. That the State Department was not alone in this conclusion is shown by the fact that Great Britain was of the same opinion. The two Governments therefore decided, and the joint note was transformed into an ultimatum.

As more facts come to light about the blunder which may have such momentous effects on the fate of China, Mr. Conger's proceedings become more and more inexplicable. Officials conversant with the correspondence say that the dispatch about which the blunder was made was not the first he had received on the subject, nor was it an important one. Long and full dispatches had been sent to him, explaining fully the attitude of the United States toward the ultimatum question, and going fully into the reasons why the United States did not wish an ultimatum made but. Mr. Conger, therefore, was fully aware of the State Department's policy and wishes, and he had, with reluctance, carried out that policy and had extorted from the other powers a consent that the word "irrevocable" be stricken out. It was done, and the protocol was sent to the various foreign offices for instructions. When the State Department had scrutinized it and found that the word "irrevocable" was not in it a cipher dispatch was sent to Conger saying, "sign as transmitted."

The figure 4, when followed by certain other symbols, represents in the cipher the word "transmitted." In transmission through the cable, this 4 became a 6, and it so happens that the combination of the figure 6 with the other symbols makes the word "majorities." Mr. Conger, therefore, found his dispatch to contain the nonsensical sentence, "Sign as majorities." This made no sense, because there were no "majorities." There had been a majority, but there was now neither majority nor minority, all the envoys having agreed on a protocol which was now in their respective foreign offices. Some officials say that even if the word had been "majorities," and if that word had made the sentence as clear as daylight, instead of still leaving it obscure, this sudden and incomprehensible reversal of policy after victory had been won should have aroused the suspicions of a capable envoy and induced him to wire to the State Department, asking if the dispatch was corect.

As it was, Mr. Conger chose to interpret the meaningless sentence, "sign as majorities," into a direction to him to reopen the subject, get all the envoys to insert the word which the State Department had been fighting to exclude, and turn the protocol into an ultimatum.

The simple truth is that there is hardly any confidence in Mr. Conger's good faith in this matter. It is pointed out as a curious coincidence that the meaning which he affected to see in the meaningless dispatch was exactly what he has always wanted.

A question which has been frequently asked since Mr. Conger's remarkable blunder became known is what Special Commissioner W. W. Rockhill was doing while this was going on. The fact is, that Mr. Rockhill was not taken into Mr. Conger's confidence. It is said that Mr. Rockhill has been reduced to a position of practical impotency in Peking. Mr. Conger has refused to listen to his advice, and the Commissioner has had nothing to do except to report to his Government such scraps of information as Mr. Conger let him get or as he could get without Mr. Conger's permission. It is not doubted that if Mr. Rockhill had obtained any intimation of the state of things, he would have earnestly advised Mr. Conger to telegraph the State Department for an explanation of the "majorities" dispatch.

FULL TEXT OF THE NOTE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The State Department to-day made public the text of the joint note of the powers to China. The official statement follows:

"Department of State,
"Washington, Dec. 22.

"The following English version is understood to be in substantial equivalence with the French text of the note to be addressed to the Government of China, as agreed upon by the representatives of the co-operating powers at Peking, Dec. 4, 1900, and subsequently amended before signature:

"During the months of May, June, July, and August, of the current year, serious disturbances broke out in the northern provinces of China, in which atrocious crimes unparalleled in history, and outrages against the law of nations, against the laws of humanity, and against civilization were committed under particularly odious circumstances. The principal of these crimes were the following:

"First. On the 20th of June, his Excellency Baron von Ketteler, while on his way to the Tsung-li-Yamen, in the performance of his official functions, was murdered by soldiers of the regular army, acting under orders of their chiefs.

"Second. On the same day the foreign legations were attacked and besieged. The attacks continued without intermission until the 14th of August, on which date the arrival of the foreign forces put an end to them. These attacks were made by the regular troops, who joined the Boxers, and who obeyed the orders of the Court emanating from the imperial palace. At the same time the Chinese Government officially declared, by its representatives abroad, that it guaranteed the security of the legations.

"Third. On the 11th of June Mr. Sugiyama, Chancellor of the Legation of Japan, while in the discharge of an official mission, was killed by regulars at the gates of the city. In Peking and in several provinces foreigners were murdered, tortured, or attacked by the Boxers and the regular troops, and such as escaped death owed their salvation solely to their own determined resistance. Their establishments were looted and destroyed.

"Fourth. Foreign cemeteries, at Peking especially, were desecrated, the graves opened, and the remains scattered abroad.

"These occurrences necessarily led the foreign powers to dispatch their troops to China to the end of protecting the lives of their representatives and nationals and restoring order. During their march to Peking the allied forces met with resistance from the Chinese army and had to overcome it by force.

"Inasmuch as China has recognized her responsibility, expressed regret, and evinced a desire to see an end put to the situation created by the aforesaid disturbances, the powers have determined to accede to her request upon the irrevocable conditions enumerated below, which they deem indispensable to expiate the crimes committed and to prevent their recurrence.

I.

"A.—The dispatch to Berlin of an extraordinary mission headed by an imperial Prince, in order to express the regrets of his Majesty the Emperor of China and of the Chinese Government for the assassination of his Excellency the late Baron von Ketteler, Minister of Germany.

"B.—The erection on the spot of the assassination of a commemorative monument, befitting the rank of the deceased, bearing an inscription in the Latin, German, and Chinese languages, expressing the regrets of the Emperor of China for the murder.

II.

"A.—The severest punishment for the persons designated in the imperial decree of Sept. 25, 1900, and for those whom the representatives of the powers shall subsequently designate.

"B.—The suspension for five years of all official examinations in all the cities where foreigners have been massacred or have been subjected to cruel treatment.

III.

"Honorable reparation to be made by the Chinese Government to the Japanese Government for the murder of Mr. Sugiyama.

IV.

"An expiatory monument to be erected by the Imperial Chinese Government in every foreign or international cemetery which has been desecrated or in which the graves have been destroyed.

V.

"The maintenance, under conditions to be determined by the powers, of the interdiction against the importation of arms as well as of materials employed exclusively for the manufacture of arms and ammunition.

VI.

"Equitable indemnities for the Governments, societies, companies, and individuals, as well as for Chinese who, during the late occurrences, have suffered in person or in property in consequence of their being in the service of foreigners. China to adopt financial measures acceptable to the powers for the purpose of guaranteeing the payment of the said indemnities and the interest and amortization of the loans.

VII.

"The right for each power to maintain a permanent guard for its legation and to put the diplomatic quarter in a defensible condition, the Chinese having no right to reside in that quarter.

VIII.

"The destruction of the forts which might obstruct free communication between Peking and the sea.

IX.

"The right to the military occupation of certain points to be determined by an understanding among the powers, in order to maintain open communication between the capital and the sea.

X.

"The Chinese Government to cause to be published during two years in all the subprefectures an imperial decree—

"(A) Embodying a perpetual prohibition under penalty of death of membership in any anti-foreign society.

"(B) Enumerating the punishments that shall have been inflicted on the guilty, together with the suspension of all official examinations in the cities where foreigners have been murdered or have been subjected to cruel treatment; and,

"(C) Furthermore, an imperial decree to be issued and published throughout the empire ordering that the Governors General (Viceroys,) Governors, and all provincial or local officials shall be held responsible for the maintenance of order within their respective jurisdiction, and that in the event of renewed anti-foreign disturbances or any other infractions of treaty occurring and which shall not forthwith be suppressed and the guilty persons punished, they, the said officials, shall be immediately removed and forever disqualified from holding any office or honors.

XI.

"The Chinese Government to undertake to negotiate amendments to the treaties of commerce and navigation considered useful by the foreign powers and upon other matters pertaining to their commercial relations, with the object of facilitating them.

XII.

"The Chinese Government to determine in what manner to reform the Department of Foreign Affairs, and to modify the Court ceremonials concerning the reception of foreign representatives, in the manner to be indicated by the powers.

"Until the Chinese Government has complied with the above conditions to the satisfaction of the powers, the undersigned can hold out no expectation that the occupation of Peking and the Province of Pe-chi-Li by the general forces can be brought to a conclusion."

MONOCACY'S GOOD SERVICE.

Vessel Which Has Proved So Useful in China Was Twenty-eight Years Stuck in Yang-tse Mud.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Nobody who has read the dispatches about the troubles in China within the last few months can fail to be aware that the United States ship Monocacy has taken a very large share indeed of the work that fell to the naval branch of the allied services. She seems to have been here, there, and everywhere. She has been used as a dispatch boat, a gunboat to terrify river pirates, and in other ways too numerous to mention.

But how many of those who have been reading of the recent exploits of the Monocacy are aware that until last July she had been for twenty-eight years stuck in the mud of the Yang-tse-Kiang? Such was, however, the case. The Monocacy was in Asiatic waters in 1872, and fell a victim to the tortuous and uncharted shoals of the great river. She was abandoned by her commander and crew, and the Navy Department let her stay where she was. Even at that remote period—remote, that is, so far as the building of warships goes—the Monocacy was out of date. She was built at the time of the civil war for blockade service, and is a side-wheeler with thirteen guns, until recently as ancient in type as the vessel herself.

When the trouble began in Chicago the Navy Department officials at Washington decided that the vessel might come in very handy. Inquiries were made, and it was found that the Monocacy was still where she had stuck, and apparently uninjured. If her mishap had occurred anywhere but in China the natives would have broken her up and sold her for junk long ago, but the Chinese—perhaps supposing that she possessed some supernatural characteristics—let her severely alone.

Orders were sent to China to pull the vessel out of the mud if possible, and the task was found a good deal more easy than was expected. She was taken off the mud, fitted up with platforms fore and aft, and six rapid-firers mounted on the platforms. Her old muzzle-loaders were also "converted."

Thus restored to usefulness the Monocacy began to prove highly efficient for the purposes desired. Her light draught enables her to penetrate further inland than any other gunboat now in the Far East. When the European Captains and Admirals, with their brand-new cruisers, arrived in China and saw the ancient side-wheeler they sniffed contemptuously, and said many sarcastic thiogs about the United States Navy, but that has not prevented them from making use of the Monocacy when their own magnificent vessels could not proceed to points the much-abused side-wheeler was able to reach.

An inquiry addressed to the Navy Department has elicited the information that the Monocacy is never coming home. "Investigation," the officials say, "has proved her to be unreliable for deep-sea navigation." But there is no reason why she should not be of the greatest service for many years in the kind of duty for which she has recently been proving herself so efficient.

The Monocacy was named after the old Monocacy, which became celebrated in the War of 1812.

American Civilian Dies at Peking.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Gen. Chaffee has reported to the War Department that Charles L. Solomon, civilian employe of the Quartermaster's Department, died at Peking from pneumonia to-day.

Dominion Stock for Trust Funds.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Dec. 22.—A cablegram received at the Department of Finance states that official notice has been given in London of the admission of Dominion Inscribed stock to the list of securities in which trust funds may be invested. This is a consummation of the arrangement between the imperial and Canadian Governments that was announced by Mr. Fielding at the last session of Parliament.

COMMISSIONER PECK HOME FROM PARIS

Talks of This Country's Great Display at the Exposition.

Has Strengthened Relations with Foreign Countries, He Says—Praise for New York Times Paris Edition.

Ferdinand W. Peck, Commissioner General of the United States to the Paris Exposition, arrived home on the American liner St. Louis yesterday. He was enthusiastic in his praise of the exposition in general and of the part taken by this country in the fair in particular.

"The exposition was grand," he said, "and surpassed all my expectations. A greater number of nations took part than in any international exposition heretofore, and in the matter of exhibits, both in quantity and quality, it has never been equaled. The World's Fair at Chicago in 1893, however, was superior to it so far as architecture and grouping are concerned.

"It was admitted on all sides that the display of America was the most prominent of any of the foreign countries. Next to France, we occupied the greatest area, had more exhibitors, and erected more buildings than any other nation. Notwithstanding all this and considering the distance across the sea, and the greater extent of the territory from which the exhibits were collected, the United States has expended less than any other of the great nations. The total expenditure varied little from that of Russia and Germany. A much larger number of awards were allotted to Americans than to the exhibitors of any other nation outside of France, thus showing the quality of their exhibits. We also feel that the commercial interests of the country have been greatly enhanced, our export trade increased, and our relations with foreign countries strengtnened by the position we occupied at the Paris fair.

"There is much work yet to be done in connection with the closing up of the vast details, and the settlements to be made on both sides of the water. This work has been left in the hands of Major Brackett, the disbursing officer. There are many matters to be adjusted and disposed of in this country besides the preparing of the final report which is to be submitted to Congress. This report will be very extensive, and I hope that it will be of practical value for future occasions. We hope to have it presented with greater promptness than has been the case heretofore.

"The commission received every courtesy and consideration from the French Government and the representatives of other nations. They manifested at all times the fact that they recognized the greatness of America."

Mr. Peck was asked if there was any truth in the rumor of a quarrel between Mrs. Potter Palmer and Mrs. Daniel Manning, and also concerning the report that he had prevented Mrs. Potter Palmer from receiving the decoration of the Legion of Honor.

"There is no truth in the rumor of a difference between Mrs. Palmer and Mrs. Manning," he replied, "and as for my preventing Mrs. Palmer from securing the decoration of the Legion, I did nothing of the kind. I did everything in my power to get it for her until she wrote me to withdraw her name."

The Commissioner General was then asked about certain Americans being dissatisfied because they were unable to get invitations to various functions during the exposition.

"I am sure," he answered, "that there was no hard feeling because of any such condition. We did all we could for every one. First we looked after the National Commissioners, then the State officials, and then the prominent Americans. We did receive a great many requests which we found it impossible to comply with, but every one understood the situation and acted accordingly."

Mr. Peck was next asked if some of his bills had not been turned down in Washington. "There were no important bills that were not audited," he replied. He admitted, however, that he had paid some of the bills out of his own pocket.

Mr. Peck was most enthusiastic in his praise of the Paris edition of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

"I considered it one of the most splendid undertakings conceived by Americans," he said. "It was the best of the live exhibits in the American department. Nothing reflected more credit on our country. The whole country owes a debt of gratitude to the publishers of THE NEW YORK TIMES for presenting such a splendid example of American journalism to Europeans. As I have said, it was the greatest of our live exhibits, and its importance cannot be overestimated."

VIEWS OF MR. CAPEHART.

Method of Awarding Prizes at the Exposition Was Eminently Fair.

A. S. Capehart, who was Director for the United States of the Department of Arts and Sciences at the Paris Exposition, was an arrival on the St. Louis yesterday. Speaking last night of the exposition and its results, Mr. Capehart said it was undoubtedly the greatest aggregation of individual exhibits ever shown, but that it was not the greatest expesition ever held.

"That distinction," said Mr. Capehart, "still rests with the Chicago World's Fair."

Mr. Capehart said he was much impressed with the French method of awarding prizes, which, although criticised by some, was eminently fair, because the French members of the juries were men peculiarly fitted through education and experience for the particular department of which they were judges. In view of the fact that France had two-thirds of the members of the various juries it was particularly gratifying that the United States exhibits had secured such a high number of awards. As the department represented by Mr. Capehart France had sixteen, the rest of Europe six, and the United States two representatives on the jury.

"Naturally they are not over-anxious," said Mr. Capehart, "to acknowledge the growing superiority of the United States, especially in the industries, and they must have overcome considerable of their pride to give so many prizes, which is, of course, to their credit.

"What do I consider the greatest individual effort of the United States exhibitors? Why, the daily publication of THE NEW YORK TIMES. Hampered by many disadvantages, THE TIMES never missed a single issue, which is a feat nothing short of a wonder, and which has never before been accomplished at any other exposition. That it was thoroughly appreciated is demonstrated by the general regret that it could not be made a permanent fixture."

In these sentiments Charles H. Simms, who was Assistant Director in charge of the Publishers' Department, and who also arrived yesterday, enthusiastically concurred.

MR. WOODWARD'S ACCIDENT.

Assistant Commissioner General Broke His Ankle on the St. Louis.

Assistant Commissioner General Woodward returned on the steamship St. Louis from Paris yesterday with a broken ankle. He met with the accident on the second day of the voyage.

"I was walking on the deck, which was wet and slippery, and fell," said he; "I am a heavy man, and as I fell I heard the bone crack. Dr. Parker, the ship's surgeon, who set my leg, is a very skillful man, and I suffered little."

When the St. Louis arrived in quarantine a telegram was sent for an ambulance to meet the vessel at her pier. It conveyed Mr. Woodward to his home, at 462 West Twenty-second Street.

WORCESTER STEEL WORKS SOLD

Ellsworth I. Chapman of This City Acquires the Property.

WORCESTER, Mass., Dec. 22.—The sale of the Worcester Steel Works was finally consummated to-day at auction.

The price paid was $7,200, in addition to incumbrances, making the total cost to the new owners about $130,000. John W. Worten of New York bought the property for Ellsworth I. Chapman of New York, who is supposed to be in control of the Queen City Construction Company.

George A. Lamb, attorney for Chapman, says that a part of the land will be leased to parties who will build an immense storage warehouse. The part of the plant formerly occupied by the Worcester Cycle Manufacturing Company will be leased by the Steam Vehicle Company of America, with factories at Reading, Penn., and offices in New York, for the manufacture of automobiles.

COUNT VON BLUMENTHAL DEAD.

Was Considered as Second Only to Von Moltke as a General and Tactician.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—Count von Blumenthal, the oldest Field Marshal in the German Army, died last evening on his estate at Quellendorf, Duchy of Anhalt.

Field Marshal Leonard, Count von Blumenthal, ex-Chief of the General Staff of the Prussian Army, had, on account of his great age, dropped almost completely out of public notice in recent years, but it was not so long ago that he was regarded as second only to von Moltke in his abilities as a General and tactician. Born in 1810 at Schweidt, on the Oder, he was a soldier from childhood. He was educated at the Military Academies of Culm and Berlin, and in 1827 became a Second Lieutenant in the Guard Landwehr Regiment. He afterward attended the General Military School in Berlin, and was from 1837 to 1845 Adjutant of the Coblenz Landwehr Battalion.

During the next few years von Blumenthal completed his military education in the Artillery Guards and the Pioneer Guards. In 1849 he was transferred as Captain to the General Staff, being at that time regarded as one of the ablest of the younger officers of the army.

Von Blumenthal greatly distinguished himself in the Schleswig-Holstein campaign, taking so conspicuous a part in the siege and battle of Fredericia that he was promoted to be Chief of the General Staff of the Schleswig-Holstein army. In the following year (1850) he was named as General Staff officer of the Mobile Division under Gen. von Tietzen in the Electorate of Hesse. After a mission to England he was again advanced in rank, and his mastery of foreign tongues led to his being sent on other semi-diplomatic missions. In 1859 he became personal Adjutant of Prince Frederic Charles.

It was, however, in the war with Denmark that von Blumenthal gained his great reputation. At the time hostilities began he was Chief of the Staff of the Third Army Corps, and on Dec. 15, 1863, he was named Chief of the General Staff of the combined Mobile Army Corps in the campaign against Denmark. His part in the campaign—especially in the storming of the trenches at Düppel and the passage of the Island of Alsen—was so brilliant that on June 25, 1864, he was promoted to the rank of Major General and was otherwise honored.

In the Austrian war of 1866 von Blumenthal was Chief of the General Staff of the Second Army of the Crown Prince, and for his great services received the Oak Leaf of the Order Pour le Mérite and the star of Knight Commander of the Order of the House of Hohenzollern.

At the outbreak of the Franco-German war von Blumenthal was appointed Chief of the General Staff under the Crown Prince, and the latter, when the Kaiser presented the Iron Cross to him, declared that his Chief of Staff ought to receive the same distinction.

In 1888 Gen. von Blumenthal was made a Field Marshal. Five years previously the title of Count had been conferred upon him.

STRIKE RIOTS AT ANTWERP.

Mobs Charged by the Police and a Number of Men Wounded.

ANTWERP, Dec. 22.—The striking dock men became more defiant to-day, and their attitude resulted in several conflicts with the police, one of which was serious. During the morning groups of strikers interfered with the men who were coming from the provinces to take their places, and in several instances the new men were maltreated.

This afternoon when an attempt was made to resume operations at the Ockerill Wharf 2,000 strikers attempted to prevent the resumption. The strikers were dispersed by the police with drawn sabres, and, under police protection, work was begun by the foreign hands. Later the strikers menaced men who were working upon the steamer Maz and threatened them with death. The workmen were put to flight.

The most serious outbreak of the day later occurred at the same wharf, where the strikers reassembled and were charged by the police with drawn sabres. The officers used their revolvers also, and it is stated that thirty men were wounded, ten of them seriously. Many arrests were made.

The strikers tried to prevent the loading of three steamers at the Old Basin, and were engaged by the police. Some were wounded, and the rioters were dispersed upon the arrival of police reinforcements.

To-night the docks are quiet. It is said that the agitators have decided not to make any manifestation to-morrow, desiring to respect the entrance into the city of Prince and Princess Albert of Belgium. The Burgomaster has taken strong police precautions to prevent an outbreak.

Strike at Genoa Serious.

ROME, Dec. 22.—The strike at Genoa begins to look grave. The strikers have declined the propositions made to them, and have decided to continue the strike. Troops have been sent for. Vessels are unable to leave port, and it is feared the electricians and gasmen will join in the movement, leaving the city in darkness.

Multiplex Wireless Telegraphy.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—Prof. Slaby of the Technische Hochschule lectured to-night in the presence of Emperor William upon his system of multiplex wireless telegraphy, and made experiments, showing the reception of messages from Charlottenburg, two miles west, and Schoenweide, eight miles east, of Berlin, simultaneously. These messages were caught on the same lightning rod. Prof. Slaby stated that the same receiving wire would serve for an indefinite number of messages coming simultaneously, while excluding all electric currents that were not wanted.

The St. Petersburg Temperance Work.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 22.—The St. Petersburg committee engaged in a warfare against intemperance publishes statistics showing that 2,283,000 persons visited its fêtes and entertainments in 1899, which was three times as many as in 1898. It is believed that the figures for the closing year will show a corresponding increase. The committee expended 784,000 rubles, of which 202,000 rubles came back in the form of entrance fees and sales.

Too Many Physicians in Germany.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—Emperor William's decree lengthening medical study as a remedy for the overproduction of physicians meets with the approval of the profession. In connection therewith official statistics published this week exhibit the overcrowding of the medical profession in the large cities. Berlin has one physician to every 798 of population, Breslau one to every 775, Halle one to every 735, and Koenigsberg one to every 681.

Danish Crown Prince Blamed.

COPENHAGEN, Dec. 22.—A great sensation has been caused throughout Denmark by an article in the Government organ, Berlingske Tidende, written by the Crown Prince Frederic, defending the Prime Minister, H. de Scheatsted, from the attacks of Count Frije. The action of the Crown Prince in mixing in party politics has made a bad impression.

BERLIN'S CAUSES CELEBRES.

End of Sternberg Trial and the Arrest of Bankers Monopolize Public Interest.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—Public attention was occupied almost wholly this week with crimes in high places. The sentence imposed on Sternberg, the millionaire banker—two and a half years' imprisonment and five years' deprivation of civil rights—for crimes against morality, satisfies the public conscience.

Sternberg rapidly acquired a fortune estimated at eighteen millions, and maintained social relations with high officials and military men for years, while disguising his loathsome crimes in the lowest Berlin life. He was related by marriage with high officers, and gave freely for charitable purposes. It was said in his defense before the court that he had made a will leaving to the Prussian Government the bulk of his fortune to establish an institution for insuring laborers against loss of work.

The Sternberg case is working widespread ruin among others. The death of von Meerscheidt Huellessen, the suspended Chief of the Criminal Department, announced at the same hour as Sternberg's sentence, had a peculiarly tragical effect. The public instantly assumed that he had committed suicide; but the physicians certify that he died from apoplexy. Huellessen established a reputation by introducing the Bertillon system in Germany.

The case of Sternberg will long continue to occupy the public mind. It is expected that Sternberg will appeal again to a higher court. Furthermore, numerous prosecutions of persons connected with the case are pending. A number of witnesses will be tried for perjury, and three lawyers are under investigation for alleged unprofessional conduct for collusion to circumvent justice. The public demand for reform of the criminal police, which did not yield fruit in 1897 in connection with the von Tausch case, has now grown imperative.

The Ministerial Berliner Korrespondenz prints the projected plan of reform of the criminal police advanced by Baron von Rheinbaben, Prussian Minister of the Interior. According to this plan all officers of the Secret Service shall be examined regarding their manner of life, their debts, and their associations, and these examinations will be repeated at stated periods. A special assistant will be appointed to keep a watch over the morals of the officers. A general advance in salaries will be made.

The Berliner Tageblatt says that Sternberg will be tried a second time for similar offenses through other intermediaries, one of whom has already been arrested.

The other great case this week, the arrest of bankers, attracts an immense amount of attention. The press is pointing out the resemblance to the Sternberg affair, since wealthy bankers, moving in the highest society, have carried on fraudulent practices for years. The alleged chief offender, Sanden, has had a reputation for the greatest piety. He had a private chapel in a luxurious villa at Potsdam. His home was the centre of the highest military and aristocratic society. He was Potsdam's wealthiest citizen, paying 50,000 marks yearly in taxes. It is said that Sanden's business practices were most questionable—that he would compel borrowers at the bank to buy his lots at fancy prices.

The losses will fall heavily on small investors. The fall in the shares of the two banks already represents about 175,000,000 marks. It is considered certain that the arrested Directors will get long terms of imprisonment for falsifying the balance sheets.

A committee of holders of obligations of the Grundschuld Bank has published the results of its examination, showing that the capital of the bank has been entirely lost, but that 60,000,000 of the 98,000,000 marks of obligations are secured by mortgages.

THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Hears Testimony on the Glass Trust—Head of Midvale Company Talks of Combinations.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 22.—The Industrial Commission to-day heard testimony regarding the plate-glass industry by John Pitcairn, President of the Pittsburg Plate Glass Company. Mr. Pitcairn said the annual production by the consolidated companies was about 20,000,000 feet.

Mr. Pitcairn asserted that a combination was necessary because of the failure of several individual factories. Numerous plants had been established in Pittsburg and were operating at a loss, several of them being sold by the Sheriff. It was decided that consolidation was necessary to protect the manufacturer, and this was accomplished with an actual capital of $10,000,000. Branches were established in all large cities, but it was later found that the sale of plate glass alone was not sufficient to support these branches. Then it was decided by the Pittsburg Plate Glass Company to enter the jobbing business. The amount employed in jobbing, Mr. Pitcairn said, was about $4,044,000.

Mr. Pitcairn said the profits of the company averaged 9½ per cent. No dividends were paid until January, 1899, when a 4 per cent. dividend was declared. This year the dividend is 6 per cent. Previous to 1899 the profits were used to pay expenses.

Charles J. Harrah, head of the Midvale Steel Company, at the afternoon session, said he believed that both labor organizations and combinations of capital were beneficial if they were conducted properly. A strong labor organization, guided by intelligent men, he said, is of decided advantage to the manufacturer.

Mr. Harrah answered Mr. Cramp's statement of yesterday concerning the enormous cost of the manufacture of armor plate. The profit on gun forgings and armor plate, witness said, is small, when the risk involved are considered. The profit of 22 per cent. on armor plate appears great, he said, but when its acceptance or rejection depends upon two shots, as is the case, it is small, for when armor plate is rejected the material is lost.

Continuing, Mr. Harrah spoke of the encouragement given foreign manufacturers by their Governments. He said the conditions here are something of a hardship to the producer. The United States Government will not change the specifications which are severe, and heavy penalties are exacted. A question as to combinations of capital brought forth a statement from the witness concerning the reported Cramp-Vickers' Sons and Maxim-Midvale Company negotiations. Mr. Harrah said:

"No one to-day has an option on Midvale, nor has any one an option on the controlling interest of Midvale. I would state further that when I was in London last Summer Albert Vickers told me positively that neither he nor his company had any intention of coming here to establish a plant to do any business beyond that which they could do for the Government."

Referring to large combinations of capital Mr. Harrah said they are beneficial in the matter of credit with foreign countries. "If you want to do business abroad," he declared, "you must give long credits." In this connection he said the system of international banks is a certainty of the near future, whether the Government interests itself or not.

Asked as to tariff conditions Mr. Harrah said: "Let the tariff alone."

Speaking of foreign trade, he gave it as his opinion that the Consular Service should be improved. The various Consuls, he said, should be familiar with the conditions existing at the points to which they are assigned. The Consular profession is a technical one, and a Consul should be appointed for life. The changes in the Administration are harmful.

The commission adjourned to meet in Washington Jan. 8.

TO BUY BOSTON ICE COMPANIES.

It Is Reported the Trust Is Negotiating for Several.

BOSTON, Dec. 22.—The Transcript to-day says: "It is stated on the best of authority that negotiations are about completed whereby the American Ice Company is to acquire the business of the Bay State Ice Company of this city and that the deal will be consummated the first of the week. Officials of the company who were seen to-day, while admitting the truth of the report, said they could not as yet give out the particulars of the transaction:

"This outcome of the efforts of the New York company to control the ice business hereabouts, the first step in which was the purchase of the Boston Ice Company, as announced last week, was expected. Treasurer Charles Russell, who practically controls the Bay State Company, is a large owner of American Company's stock. This was acquired through the sale of his Kennebec River plants to the trust.

"The Bay State Company, like the Boston Company, is a Massachusetts corporation, with fixed capital of $52,000. J. H. Chapman is President and Charles Russell Treasurer. It is stated that the Ice Trust has secured options on two other concerns, Pop & Turner of Milton and Abbott & Co. of Dorchester, which would indicate that its operations are not to be confined entirely to this city.

"The purchase of the Bay State Company leaves but one independent corporation doing an ice business in the city proper—the Independent Ice Company. This company, besides its retail trade, does a large wholesale business in supplying the fishing fleet as well as the large fish concerns along the water front with ice. It was stated to-day that overt

ELEVATOR DROPS IN A DEPARTMENT STORE

Accident Causes a Panic in a Paterson Establishment.

Weights Crash Through Fallen Car—Two Persons Killed, Five Others Injured, One Critically.

PATERSON, N. J., Dec. 22.—The elevator in the Paterson Department Store in the city dropped from the first floor to the basement late this afternoon. The heavy weights used to balance the car fell from the top floor and crashed through the roof of the car. There were seven passengers in the elevator and all were thrown down by the shock, and as they were lying on the floor the heavy pieces of iron fell on them. Two persons were instantly killed and three badly injured. The elevator boy and the other passengers escaped with a few slight cuts.

The killed were L. A. Anderson, aged fifty years, of East Twenty-ninth Street, and Mrs. Ella McNally, aged sixty years, of 251 Straight Street. The injured passengers were Mrs. Frank Holland of 904 Main Street and Mr. and Mrs. John D. Slagland of 197 Water Street. Anderson had charge of the clock department and had just been relieved. His scalp was torn off, both legs were broken, and his right thigh crushed. Mrs. McNally's skull was fractured. Mrs. Holland, who was removed to her home in a critical condition, is suffering from a broken leg and internal injuries. Mr. Slagland's arm was broken and his wife received several bad bruises. John Zevenberger, the elevator boy, Mrs. McNally's daughter, and an unknown woman were slightly cut about the face and hands.

The store was crowded with holiday shoppers at the time of the accident. The elevator had stopped, and the passengers were getting off when it suddenly dropped to the basement. The falling of the car created a panic, and a wild rush was made for the doors. A moment later there was a second crash. This was caused by the three weights falling down the shaft. The seven passengers and the elevator boy had been thrown in a heap, when the car struck the basement floor. They were stunned by the shock, and before they could move the weights, each weighing 100 pounds, crashed upon Mrs. McNally, Mrs. Holland, and Anderson, who were lying over the others.

Assistance was quickly summoned and the passengers were carried out of the wrecked car. Mrs. Holland was unconscious. She was quickly removed to her home. Mrs. McNally and Anderson, the physicians said, had been killed instantly.

The cause of the accident has not yet been accurately determined. It is supposed that the cable slipped, letting the elevator drop, and that the shock threw the weights out of the grooves.

BREWERY ELEVATOR KILLS MAN

Two Employes Try to Jump Out and Are Caught Between Car and Ceiling.

Patrick Mulligan, living in East Thirty-seventh Street, was crushed and so badly injured by an ascending elevator in the Salvator Brewing Company's building at 400 Cherry Street yesterday afternoon that he died an hour later at the Gouverneur Hospital. With Mulligan was Patrick Raddigan of 429 Warren Street, Brooklyn. He was badly injured about the hips and side, but will recover. He is at the Gouverneur Hospital.

Just how the accident happened is not known, as the men were alone on the elevator. They were taking empty casks to the top of the building. The two men got on and started the car. It is large and run by steam. The men did not understand how to control it, and when its speed became such as to frighten them they attempted to jump off over the gate inclosing the opening to the floors through which the elevator passes. The car was ascending swiftly and the men could not jump off. Seeing ending to escape being caught between the floor of the elevator and the ceiling of the floor above. They were held fast between the edge of the car and the ceiling. Both cried for help, and other employes in the building at once hurried to their assistance. The elevator was pulled back and the two taken from their perilous position.

EARL WOULD SUCCEED ROSS.

Yarmouth Seeks Engagement with the Weber & Fields Company.

There was much behind-the-curtain gossip at Weber & Fields's last night. Fritz Williams, who went there the other day to take the part left without a player by the resignation of Charles Ross, announced that he must go back on Monday to join the Frohman forces in "Self and Lady." Who was to replace him was the subject of talk.

The management had little time, so they went to work calling up various eligible people on the telephone, with the result that at midnight they were as much at sea as early in the evening. Meantime the Earl of Yarmouth heard that there was a vacancy in the music hall cast, and hastened thither to see if he could not get the engagement. Up to a late hour he had not succeeded in his quest, and it is certain that he will not do so at all.

Among those who were in communication with the stage manager were Paul Arthur and Ferdinand Gottschalk. Mr. Arthur will not take the part because he wants to go back to England soon. Mr. Gottschalk may be engaged. In the interval De Wolf Hopper is to say the lines, which he can do by making a quick change of make-up and costume, it happening that he and the character assigned to Mr. Williams never come on the stage at exactly the same time.

The performance last night was attended by another difficulty besides the gossip. For Mr. Fields received a telegram from his out-of-town home that his little son was stricken with scarlet fever. From the arrival of the message till the end of the show he was continually wiring and 'phoning for more news of the child, being so upset all the time that there was a perceptible nervousness in his rendition of the funny part he takes.

Added to all this confusion, there came in a story of what had happened to Charles Ross when he went to a rehearsal of his new piece at the New York Theatre night before last. It seems that he remained behind after his own lines were said, desirous of watching the rest of the players. He took a seat in the orchestra, far back in a dimly lit corner, where he was practically invisible from both the stage and the door. The rehearsal was finished. Mr. Ross was asleep. The rehearsers went their ways, ignorant that he was anywhere about.

At 5 o'clock yesterday morning he awoke. The orchestra chair had been comfortable. Half an hour later, after he had pounded madly on the door for at least a hundred times, the attention of some passer-by was attracted, and he found himself at liberty.

THE OPERA SEASON.

"Romeo et Juliette" and "Aida" at the Metropolitan.

At the Metropolitan Opera House yesterday the first week of the season of opera in foreign languages came to a close with the usual two performances. In the afternoon Gounod's "Romeo et Juliette" was repeated with the principal singers who were heard in it on the opening night of the season. Mme. Melba as Juliette was not in perfect voice, and was obliged to spare herself when it was possible to do so, but her skill in the art of tone placing enabled her to sing with good effect in the important episodes. M. Saleza was also a little out of his best form, and at times sang off the key, but his performance as a whole again commanded admiration. M. Gilibert, a French baritone, with a light voice, replaced M. Plancon as Capulet. Especial mention is due Miss Carrie Bridewell for her work as Stephane, the page. She sang the solo in the exile scene with a plenitude of rich tone and with a pretty style. This young woman has a future, if she be ambitious and faithful in her work. The matinée audience was only fair in size.

Last night the opera was Verdi's "Aida," which was sung to a disheartening array of empty chairs. The performance served to introduce several new-comers. Miss Susan Strong was to have sung the title rôle, but owing to her illness Miss Minnie Tracey, lately a member of the English company, sang the part. Her performance was commendable, but by no means striking. M. Imbart de la Tour, the Radames, proved to be a French tenor of a type familiar, but not usually popular here. He displayed a voice of good quality and sufficient body, quite despoiled of its rightful effect by a very vicious method. M. de la Tour is one of those gentlemen who place their tones as far back as possible, and tauten the muscles of the throat, producing the quality known to some as white, and to others as throaty. This quality of tone is not beautiful, and it cannot touch the heart of the musical hearer; it assaults only his nerves. It might seem charitable to wait till M. de la Tour sings again before saying so much about him; but his method is fundamentally bad, not the result of any temporary cause. At least, he may be praised for singing in tune. As an actor he proved to be conventional and without individuality. His high tones won him some applause.

The Amneris was Mme. Louise Homer, another new member of the company. This lady disclosed a rather hard voice of plentiful volume and sufficient compass. Her tones were not as steady as might have been desired, yet the vibrato was not sufficient to injure her intonation. She sang in tune and with generally good judgment in her phrasing. She did not seem to be gifted with much temperament, but possibly the lack of mellowness in her voice may have been accountable for this impression. M. Journet, a new basso, made his début as Ramfis, the high priest. This singer made known a voice of excellent quality, smooth, sonorous, extensive, and well placed. His singing was not impressive in style, but in conventional bass parts he should prove to be a useful member of the company.

Mr. Scotti reappeared as Amonasro. He was in fine voice, and sang and acted with his usual fire. He is a true artist, and his favor here is thoroughly deserved. Mr. Muhlmann was the King. M. Flon, a French conductor, well known at Covent Garden, but new to this city, directed the performance capably but without individuality. The opera was mounted with the familiar trappings, and the trumpets of Egypt chortled, as usual, stridently and a little off the key in the case of those in B.

LOIE FULLER ARRIVES.

Brings with Her Thirty Tons of Baggage and Four New Steps.

Loie Fuller and her thirty tons of baggage, not to mention a whole troupe of electricians, stage hands, gas fitters, maids, protegés, one Jap, and many other persons whose exact functions are yet to be related, arrived here yesterday on the steamship St. Louis. With her she also brought four new and fancy steps, all of them, she said, originated by herself, and each of them more complicated than the one before it. They will be stepped at Koster & Bial's Music Hall on New Year's Eve, after which she will complete a ten weeks' engagement at that house.

Among those who accompanied the dancer were Miss Gabriele Bloch, a rich Parisienne; the latter's chaperon, Mme. de Cam; Miss Mabel Knowles, George Crager, manager; M. Homberg, leader of the orchestra, and Samuel Millard, chief of the electricians. There were four assistant electricians. The Jap's name is Utomlo; he is a trick wire walker, dancer, contortionist and juggler, and does more different kinds of things, says his mistress, than any Jap ever seen hereabouts.

After Miss Fuller had left the American Line Pier her manager began to engage trucks, in which to take her baggage and stage properties up town. He found that seven large vehicles were needed.

Of the new dances to be introduced by Miss Fuller she says that the best is one which she calls "the twenty-fifth," as twenty-four inventions of her pliant feet have preceded it. Another is the "grotto dance," which, she declares, will astonish the natives.

"I am going to show the people here a thing or two," she said, "and when my ten weeks are gone I'm going to Japan to dance before the Mikado."

ANOTHER NEW THEATRE.

Kirke La Shelle Buys Site for Building on Forty-seventh Street.

Kirke La Shelle, the theatrical manager, has bought, through Brokers N. Brigham Hall & Sons, from the various owners, the properties 164 to 170 West Forty-seventh Street, a plot 76.3 by 100.4, together with 1,564 Broadway, 20 by 80, adjoining the Forty-seventh Street properties at the rear.

It is said that Mr. La Shelle will improve this plot, beginning next May, with a theatre on the Forty-seventh Street section, and a six-story apartment building on the Broadway lot, through which entrance will be afforded to the theatre. The total amount involved in the operation, including the cost of the ground, is about $400,000.

Mr. La Shelle, it is said, expects to open the theatre in the Fall, and plans to use it for his own productions.

Mme. Sembrich's Song Recital.

At Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon Mme. Marcella Sembrich gave a song recital in aid of a worthy cause, that of the George Junior Republic. The merits of the cause, together with the efforts of the women who had devoted time and thought to the preparations for the concert, were the factors which combined with the uncommon attraction of the entertainment to make the audience one of great size. There were not seats and only two empty boxes. The advocates of the Junior Republic were fortunate in securing the services of Mme. Sembrich. The public of this city is now fully alive to the value and loveliness of her art, and those who know what poetic singing is do not let pass opportunities to hear her.

Her programme yesterday contained many numbers heard at her previous recitals, and one or two not given then. Among those not given before were Buononcini's "Per la gloria," Beethoven's "Frendvoll und Leidvoll," Purcell's "I attempt from love's sickness to fly," "Oh, Mistress Mine," and Schumann's "Er der Herrliehste." The group of folk-songs heard at the second recital was repeated, except the Italian. The fascinating "Standchen" of Richard Strauss had to be repeated, as did the "Gretchen Spinnt's Tochterlein" of Löwe. At the end of the second part Mme. Sembrich sang on recall "Aufträge," and at the close of the concert the Polish mazurka, made familiar last season at the opera. The great soprano was in excellent voice, and it goes without saying that she sang with her consummate art. The audience was most enthusiastic.

Bach Festival to be Held at Berlin.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—The first German Bach music festival is to be held in Berlin on March 21. In connection therewith there will be an exhibition of manuscripts, pictures, and instruments, for which the Berlin Town Council will lend the public rooms of the City Hall.

"The Belle of New York" in Berlin.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—"The Belle of New York" was given in German at the Central Theatre this evening.

LONDON THEATRICAL NOTES.

Nearly all the theatres are already doing a crowded holiday business.

"Mr. and Mrs. Daventry" continues to attract fashionable audiences. The Prince of Wales witnessed the performance on Thursday.

Frohman's production of "Alice in Wonderland" at the Vaudeville on Wednesday, with Ellaline Terriss as Alice and Seymour Hicks as the Mad Hatter, was not successful, from the critics' point of view.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—About forty pantomimes will be produced in and around London during the holidays, "Cinderella" being the most popular production, no fewer than nine versions being presented.

Phyllis Rankin had a most cordial welcome on her return to the English stage when she appeared in "Florodora," at the Lyric Theatre, on Thursday, but she was manifestly nervous, and did not make much of the part of Lady Holyrood.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Mrs. Madeleine Lucette Ryley, author of "My Lady Dainty," which Charles Frohman is to present at the Madison Square Theatre during this season, has sailed from Europe in order to reach here in time to see the production. The principal players in the piece are Effie Shannon and Herbert Kelcey.

Paul M. Potter's dramatization of "Under Two Flags" has been accepted by David Belasco, and the character of Cigarette is to be depicted by Blanche Bates in a special production that the management is planning. There are in the piece five acts and nine scenes.

After rehearsing "Hamlet" for eight days in New York, E. H. Sothern, Virginia Harned, and their company left here yesterday for St. Louis. Mr. Sothern has entirely recovered from his recent illness, and said before leaving that he had never felt stronger. His season will continue until the latter part of June.

Don Francisco de Souza, who is said to be a second cousin of the King of Portugal, arrived on the Hamburg-American Line Pennsylvania yesterday. He is a baritone, and expects to tour the country. The opening date and itinerary were not disclosed.

GAMBLING STOPPED BY TAMMANY COMMITTEE

CHIEFS ACTED PROMPTLY

"If the Gambling Places Are Reopened Responsible Police Officers Will Suffer," Mr. Nixon Says.

Lewis Nixon, Chairman of the Tammany committee to investigate the vicious conditions of the city, has caused some three-score gambling houses and poolrooms to close. Before Chief Devery went on a vacation he was furnished by Mr. Nixon with a list of thirteen gambling houses and poolrooms with evidence that their character was easily discovered, and the places ceased to "do business" and have remained closed. Last Wednesday Mr. Nixon called on Acting Chief Moses W. Cortright and called attention to forty-eight resorts of similar character. These were closed by Friday night. Yesterday Mr. Nixon made another call on the Deputy Chief with a list of a dozen places still open, and these will be closed to-morrow.

Acting Chief Cortright summoned superior officers to headquarters and told them where to find the places open in violation of law and directed them to close them and keep them closed. Mr. Nixon is, he says, intent on closing all gambling places and poolrooms, and he will from time to time furnish lists of places that are open to the executive head of the Police Department. If any of those closed by his agency open again Mr. Nixon says there will be trouble both for the offenders and such members of the police force as may be responsible for a renewal of violations of law.

POLICE ACTED PROMPTLY.

"This," said Mr. Nixon at Police Headquarters yesterday, "is simply in the line of what I have been doing for a couple of weeks. I first gave a list of thirteen gambling places and poolrooms to Chief Devery, who acted at once and without hesitation.

"When I first called on Deputy Chief Cortright he started with alacrity to do what he was requested to do. I believe that every place brought to his attention was closed, and that the places he was informed of to-day will be closed.

"The lists I took to Police Headquarters will not be made public unless the places are reopened. Then there will not only be publicity but some at least of the offenders will be followed up and punished and responsible police officers will suffer. This may as well be thoroughly understood. The committe is in earnest.

"Information about the gambling houses and poolrooms came to the committee mainly from persons affiliated more or less with Tammany Hall, who do not intend that they shall be classed as partners with evil doers or as countenancing them. If there has been any comfort given to gamblers and pool men by any one connected with the Police Department it had better stop, as we are just as ready to punish such police offenders as the violators of law."

Deputy Chief Cortright said: "I am particularly incensed at a story that I said I would have to consult Chief Devery. When it comes to police duty I consult no one. I shall not give out the list."

Gamblers and poolroom men looked perplexed and anxious yesterday, especially in what are known as the Fulton Street and Tenderloin districts. "Business" is usually in full swing in every gambling quarter at 2 P. M., but during the entire afternoon the Broadway hotels, from Thirty-fourth Street to Langacre Square, were thronged with men who discussed the "tip" to close and speculated on the length of their idleness. Many affected to believe that on the return of Chief Devery to duty conditions would change; others said that they would continue to be vigorous, and that perhaps everything would in time be closed tight until the end of the mayoralty campaign. It was admitted that many gambling establishments not protected by a club incorporation were running quietly and that the number of gambling establishments run as clubs could not be computed.

"No order," said Capt. Andrew J. Thomas of the West Thirtieth Street Station, based on information given by the Committee of Five, could apply to my district. We had nothing running."

"No gambling houses?"

"Not one, to my knowledge."

"No gambling in 'clubs' so-called?"

"Well, I suppose there's gambling more or less at the Union, Manhattan, and even the Union League Club."

"But in the clubs known as 'fake'?"

"Yes, they're all over. But you can't touch 'em. They're incorporated, and you can't act without a warrant and good evidence. I've no doubt there are some around here."

GAMBLING PLACES CLOSED.

Not the faintest glimmer of light could be detected in the windows of the known gambling houses up town last evening. There was no evidence of life at Canfield's or Maynard's, in West Forty-fourth Street; "Honest" John Kelly's, in West Forty-first Street; Farrell's, in Sixth Avenue, near Twenty-sixth Street; Daly's, in West Twenty-ninth Street, nor in any of the other less pretentious gambling resorts throughout the district.

The "big" concerns of the same character further down town were also closed. The two in Fourteenth Street between Third and Fourth Avenues, said to be owned by a well-known promoter of sporting events in Madison Square Garden, were "locked up tight." The place next to the German Savings Bank at the southeast corner of Fourth Avenue had its "lookout" on duty, however, though apparently there was no gambling going on within.

A reporter for THE NEW YORK TIMES asked the lookout if there was any way to get in.

"Got yer jimmy wid yer? If ye hain't, better go get a ladder'n try de windys. Dey ain't all made out'er oak," he replied.

"Can you tell me who runs that place?" queried the reporter.

"Say, watcher tryin' t' do—flush a fable? I ain't no news syndercate, on yer life; see?"

"I merely want to see what's going on," said the reporter. "I'm not hunting for fables."

"Might's well mosey 'long; nuthin' doin'."

The lookout finally admitted that the place had been going business in the afternoon, but had for some reason he said he could not explain closed up.

In West Third Street, between Macdougal and Sixth Avenue, and in Macdougal Street, just south of West Third, two craps games were being run as usual. Both places are patronized principally by negroes.

WARNED OF A RAID.

Regarding the raid of the gambling house at 2,234 Eighth Avenue on Friday night, Superintendent Henry Burr of the Society for the Prevention of Crime gave the following statement:

At a meeting of the Executive Committee Mr. Burr was instructed to raid the gambling room on the second floor of 2,234 Eighth Avenue. Superintendent Burr sent his assistant, Mr. Thompson, to Capt. Marens of the Thirty-first Precinct, calling on him for ten men and the patrol wagon. Mr. Burr also sent word that his men were at that moment in the gambling rooms and would point out to Capt. Martens's men the men to the arrested.

While Mr. Thompson was at the station house the telephone in the gambling house rang, and one of the men, after answering the 'phone, gave the order for the players to cash in their chips, and began to remove the paraphernalia from the place. Part of the paraphernalia was removed to the basement of the saloon on the southeast corner of One Hundred and Twentieth Street and Eighth Avenue.

Superintendent Burr waited until the police arrived, and then demanded that the paraphernalia be removed from the basement of the saloon. The entire paraphernalia seized in value would amount to about $8,000. There was a large Marvin safe in which the money and chips were placed when the tip came over the telephone.

Chief Devery was not at Police Headquarters yesterday, but he sent several telephone messages to his aids and received some. He was reported to be at his home and to intend to return to duty after Christmas Day.

President York came to his office late in the afternoon. He said that he never had any "programme" in regard to the police situation created by Chief Devery's hostility to him, and was not able to foresee what the coming week might bring forth.

"I shall abide events," he added. "I do not know of any plan to formulate charges against Chief Devery. As to my 'throwing up my hands' because the wrong done to Deputy Chief McLaughlin was righted, I know of no basis for the assertion. I do not know that any one can say that I was ever known to quit. I shall do all in my power to have the business of this department conducted properly."

DEPUTY P. H. McLAUGHLIN'S EDICT.

Deputy Chief P. H. McLaughlin called all of the Brooklyn precinct commanders to headquarters and had a long talk with them about police matters.

"While I am in command here," he said, "I will not stand for vice in any form in Brooklyn. I will look to you to keep your precincts clean. If you fail to do so I will find a way to make you. It must be understood that I will not stand for anything that is wrong. If anything is wrong in your precincts I shall tell you but once to correct it. If it is not remedied by you then I will try to remedy it myself from this office, and I have men here to do the work. All that I shall expect of you is to do your duty as policemen."

Mr. McLaughlin concluded by telling the Captains that Brooklyn was his home, and that as the head of its police force he intended that it should be kept clean.

While the Deputy Chief was talking to the Captains, his "plug hat," which caused Chief Devery such anguish of mind, reposed on the top of his desk.

"Of course I'll continue to wear that hat," said the Deputy Chief to the reporters after the Captains had gone. "I like to be well-dressed, and I think I have a right to wear a high hat, if it pleases me to."

Chief Devery has complained that you did not visit him, and that you failed to respond when he called you over to Mulberry Street," was suggested to the Deputy Chief. "Is that ao?"

"I have never neglected the Chief," he returned. "I always visited his office when I went over to Mulberry Street. During the ten months I have been in charge in Brooklyn I have visited him at least a dozen times. When I go over to Mulberry Street it is often early, between 10 and 11 o'clock in the morning, and, of course, I fail to see the Chief then."

This was taken as being a sly dig at Chief Devery's habit of getting down to Headquarters late. Mr. McLaughlin concluded by saying that he had always obeyed the Chief's orders, and would continue to do so.

TOWING DISABLED LINERS.

The Westernland and Cufic Were Assisted Into Port.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—Two tugs are towing the White Star Line steamer Cufic, recently at anchor in distress and abandoned by her crew off the Skerries, to Liverpool.

The steamer Somerhill, which towed the disabled steamer Westernland to West Bay, near Weymouth, has lost her mainmast and has her hull damaged, but she is proceeding, leaving the Westernland, which later was towed to Southampton.

The American Line steamer New York, which sailed from Southampton via Cherbourg to-day, took the passengers of the Westernland.

Westchester Republicans Dine.

The Republican organization of Westchester County gave a dinner at Sherry's last night to William L. Ward, the Chairman of the Westchester County Committee. During the course of the evening Mr. Ward was presented with a gold watch and chair, which cost $1,000, and Mr. John J. Brown, Secretary of the committee, was presented with a diamond and pearl pin. Ex-Congressman Southwick, Senator Mills, Assemblymen Apgar, Cooley, and Malbs, Sheriff Miller, and all the county officers attended the dinner.

New Bedford Weavers to Resume Work

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Dec. 22.—At a meeting of the striking weavers of the Acushnet and Hathaway cotton mills, held to-day, it was voted to return to work on Wednesday. The weavers struck after the loom fixers went out, five weeks ago. The fixers will remain out. It is understood that many weavers from other cities have arrived here and secured work during the strike, and the places of the loom fixers have also been filled.

Watch for District Attorney Merrill.

District Attorney Merrill of Queens County was yesterday afternoon presented with a gold watch and chain. The present was given to the District Attorney by his office attaches and was engraved with the following: "John D. Merrill, District Attorney, Queens County, Christmas, 1900."

MRS. SARAH BROWNELL'S DEBTS.

Sarah S. Brownell, residing at 83 West One Hundred and Third Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities of $5,372 and no assets. The debts were contracted from 1890 to 1898 and are for wearing apparel, millinery, jewelry, bric-à-brac, and borrowed money. She also owes $50 for confectionery, $118 for theatre tickets, and $365 hotel bill.

She is a beneficiary under a trust fund from her father, John W. Lockwood, the income of which is $1,200 a year, but she says that it is wholly insufficient for her personal wants.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

BUFFALO, Dec. 22.—Fire in the loft or top floor of The Buffalo Commercial at noon destroyed a quantity of household furniture and personal effects of W. C. Warren, the proprietor. The loss is covered by insurance.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 22.—Fire started from an explosion in the four-story granite block of Burbank & Rider, at 18 and 20 Central Street, just before 3 o'clock this morning. The Washburn-Crosby Company's local branch, C. C. Hamlin, agent, and the New England Pattern Company, A. & F. Kimball, are among the sufferers. The loss is heavy.

THE WEST POINT INQUIRY

Cadets Say Booz Was Not Specially Selected for Hazing.

Declare that They Hazed Only to Take Conceit Out of Fourth Class Men.

WEST POINT, Dec. 22.—The military court of inquiry, which began taking testimony here last Tuesday regarding the charges of alleged brutal hazing at the Military Academy, to-day continued the examination of the cadets of the first class. These are the men who hazed Booz's classmates, but none of them who have testified so far has acknowledged that any brutal hazing occurred in 1898.

Gens. Brooke, Bates, and Clous entered the courtroom at 9 o'clock, and Cadet Clarence O. Sherrill of North Carolina was the first witness called. In reply to Gen. Clous, he said he only knew Booz slightly. He never hazed Booz, but he might have "braced" other men of the fourth class and taken part in "feet inspections." Like many other first class men, he had fourth class men do special duty for him, such as carrying water, looking after his clothes and laundry, and doing other menial things about his tent. He denied ever having given tabasco or pepper sauce to Booz or any other cadet.

Major John M. Bannister, Surgeon, was recalled, and told of his testing the effects of partaking of four drops of tropical pepper sauce, such as is used in the cadets' mess hall. He said he tried it last night by dropping four drops of the sauce on the palm of his hand and taking it up with his tongue. He swallowed the sauce, and, although it tasted hot, like the taste of a cayenne pepper pod, he felt no ill-effects from the dose, although his throat, he said, was very susceptible to any irritation. Two young ladies who were present when he made the test, in a spirit of fun did likewise, and they, too, found no difficulty in swallowing the same quantity.

In reply to Gen. Clous, the witness said: "I positively swear that the taking of this sauce could not directly or indirectly have caused tuberculosis of the throat or in any way be the cause of the death of Cadet Booz two years after his partaking of it."

Adjt. Gen. John C. Pegram Buchanan swore that he never hazed Booz. He knew Breth, who was a member of his own class. This was the fourth class in 1897. He testified as follows:

Q—Did you see Breth hazed? A.—No sir, but I heard he was "overjoyed" considerably.

Q—What are the relations of the upper class men to the fourth class men? A.—With the exception of overjoying, which has been abolished, it is about the same as usual. We require them to do recruit work about our tents, cleaning guns, turning up beds, &c.

Q—Have you heard of any fights since last encampment? A.—Yes sir, I heard of four.

Q—Between upper class men and fourth class men? A.—Yes sir.

Q—Who were the upper class men, one by fourth class men, that fight was between. A.—Yes sir.

Q—Did you ever administer pepper sauce to Cadet Booz? A.—Yes sir. I did not, no, do I know of any one who did?

Cadet Guy E. Carleton of Michigan, when called, was asked if he knew Cadet Booz and replied in the affirmative.

Q—Did you give him any sauce? A.—No sir.

Q—Was he hazed, and, if so, was it in any way different to the other members of his class? A.—He was hazed but no other than in his class got the same treatment. There was nothing official or severe in it.

Q—Did you ever haze any one? A.—Yes sir, I "exercised" some and made them "brace," but I never gave any one "hell twice."

In reply to several questions regarding Cadet Breth the witness said: "I knew him, but did not hear of his being hazed or put in a straitjacket. If he had been passed in a straitjacket I certainly would have heard of it. I have had a special duty man from the fourth class; he made my bed, swept out the tent, carried water, and cleaned my gun and bayonet."

Cadet Robert M. Beck Jr., of Rhode Island, examined by Capt. Dean, said:

"I have never heard that Booz was specially selected for hazing. I saw Cadet Breth put before he left. He was always very nervous."

Q—Did you know or hear of any hazing during the last encampment? A.—No, Sir; but there was hazing and exercising, which were not looked upon as hazing.

Cadet William M. Cooley of Michigan said that he could not say that he had not given sauce to lower class men.

Q.—Have you seen it given, and, if so, was any force used? A.—I saw it given several times in the mess hall, but no force was used. The men were told to take it, and they did. Eight drops was the most I ever saw given.

Q.—Have you known of any cadets being dressed from their tents? A.—Yes, Sir; I was dressed myself when a fourth class man. I was lying on the comforter on the floor. Two or three men caught hold of it, and pulled it with me on top out of the tent, and up the company street.

Q.—Have you ever known hands to have been laid on the man and his body dragged on the ground? A.—No, Sir; the bedding was always underneath.

Cadet Emory J. Pike of Iowa heard of men being required to eat soap, but never knew of a positive case. Gens. Clous and Brooke interrogated the witness as follows:

Q—Did you ever ask any one to eat soap? A—No, Sir.

Q.—Did you ever require a cadet to swallow any kind of sauce? A.—No, Sir.

Q—You knew Cadet Breth? A.—Yes, Sir; I remember him on account of his "woodenness."

Q—Do you mean by that he was wooden-headed? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—In treating fourth class men by your methods of hazing, was any difference made between the sons of rich men and those of poorer classes? A.—Well, Sir, there would be no distinction, except the rich man's son was conceited.

Q—Why do you haze fourth-class men? A.—Fourth-class men are new and green, and they are hazed to make them conform to the rules, to obey their superiors, and make men out of them.

Q—If the son of a General or the son of a President of the United States came here, would he be hazed? A.—Yes, he would if he were conceited, and it is likely he would be hazed anyhow.

Q—You then evidently wish to make them all feel that they are on an equal footing, that home is better than the others? A.—That's the idea.

Q.—Would you use brutality in making a conceited man realize this? A.—I could not call it brutal.

Q—I mean would you inflict injury, or would you use force? A.—Oh, no.

Q.—Did you ever know any one to be injured through hazing in your time or in the traditions of the academy? A.—No, and I am pretty well acquainted with the traditions of the academy.

Cadet Richard Furnival of New York, when sworn, said:

I knew Cadet Breth. I was his roommate for a month, and he never complained of his health.

Q.—Are cadets allowed to use tobacco? inquired Gen. Clous. A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Do you know of any cadet who uses tobacco. A.—Yes, Sir; Breth used it. He chewed it and also smoked it.

Q.—To what extent? A.—Almost constantly; he chewed nearly all the time.

Q.—While Breth was your roommate was your furniture ever tied up? A.—No, Sir, it was not.

Q.—Was Cadet Breth required to eat soap? A.—He was required to eat something; I don't know whether it was soap or not.

Q.—Did you ever hear of a cadet being required to eat anything of that character? A.—The only thing I can remember is that a cadet had to eat some quinine.

After a brief recess, Cadet Creed F. Cox of Virginia was sworn. He testified that Booz was not hazed any more than others in his class. He had seen nine or ten drops of table sauce given to some cadets. He gave none himself. He never saw Booz taking any of the sauce.

In reply to Gen. Brooke, Cox said that when a cadet in the fourth class was conceited it was taken out of him by hazing.

Q.—How long does the conceit last? A.—About twenty minutes.

Q.—Ah, then, it is exorcised? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Does it ever return? A.—Not while he is a fourth-class man, Sir.

Gen. Brooke questioned the witness at length on the cadet "code" of honor, and the witness said:

Our code requires a man not to do anything ungentlemanly. Sometimes a class has caused a man to resign for making false statements or doing something in violation of this code.

Q.—Any deviation from this standard, then, would be closely investigated by the class and there is no intermediary between absolute truth and falsehood? A.—That is exactly the idea. Sir I knew of a case about two years ago, where a man did an ungentlemanly act, and he was requested to resign.

Q.—Did he? A.—He did, Sir.

When the witness had finished the court adjourned until Wednesday at 2 o'clock.

PRAISE FOR WEST POINT.

Englishman Says the Academy Surpasses British Institutions.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—At a conference of the head masters of the great public schools this week one of the speakers severely arraigned the irrational educational methods the schools were forced to employ in order to pass boys as officers into the service. A military correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette, criticising the Sandhurst and Woolwich methods, declares the British authorities admit that West Point is in advance of anything in England. He describes the democratic and severely competitive system in vogue there, saying:

"Education at West Point is serious thoroughness rather than an extension of attainments. Its principle is controlling education, together with the knowledge of how to make use of it. Like all exceptionally good education, it is enormously costly, perhaps the most expensive in the world. But in many ways it is said to be by far the best. An exhaustive comparison of West Point with our own military colleges, as educational mediums, is to the disadvantage of our own institutions.

"The principal industry in the United States is education. For years past the Americans have been earnestly engaged in the business of disseminating knowledge. If Great Britain is to hold her own we must follow in the footsteps of the great Republic or be content with second place."

OMAHA POLICE CONFIDENT.

Chief Says the Abductors of Young Cudahy Will Be in Custody Soon.

OMAHA, Dec. 22.—The police are hard at work on the kidnapping case of Edward Cudahy, Jr., who was carried away Tuesday night and held for $25,000 ransom. The discovery of the house in which the boy was imprisoned has also led to other clues, which promise something more definite in the near future. From those living in the vicinity of the building the police have secured a good description of the members of the gang and their method of operation, the time they left the city, and the direction they took.

Mr. Cudahy is taking personal account of all that is being done, and keenly watching the developments. He will not talk of the matter, however, beyond stating his belief that the police have the matter well in hand, and will soon effect the capture of some or all of the gang.

Chief of Police Donahue refuses to say anything about the case, further than that the discovery of the house where the boy is alleged to have been confined is the first link in the chain which will soon lead to the capture of the abductors.

"We are bound to get them in a short time," he said to say what method will be pursued or what steps we are now taking would be to embarrass the department. We have had too much newspaper publicity altogether. It is true we have several clues which we think are of great importance, and their discovery has incited the officers detailed on the case to greater vigilance. We think now that we are near the end."

WHAT MR. CUDAHY SHOULD HAVE DONE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Instantly on receiving the demand for ransom Mr. Cudahy should have signed and sent to all the principal newspapers, far and near, a manifesto like this:

"TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

"I am worth $10,000,000, [or whatever he had.]

"I will spend every cent of it, if necessary, to capture and punish the kidnappers of my boy.

"I am already hot on their trail, with all mankind on my side, and they cannot escape.

"Nevertheless, I have joined with me [persons named] as a committee, with whom I have deposited $25,000, to be paid or divided, according to their judgment, to any person or persons who shall give information leading to the capture and punishment of the criminals.

"Finally, if they do any harm to the boy, I pledge all I am worth in aid of popular measures to inflict upon them the most terrible punishment possible for men to suffer in this world."

What object could the kidnappers have had in going further against an enemy of such power and purpose as this?

Instead, the father, frightened out of his senses by the preposterous proposal to make his mutilated boy a terror to all other parents whose children might afterward be caught, threw away the perfect opportunity the wretches had provided for their own immediate capture, and spent his money in about the worst way that money was ever spent in the world—by that holds out to every desperado a glittering and easy prize for the perpetration of this most fiendish of crimes.

It is to be feared that many a parent will within a very few months have Mr. Cudahy's "prize" to thank for a crisis of agony similar to his, such as all his wealth could not compensate in a single instance or for a single hour. VIDI.

New York, Dec. 21, 1900.

DEATH FOR KIDNAPPERS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reading the account in this morning's paper of the kidnapping of young Cudahy I learned, with some astonishment, that there seems to be no law under which the perpetrators of this dastardly deed could be adequately punished. If that is so, parents may, indeed, tremble, and we shall soon hear of similar outrages, for there are many brutes who would resort to such means to extort a large sum of money when they find that they can commit such a crime with impunity. To kidnap a child is one of the worst crimes one can imagine, and the mental anguish of the afflicted parents must be frightful.

There should be a law throughout the United States putting the penalty of capital punishment on the crime of kidnapping; for any one who would deliberately blind or maim a child, as the kidnappers of young Cudahy threatened to do, would as readily commit a murder, and the sooner we are rid of such a one the better it will be for the community. Only the penalty of capital punishment, I feel, will serve to prevent this crime, and the knowledge of such a law will again give parents the feeling of security which has been so rudely shaken by this Omaha outrage.

C. J. RICHARDS.

New York, Dec. 22, 1900.

MILITARY SECRETARY NAMED.

Governor-Elect Odell Selects Harrison K. Bird for the Honor.

Governor-elect Odell announced last evening the appointment of Harrison K. Bird as his military secretary. Mr. Bird was Gen. Greene's private secretary while the General was Chairman of the County Committee. Mr. Bird is a New York City man and a graduate of Columbia University. The title given to Mr. Bird is that of Major. Heretofore the military secretary of the Governor has been a Colonel. Mr. Odell, when asked the reason for the reduction in rank, said it had been suggested to him by Major Gen. Roe as proper.

Governor-elect Odell had nothing to say about the nature of the conference in Senator Platt's rooms. He said his inaugural message had not yet been finished. Mr. Odell returned to Newburg last night.

GEORGE W. WANMAKER PROMOTED

Appointed Deputy Appraiser to Succeed J. Hart Brewer.

George W. Wanmaker, Republican leader of the Fifteenth District, was yesterday appointed Deputy Appraiser to succeed J. Hart Brewer, who died Friday. The appointment was announced by Appraiser Wakeman. In Mr. Wakeman's absence Mr. Wanmaker will be Acting Appraiser.

The following delegation from the Appraiser's office will attend the funeral of Mr. Brewer in Trenton to-morrow at 11:30 o'clock: Wilbur F. Wakeman, J. P. Skillman, Michael Nathan, Harve T. Andrews, and Warren Sherwood.

BISHOP POTTER WILL SPEAK.

Plans for the Civic Federation Twentieth Century Dinner New Year's Eve.

The Civic Federation announced yesterday that Bishop Potter will speak at the twentieth century dinner on Dec. 31 in Arlington Hall. Ernest H. Crosby will be toastmaster. Other speakers will be Controller Coler, the Rev. R. Heber Newton, and R. Fulton Cutting.

A sub-committee of twenty has been named to investigate the condition of affairs in the tenements, and suggest effective legislation. The committee is made up of James P. Rahal, A. J. Boulton, John S. Henry, M. J. Flaherty, John S. Crosby, John Phillips, J. R. Commons, Henry George, Jr., J. W. Sullivan, M. A. Fitzgerald, Charles Frederick Adams, W. A. Perine, Richard Patterson, J. A. Stewart, Matthew Barr, Senator John Ford, Thomas M. Warren, Charles B. Spahr, the Rev. R. Heber Newton, J. N. Bogart, and Timothy Healey.

Killed by a Circular Saw.

ELMIRA, Dec. 22.—George Ladue, an employé of the heading factory in Galeton, Penn., was instantly killed this afternoon by the bursting of a circular saw. His head was nearly torn from the body.

ROOT'S PLEA FOR AN ARMY

Says Failure to Increase It Would Disgrace the Country.

Also Cause Abandonment of Part of the Philippines—Believes Canteen Is Necessary.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—At the last meeting of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, the proceedings of which were made public to-day, Secretary Root made a strong representation for the necessity of immediate legislation for the relief of the army. He stated broadly that if Congress did not at once increase the army in substantial accordance with the recommendations of the War Department, the United States would be obliged to abandon a large portion of the Philippine Islands where civil government is established.

If the present garrisons are withdrawn from certain portions of the island, the municipal officers, mostly Filipinos, will be left defenseless, with every prospect of being deprived of their lives and property, and at the same time the United States will be disgraced, said the Secretary, for having proved faithless to its solemn obligations.

The Secretary argued that it was necessary to pass the department bill as a whole in order to properly adjust the military organizations to the new conditions created by an increase of numbers.

"We do not any of us," he said, "expect that for any considerable period an army of 100,000 men will be maintained, and for an army of 60,000 men the provisions made (by the committee) are sufficient."

With reference to the matter of staff details, the Secretary said that he was convinced that the control of the permanent staff of the departments in the City of Washington is an evil that ought to be remedied, and that it is highly important for the army that there should be interchangeable service between the line and the staff.

In answer to an inquiry, the Secretary said that it was of minor importance whether there was a corps or regimental formation of the artillery branch, and that while he favored the former, he really cared very little about the matter, which he regarded as purely a technical question. He said he had put the corps formation provision into the bill because it had been generally represented to him as a wise provision.

Secretary Root devoted considerable attention in his testimony to the army canteen, urging that it was a great means of maintaining the morality, health, and discipline of the troops. He pointed out that the post exchange is a club, where the men get together to read, talk, and smoke, playing checkers and other games, and drinking under such natural restraints as the place afforded.

A prohibition of the canteen, the Secretary said, would interfere with enlistments, as the men would not enlist if they knew they were going to be confined in a reform school. He considered the agitation against the canteen as a misguided one, holding that the abolition of the canteen would drive the soldiers out of the post exchange, where they were subject to salutary restraints, into the demoralizing and vicious surroundings outside of the army posts. It would result in more drinking and more deception among those who drank.

The Secretary also pointed out that the proposed enactment would convey an entirely erroneous and prejudicial view to the public as to what had been the course of the army in regulating the sale of liquor up to this time.

CONTRACTS FOR WARSHIPS.

The Matter of Awards Still in an Unsettled Condition.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The board on construction again considered the battleship problem to-day. Secretary Long had referred back to the board the bids covering the three sheathed battleships, having accepted its conclusions as to the eight other vessels included in the advertisement. Several interesting legal points are involved in this case. In the first place, it is doubtful whether or not one of the three vessels must be allotted to the Pacific Coast builders. There is a strong argument on each side of this question. Again, it is a question whether the department is at liberty to require bidders to amend their bids through the indirect method of restoring certain items of construction omitted in their specifications.

Altogether, it appears that the board will be occupied for the next three days in determining these points, and then passing upon the alternative proposition, in the event that the bids cannot be brought within the limit of cost, of having recourse to new designs for the ships, and advertising for smaller battleships on the general lines of the Maine class. Meanwhile considerable pressure is being brought to bear upon the Navy Department by members of Congress and by prominent Western people to influence a decision in favor of the Pacific Coast.

To Buy Steel Dock at Havana.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The Navy Department has designated a special board to proceed to Havana in January to complete arrangements for the acquisition by the United States of the big floating steel dry dock at that place, which belongs at present to the Spanish Government.

THE UNITED SERVICE.

Army.

Capt. Frederick S. Dewey, Assistant Surgeon, Thirty-eighth United States Volunteers, is honorably discharged from the service of the United States, to take effect Feb. 20, his services being no longer required.

Navy.

Commander L. C. Logan is detached from the Washington Yard and ordered to special duty in connection with the construction of coaling depots, Bureau of Equipment.

Assistant Surgeon R. E. Ledbetter is detached from the Monongahela and ordered to the Constellation.

Assistant Surgeon C. R. Burr's order of Dec. 19 is revoked; he will resume his duties on the Monongahela.

Pay Inspector I. G. Hobbs is ordered to additional duty at the Torpedo Station, Newport, Dec. 31, as Pay Officer and General Storekeeper.

Pay Inspector S. R. Colhoun is detached from the Torpedo Station, Newport, Dec. 31, and leave is granted for three months, with permission to go abroad.

Pay Inspector W. J. Thompson's order to the Mare Island Hospital is revoked; he will continue under treatment at Puget Sound Naval Station.

Movements of Naval Vessels.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Admiral Remoy, on the Brooklyn, left Cavite to-day for Olongapo, at which place the Kaiserin arrived yesterday.

The Buffalo is at Hampton Roads. She is soon to start on her trip to Manila.

The Kearsarge and the Massachusetts sailed from Hampton Roads this morning for Pensacola.

The Newark has arrived at Cavite.

The Leyden has arrived at the New York yard.

PORT IN MARINDUQUE CLOSED.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—A general order recently issued by Gen. MacArthur, Military Governor of the Philippine Islands, says that "Military conditions requiring it, the port of Boac, Island of Marinduque, opened to the coasting trade June 1, 1900, is closed to such trade, and all trade of whatsoever character with said island is, until further orders, forbidden."

Another order declares the port of Agno, Province of Zambales, opened to the coasting trade, and details Capt. Ross L. Bush, Twenty-fifth Infantry, as Inspector of Customs at that port.

Havana Custom House Report.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The Division of Insular Affairs, War Department, to-day issued a statement of the transactions at the Havana Custom House for the month of November last. During the month 261 vessels entered at the port, 114 from foreign ports and 147 from points in Cuba. A total of 242 vessels cleared from Havana, 108 sailing for points outside of the island, and the other 186 for other parts of Cuba. A total of 3,995 passengers landed at Havana during November, 2,671 from Spain and 998 from the United States, while 886 persons left Havana for foreign ports. Live stock to the number of 17,036 came into Havana, mostly from Mexico. The total amount of duties liquidated at the port was $970,633.

To Command District of Porto Rico.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Lieut. Col. James A. Buchanan, Porto Rican Regiment, United States Volunteers, has been assigned to the command of the District of Porto Rico, recently incorporated into the Department of the East.

CANAL TREATY ON ITS WAY.

President Sends It to State Department —Amendments to be Sent to London in Usual Manner.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The Hay-Pauncefote canal treaty, with the Senate amendments, was received at the State Department shortly after noon to-day. It was transmitted from the Senate through the White House. With the treaty was a simple statement signed not by the President pro tem of the Senate, but by Mr. Bennett, the Secretary, reciting the action taken by the Senate on the convention.

The State Department will forward the amendments in the usual course to the British Government, and they will be on their way to London by the steamer which leaves New York next Tuesday.

This action is rather more rapid than is usual in treaty making. Once it is taken there will be nothing more for the State Department to do until the British Government has passed upon the amendments, provided an unconscionable period of time is not so occupied.

Says England Is Losing Prestige.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 22.—The Novosti, discussing the Nicaragua Canal, says: "England is evidently incapable of opposing the United States, the fact being that America is rising proportionately as England is losing prestige."

TRACKS IN WASHINGTON.

Architects Protest Against Marring the Capital City Landscape.

William A. Boring, one of the architects from this city appointed by the American Institute of Architects, which was in convention in Washington last week, to formulate and present to Congress a bill for a committee to recommend a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the City of Washington, said yesterday that the objects sought would be materially interfered with if a bill, introduced into Congress, allowing the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to elevate its tracks and build train sheds on the Mall, in front of the Capitol, and which contemplates the removal of the Fish Commission Building, was passed.

The bill, which was reported with amendments on Dec. 14, 1900, "provides for additions and expansions of the Pennsylvania Railroad terminal on the Mall," said Mr. Boring, "and on that part of the original plan of Washington which was to be the most important piece of decorative landscape gardening in the scheme surrounding the Capitol.

"A comprehensive scheme for the park system, embracing the Mall, Memorial Bridge, Rock Creek, and other Government property, should be prepared by an able commission of the best artists. It is necessary to take immediate action. Should the Pennsylvania Railroad be granted all the privileges and territories outlined in the bill, the destruction of the Mall would be effected beyond recovery."

The T Square Club of Philadelphia has passed a resolution requesting Congress to provide for the removal or depression of the tracks and thus prevent marring the Mall.

ARCHITECTS ENTER A PROTEST.

Say Plans for Additions to the White House Are Unsatisfactory.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 22.—At a special meeting of the T Square Club, the members discussed the proposed enlargement of the White House, and as a result adopted the following resolutions:

"Whereas, The White House is not only a historic monument, held in highest regard by the American people, but is also a structure of great beauty and one of the most important examples of the architecture of our country; and

"Whereas, The problem of its enlargement is one requiring the highest skill and finest architectural judgment; and

"Whereas, There have been made certain plans for the enlargement of the White House, appropriations for the execution of which are now being sought; and

"Whereas, These plans present an eminently unsatisfactory design, and do not commend themselves to educated architectural sentiment;

"Now, therefore, we, a representative body of architects, demand that any changes to the White House be first approved by a commission of distinguished architects appointed by the President, and we urge that Congress pass no appropriation for alterations or additions to the White House until such indorsement be given."

NEW CUSTOM HOUSE CONTRACT.

Bid of Isaac A. Hopper & Son of This City Accepted by the Treasury.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Taylor to-day awarded to Isaac A. Hopper & Son of New York the contract for the construction of the foundation of the New York Custom House.

The contract price is $369,610, and the work is to be completed in eight months under a penalty of $420 a day for any time beyond that period. The bid of Hopper & Son is the lowest bid made by about $9,000.

Mr. Meiklejohn Opens His Canvass.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—George D. Meiklejohn, Assistant Secretary of War, left Washington to-day for Lincoln, Neb. He has been granted leave of absence for thirty days, and will at once begin a formal canvass from suitable headquarters at Lincoln for the Nebraska Senatorship, made vacant by the retirement of Senator Thurston.

Fourth-Class Postmasters Appointed.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The following fourth class Postmasters were appointed to-day:

New Jersey—Shrewsbury, W. L. Borden.

New York—Beatyestown, Jacob Skinner; West Danby, Cortland Mynard; West Junius, G. H. Howell.

ARBITRATION ENDS A STRIKE.

Boilermakers at Burlee's Staten Island Shipyard Will Go Back.

The strike of boilermakers, which started two months ago in Burlee's shipyard, Port Richmond, S. I., and eventually tied up the yard, was settled yesterday, and the strikers will return to work to-morrow. The strike was against the introduction of piece-work and a cutting of the rates.

Ames Bennett, former Chief Inspector of Boilers for the Lehigh Valley Railroad, was agreed upon as arbitrator. He decided yesterday that while the piece-work system would be kept on, the former piece-work prices which existed before the strike would be restored.

BOY PREFERRED HIS SISTER.

Mother's Writ of Habeas Corpus Quashed by Justice Maddox.

Given his choice of making his home with either, a boy in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, yesterday rejected his mother for his sister. Mrs. Mary Lewis had her daughter, Mrs. Julia Byrnes, before Justice Maddox on a writ of habeas corpus demanding the body of Mrs. Lewis's son, Hamilton Kane, fourteen years old.

Justice Maddox questioned the boy, who said that he preferred to live with his sister. The Court decided that the lad was old enough to decide for himself and the writ was quashed.

BUSINESS MAN A SUICIDE.

Andrew Watt of the Ithaca Wall Paper Company Kills Himself.

ITHACA, Dec. 22.—Andrew Watt, President of the Ithaca Wall Paper Company, committed suicide in his factory to-day. He accomplished his purpose by fastening a piece of broom cord to a beam in the attic of the factory. He probably committed the deed when his employes were absent at dinner, but a searching party did not discover his body until late in the afternoon.

He had not been in good health lately, having had serious illness in his family, and it is believed he was temporarily insane when he committed the deed.

Mr. Watt was a resident of York, Penn., and sixty-four years old. He resided with his daughter when attending to his duties here.

Hearing on Brooklyn's Water Supply.

A hearing on the matter of Brooklyn's water supply and the urgent need of its increase will be held next Thursday morning before Mayor Van Wyck. The Mayor yesterday sent a letter appointing a time for the hearing to J. Hampden Dougherty, who sent a request for a hearing on behalf of the Brooklyn League and the Manufacturers' Association.

EX-GOV. WOLCOTT'S FUNERAL.

Services to be Held in Trinity Church, Boston, To-morrow Morning—Resolutions of Regret.

BOSTON, Dec. 22.—Arrangements are practically perfected for the funeral of ex-Gov. Wolcott on Monday morning, at 11 o'clock. The services will be held in Trinity Church, and will be conducted by the Rev. Howard Brown, pastor of King's Chapel, which the ex-Governor's family attended.

The services will consist only of the regular burial service, with musical selections under the direction of B. J. Lang, assisted by the King's Chapel choir and other singers. It has been decided that the body shall not lie in state. There will be no private service at the residence.

Both branches of the City Government and the Civil Service Commissioners met in special session to-day to take action on the death of Mr. Wolcott. Eulogies were pronounced, committees were appointed to attend the funeral on Monday, flags were ordered at half-mast on city buildings, and motions were passed to close the City Hall and toll the bells during the funeral. Gov. Crane to-day directed that all departments of the State House be closed from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M. Monday out of respect for the former Governor.

A special meeting of the Executive Council was held at the State House this afternoon to take action on the death of ex-Gov. Wolcott.

Lieut. Gov. Bates and Councilors Davis and Quirk were appointed a Committee on Resolutions to report at the meeting of the Council next Wednesday. The Council voted to attend the funeral in a body.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Republican State Committee to-day a committee was appointed to attend the funeral of ex-Gov. Wolcott, and resolutions of regret were adopted.

VACANCY IN ELECTORAL COLLEGE

BOSTON, Dec. 22.—The death of ex-Gov. Roger Wolcott makes a vacancy in the Electoral College that is to cast the votes of Massachusetts for President and Vice President of the United States. Mr. Wolcott was elected as one of the two Electors at Large at the November election. It will be the first vacancy in the Electoral College of Massachusetts occasioned by death, in the recollection of the officials at the State House.

The Electors will meet Jan. 12 and organize. The meeting will then adjourn until Jan. 14, when any vacancies will be filled, and then vote by ballot for President and Vice President of the United States will be taken. Mr. Wolcott, had he lived, undoubtedly would have been chosen President of the Electoral College.

HIS FATHERLY JOY SHORTLIVED

Goodheart's Wife's Alleged "Newborn" Infant Proved to be a Week Old and Not Hers.

When Joseph Goodheart, an expressman of 248 West Thirtieth Street, and employed by E. Carla of 101 West Twenty-eighth Street, received a note while at work last Monday that there was a baby at the house, he was surprised beyond measure, but delighted withal, as he and his wife Gertrude had never been blessed with any children. He obtained leave of absence from his employer, and hurrying home found his wife in bed and beside her the baby.

After taking the new arrival in his arms and bestowing upon it a wealth of fatherly caresses, he bethought himself of a midwife. Mrs. Goodheart said she could not need one, but the proud and grateful Goodheart insisted, and, borrowing from his employer, he engaged a midwife. When the latter came, however, Mrs. Goodheart absolutely refused to have anything to do with her.

Before the midwife left the house she took Goodheart aside and confided to him that in her opinion the baby looked pretty old to be a new-born infant. Other women, too, who came in to see the baby said that it was about the oldest looking new baby they had ever seen. The consensus of opinion arrived at was that the little one was about eight days old instead of eight hours.

At last even the inexperienced Goodheart became convinced that something was wrong. He went to his wife with his doubts, and, according to his story told yesterday in the West Side court, she tearfully confessed that the baby was not hers. She told him that earlier in the day she had met a strange woman on Eighth Avenue who asked her if she wanted a baby. She answered that she did, and the strange woman gave her the infant and $2. After a stormy time Goodheart left, saying he would never have more to do with his wife.

Mrs. Goodheart had him haled to court yesterday on a charge of abandonment, and he told his story. He gave it as his opinion that his wife was trying to shield the mother of the child. Mrs. Goodheart denied it. Magistrate Mayo gently reproved her for her conduct, and told her to take the baby to the Superintendent of Outdoor Poor. Goodheart declared that even if his wife did dispose of the infant he would not live with her again.

The Magistrate will decide to-morrow how much money Goodheart shall give his wife for her support.

KENTUCKY WINS BOUNDARY SUIT

Court of Appeals Overrules the Petition for a Rehearing.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Dec. 22.—In the Court of Appeals the petition for a rehearing of the Kentucky-Indiana State boundary line dispute was overruled. In an opinion concurred in by a majority of the Judges, Judge Durrell holds that Kentucky has exclusive jurisdiction on the Ohio River to the low-water mark on the Indiana side. Judge Hobson delivered a separate opinion, holding that Indiana has concurrent jurisdiction over the river. The suit grew out of an Indiana civil attachment served on a steamboat.

RABBI ASHER INSTALLED.

Takes Formal Charge of Congregation B'nai Jeshurum.

The ceremonies attending the installation of the Rev. Dr. Joseph M. Asher as rabbi of the Congregation B'nai Jeshurum, at Madison Avenue and East Sixty-fifth Street, succeeding the Rev. Stephen S. Wise, took place yesterday morning. Every seat in the synagogue was occupied, and many persons had to be turned away. Dr. Asher comes from London and is a graduate of Cambridge University.

The Rev. Dr. Gustav Gotthelf of the Temple Emanu-El conducted the installation ceremonies, which were most impressive. Dr. Asher, after being formally presented to the Board of Trustees, preached a sermon, followed by a personal address to the members of the congregation.

MR. SANDERSON'S LOVING CUP.

Agent of the Wilson Line Going to England to Manage the Wilson Interests.

The annual dinner of the steamship and shipping trade of the Produce Exchange was held last night at Delmonico's, the guest of honor being Oswald Sanderson, agent of the Wilson and Phoenix Lines in the United States, who leaves for England early in January to assume the management of the steamship interests of Thomas Wilson's Sons' Company of Hull, England.

Elliott T. Barrows, President of the Produce Exchange, presided. A loving cup was presented to Mr. Sanderson by Lewis H. Spence on behalf of the former's friends and associates. Among the diners were Gustav H. Schwab, L. Bowen Sanderson, Clement A. Griscom, A. Maclay Pentz, Emil L. Boas, and Henry A. McGee.

Consumption Hospital Site.

The Trustees of the State Tuberculosis Hospital, who for some time past have been considering the question of a site for the hospital, have decided to recommend the selection of Raybrook, in the Adirondacks. Before their recommendation will have effect it will first have to be approved by the State Board of Health and the Forest Preserve Board.

Countess Marie Pieri Divorced.

A decree of absolute divorce has been granted to Countess Marie Pieri by Justice Lawrence from her husband, Count Pompeo Luciano Pieri. The Countess Pieri is an American girl. She was Miss Marie Schroeder, a daughter of the late H. C. J. Schroeder of this city. Miss Schroeder and the Count were married in Rome in 1894.

In Memory of Oswald Ottendorfer.

The Austrian Society of New York, at its special meeting Friday night, called for that purpose, passed resolutions in commemoration of the deeds of Oswald Ottendorfer. Similar resolutions were also passed at a meeting of St. John's Guild.

OCEAN STEAMSHIPS RACE.

Campania Slips Away from St. Louis on the High Seas.

There was a lively race between ocean liners on the Atlantic last Wednesday. The test of speed was between the American liner St. Louis and the Cunarder Campania, both of which sailed from their English terminals on the 15th. The officers and engineers of both vessels ridicule the idea that such a thing as a race occurred. "It's against the rules," they say, but the passengers tell a different story. Certain it is that the forward bunkers of the St. Louis were empty on her arrival, and it is equally certain that the officers of the Campania smiled knowingly when they learned on their arrival at the Cunard pier that the St. Louis was just off the Highlands.

For the first three or four days both vessels encountered rough weather, then the conditions moderated, and gales, high seas, and head winds were superseded by light westerly swells, accompanied by an occasional batch of fog or haze. It was 4 A. M. Wednesday when the watch on the American liner made out the port lights of the Cunarder abeam about nine miles to the north. There must have been a communication with the engineers below, for from this time apparently the race began. Morning dawned, but the red funnels of the Englishman were still on a parallel with the black, white-rimmed funnels of the American. Until evening the great ocean liners remained in signaling distance of each other. After dark the passengers of the St. Louis noticed that the lights of the Cunarder were beginning to grow dim—the Campania was slipping away. When Thursday morning dawned she was nowhere to be seen.

"It may not have been a race," said a passenger on the Campania, "but it was a very pretty friendly sprint just the same." And others expressed sentiments of similar import, not only on the Campania, but on the St. Louis as well.

BROOKLYN NEGROES VACCINATED.

Forty-five Policemen Protect Doctors Who Do the Work.

The negro colony in Gwinnett Street, Williamsburg, from Marcy Avenue to Harrison Avenue, was thrown into a panic late Friday night by the appearance of fifteen doctors attached to the Board of Health, who had gone to the colony to vaccinate the occupants. The doctors were protected by forty-five policemen. The intentions of the Board of Health was kept so quiet that not a single one of the 300 blacks who lived in the colony knew of it until the doctors and police appeared. When they sought to escape they found policemen everywhere.

In the back of the Gwinnett Street row is a rope factory. On the roof of this building half a dozen policemen were stationed, while other policemen went to the roofs of houses. When the doctors and officers arrived most of the inhabitants were asleep. When the news spread of the raid much excitement prevailed. Some went to the roofs, others to the cellars, and some tried to escape from the houses only to be driven back by the police. Force had to be used in some cases before the work could be accomplished. A family, consisting of a man, his wife, and three children were found hiding in a cellar, and others locked themselves in their rooms. Doors had to be forced open in order to get in.

The work of vaccination went steadily on from one house to another until the twenty-eight houses in the colony had been visited.

It was long after midnight before the work of the doctors was completed, and while the work was going on the police refused to permit any one to pass along the street. Many of the negroes declare that they will sue the city.

NEW STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

It Purposes to Operate Lines to All Parts of the World.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 22.—The Pan-American Steamship Company was incorporated here to-day with a capital of $5,000,000. The company proposes to operate steamship lines to all parts of the world. Of the capital stock $2,000,000 is preferred with 6 per cent. cumulative dividends.

The incorporators are Henry W. O. Edge, Herbert Barber, C. A. Jones, George B. Hopkins, and Edward O'Brien, all of Jersey City.

WEDDED AFTER A YEAR IN JAIL.

Defendant in Breach of Promise Suit Decides to Marry the Plaintiff.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Dec. 22.—Eugene Westervelt, a member of a well-known family, was defendant in a breach of promise suit about fourteen months ago, Miss Maud Earle being the plaintiff. He was ordered to pay $5,000 damages, but went to prison instead.

After being confined for a year Westervelt changed his mind and decided that he would marry Miss Earle. She was willing, and the ceremony was performed to-day in the parlor of the Sheriff's residence.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—However much one may hold the policy of our present Government in South Africa to be mistaken—and from the first I have been its uncompromising opponent—it is impossible to withhold admiration for the stolidity with which up to the present the country has faced an appalling situation. When Lord Salisbury uttered his gloomy phrases early in the week they were held at first to be the cryptic musings of a man who lives in a world of his own, only coming now and then in touch with the hard facts of existence. Subsequent events have taught us better wisdom. His lordship spoke with a full knowledge of the grave aspect of affairs in Cape Colony before any inkling of the truth had reached the nation. And now that we understand what he meant there appears so far to be no sign of hanging back in subscribing to his declaration that we have to push the affair through.

Christmas is upon us and there is no diminution in the crowds filling the streets and shops busy with their preparations for the annual festivity. If possible, the multitude seems to be even larger than usual. In all places of public resort, too, every countenance is composed and the language one hears is resolute, as if nobody for a moment entertained an idea of making terms with those rebels. None the less is the anxiety beneath the surface intense and the fear consuming lest the complications should be much greater than we are yet aware of. Should the burghers of Cape Colony rise en masse the position of our army cooped in the north and more or less continually deprived of its supplies would in the highest degree be dangerous. It, I fear, is a jaded, grumbling army, and certainly one which has used up its means of transport to the extent which private advices lead me to describe as unprecedented. Still we go doggedly on, and nothing short of a stunning calamity appears likely to alter our sullen resolution to push the thing through.

THE NATION STILL OPTIMISTIC.

While considerably alarmed, the nation as a whole continues to disbelieve in a general rising of the Cape Colony Dutch. It clings, in other words, to the uninstructed optimism it has nourished from the first, in spite of numberless disillusionments. I myself fear that the Dutch will rise, for this is quite the best time of year for them to take the field, and evidently the War Office is now beginning to realize at least the possibility of this final calamity coming upon us. Feverish activity governs its proceedings, and a ceaseless energy is being displayed in getting together what fragments of the army we still have with us. The cry is for more mounted men, but unfortunately these cannot be had to order, and, apart from a more or less ornamental household cavalry, we have now only eight regiments of horsemen of any description at home, including five regiments of the reserve.

Every man, however, will be sent, and that the world is to be scoured for horses is news that will be welcome to breeders and dealers on your side of the water, and in Australia and South America. Our existing stock of animals is well-nigh exhausted, and therefore money must be poured out in floods to restore the deficiency and again put us in a position to cope with our difficulties. The colonies are once more appealed to to send all the mounted troops they can muster, and we are sternly clinging to the resolution to fight to the last.

The most convinced imperialist, however, can hardly help now regretting that the true temper of these South African freemen was not understood before the nation was seduced by the offhand assurances of Cecil Rhodes that Kruger would climb down. With this South African coil again oppressing people's minds, it will be easy to understand how lightly we regard every other public question. Nothing really interests us apart from this.

NEW YORK CORRESPONDENCE.

I see by New York telegrams to London papers that my statement of facts regarding our attitude upon the Nicaragua Canal question has not altogether pleased some of the gentlemen on your side who enlighten us upon American affairs, or rather instruct us how we should behave toward the American Government, always, apparently in need of snubbing, according to these gentlemen. I am sorry, but it is still out of my power to speak in a manner calculated to please those who seemingly desire to create agitation here against your Congress and Government. The true facts, as I understand them, were fairly put before this country early in the week by the New York correspondent of The London Standard, and I know that his exposition gave widespread and deep satisfaction in quarters where any attention is being paid to the subject.

We are in no mood to wrangle over the clauses in any treaty with you about this canal, or anything else, at the present time. I will even go so far as to say that were the somewhat unreasonable claims to be put forward on your side with reference to the Alaska boundary it would not be from England, but from Canada that resolute opposition would come. This is not exactly indifference on our part, but preoccupation, and so completely are our thoughts engaged in other directions that no genuine outcry would arise here were you to construct the isthmian waterway and not only fortify, but make it free to your own ships while charging tolls to those of all other nations. Were we at liberty to attend to such matters, I have not the slightest doubt that the Jingo contingent would have been blowing its loudest and angriest words at what is passing between the two countries. Your lawmakers have chosen a good time in which to have their own way, but really they seem to have done no more than we should in their place.

LORD HOPETOUN'S BLUNDER.

Already there is a little hitch in the arrangements for perfecting Australian federation, but it will be got over, unless Lord Hopetoun continues to muddle matters. He is a rather maladroit person, and a good story is being told about his first public appearance at a celebration held when he came of age. The family name is Hope, and when he got up to reply to a toast drunk in his honor with enthusiasm, it is recorded that he began by saying: "This world is full of blasted hopes," and that indignant surprise took possession of his mind when he found the phrase productive of uncontrollable laughter among his guests. Sometimes a man beginning thus may go far and shine much, but I believe his lordship has ever since been a bit of a muddler, and consequently I feel no surprise to hear that the first thing he should do on landing in Australia is to select the most objectionable man he could light upon for the first Federal Premier.

Sir William Lyne has never been at heart a Federalist, nor is he really a prominent leader in the Australian democracy. If Lord Hopetoun could not have found a man to his mind among prominent politicians in the various colonies it would have been a sensible step on his part to have gone outside altogether and selected some highly respected citizen not intimately associated with any political faction. The tiff will pass, I doubt not, and the federation get under way, but there will be many little causes of friction of a similar description to be smoothed away before the new machine becomes efficient in manner and able to begin running.

ACTION OF THE FRENCH MINISTRY.

Political affairs are not going very smoothly in any part of the world in the last days of the expiring century, and this week France has discovered the futility of efforts to legislate class antagonisms out of existence. By a stupendous expenditure of energy the Waldeck-Rousseau Cabinet has forced the Dreyfus universal amnesty bill through the chambers, and doubtless imagined it had thereby laid many spectres. But the very next day it has been obliged to place a contumacious officer under arrest, and one cannot see how its effort to put a stop to the various actions of law by an overriding act of Parliament can be successful. I heartily sympathize with the spirit that has animated M. Waldeck-Rousseau and his Cabinet, but fear that its policy in this matter has been thoroughly mistaken. When cankers like the affaire Dreyfus have eaten themselves into the body social, no good purpose is ever served by endeavoring to plaster them over or drive them beneath the surface. A larger statesmanship would have limited the action of the Government to rigid neutrality and an unswerving adherence to the humble duty of maintaining order, leaving the factions to fight their lawsuits and wear themselves out in their efforts to bring about each other's confusion. But one can hardly expect this conception of duty to be readily entertained in France. The savor of absolutism still pervades French political life. The Government is an engine of authority, and not the mere servant of the people, and so high-handed courses come naturally to politicians of all types, and I shall not be surprised were the last state of this Dreyfus affair to prove worse than the first.

A "CHRISTIAN" NEWSPAPER.

Little interludes of mild amusement come occasionally to help to divert us in the mere march through a dreary period, and this week we owe a debt of gratitude to the Rev. Dr. Parker. This eminent preacher, who is endowed with histrionic powers of no mean order, undertook to edit one of the evening papers for a single week. It was to be done in a manner designed to exhibit to a benighted metropolis how real Christians would turn out newspapers if they had things all their own way. I am afraid the doctor has only succeeded in making himself the object of mild ridicule. The paper in question is controlled by a gentleman whose reputation rests upon the almost unequaled faculty for manufacturing and launching what may be described as "meoncalf," joint stock companies, and aerial fabrics generally without substance or serious object, except to extract money from the pockets of dupes. Therefore, along with Dr. Parker's lucubrations upon the evils of horse racing and kindred social topics, the paper contained flaming advertisements of some of the latest of these new companies, and its news items were made up of the usual police court garbage, familiar enough to us here, but unknown, I believe, among respectable newspapers in the United States. So there has been much pleasant laughter around the incident, but perhaps this will please the divine quite as much as an abundance of praise. He likes notoriety above all things, and believes in himself with an intensity that sometimes, I fear, jostles his reverence for the Deity. His posturing character may fairly enough be guessed from a story about him which must be true because it was told me with infinite gusto by a brother cleric.

One day after preaching Dr. Parker was waited upon in the vestry by a man anxious to have some words with him about a point of faith he was bothered by. Ushered into the orator's presence, the anxious inquirer found him seated at a table in a dramatic attitude with his head resting on one hand. No sooner had the intruder begun to speak than the doctor raised his eyes and waved his free hand, dismissing him with the words: "I canot hear you now. My great brain is on fire."

MORE PEERS TO BE CREATED.

Arthur H. Smith Barry, Who Married Mrs. Post of New York, Will Probably Be One of Them.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—Another American woman is likely to be soon elevated to the British Peerage, as Lord Salisbury intends to recognize the Right Hon. Arthur Hugh Smith Barry's services to his party by putting him in the House of Lords. Mr. Smith Barry married the widow of Arthur Post of New York, whose sister, Mrs. Adair, is also well known in London society.

Others mentioned for a Peerage include Henry Cosmo Orme Bonser, Chairman of the Southeastern Railroad, and James Lowther, M. P.

Lord Salisbury has already created nearly ninety Peers. If the present rate is kept up the upper house will soon be in numerical superiority to the Commons.

SOUVENIRS OF RUBINSTEIN.

Objects Forming Nucleus of a Rubinstein Museum Exhibited in St. Petersburg.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 10.—Pious hands have gathered together a number of souvenirs of Anton Rubinstein and established the nucleus of a Rubinstein Museum at the St. Petersburg Conservatory. In spite of stormy weather, two or three score of faithful friends and admirers of the dead musician accepted invitations to a private view yesterday.

The articles, of which there are now about 230 numbered ready for cataloguing, fill a small salon. It is believed that if other countries were ransacked there would be found equally as many and as interesting reminders of the great pianist. The present collection appears to have been made almost exclusively in this city. There were a multitude of silver wreaths, palms of oxidized silver and of gold, golden wreaths, presentation ribbons, batons of ivory, silver, and gold. The walls are covered with engrossed addresses, portraits and pictures of the houses where Rubinstein lived and labored.

Among the more personally interesting objects are the hat and the cane of his last years, a cast of his right hand, and his familiar enameled, white grand piano. The most interesting picture is a photograph of the year 1852. The best bust is a life-size marble figure made in Rubinstein's old age. There is also a marble bust of Helen Paviolf. One of the most costly articles is a complete writing table set in the celebrated gold enamel ware of this city.

"YANKEE CITY OF BRAZIL"

Sao Paulo, So-Called for Its Surprising Push and Activity.

BIG HYDRAULIC POWER PLANT

Town to Have 150 Miles of Modern Railway Constructed by Americans.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Oct. 31.—Sao Paulo is called the "Yankee City of Brazil." It is a surprise to the traveling American to find among the mountains of southern Brazil a town so thriving and so full of local push and activity as to suggest naturally an American character.

The place has grown in an astonishing way. The population in 1872 was 20,000. It is now given on the best authority as fully 240,000, and it is growing more rapidly than ever before. The causes of this development would make a very interesting study, but it is one rather too intricate for casual treatment. No doubt the improvement of the port of Santos, with a modern system of docks and the building and improvement of what is popularly called the "English" railway, from Santos to Sao Paulo and up through the fertile coffee and agricultural district to the northwest, together with the indigenous advantages of climate and resources, is sufficient to account for a development that to the uninformed stranger might otherwise seem phenomenal.

Situated some fifty miles from the eastern coast of Brazil, on the mountainous plateau that skirts the entire seaboard of this section, at an elevation of 2,200 feet, the surrounding region has one of the finest climates in the world. The Summer heat is rarely intense, and severe frost is equally rare in Winter. North, west, and south lie regions of vast natural agricultural wealth, as yet but meagrely cultivated, although two or three staples have been the source of fortunes for generations.

The title of "Yankee City" has no particular reference to a New England origin of the business activity of the city, but rather to its push and enterprise in a general sense. In fact, the natives of Britain, whether of Scotch, English, Irish, or Colonial extraction, have with characteristic shrewdness selected this location as the seat of future commercial power. The genuine Yankee element is present, however, and if in small force is usually, as should be the case, reaching for large and general results in a cosmopolitan way.

Brazil has no coal, a deficiency that characterizes South America generally, the Chilean mines furnishing a quality so poor as to be used only under conditions of necessity. This lack of the most essential practical leverage of modern mechanics affords, no doubt, a sufficient explanation why one of the richest parts of the world in natural resources has been so slow to attract investors. It has cost tremendously to develop any enterprise in Brazil based upon the consumption of fuel to produce.

HYDRAULICS IN PLACE OF COAL.

This condition, in connection with the advantages of electrical power as recently improved and adapted to manufacturing, traction, and lighting, has led to a consideration of hydraulics as a substitute for coal in this section. Brazil has excellent resources of this kind, particularly in the numerous rivers that intersect her mountainous Southern States. These rivers maintain an unusual constant flow, owing to the plentiful rain and moisture and the excessive vegetation, which characterizes their mountain sources, and which is renewed as rapidly as it can be destroyed. Brazil thus has a cheap substitute afforded by nature for its lack of coal, and the progress of electrical science has at last made this available.

It is to American engineering, science, and progress in electrical mechanics that the first important step toward developing this source of wealth is due. It seems rather surprising to learn that among the mountains of Southern Brazil is now being constructed one of the largest, as well as most complete and up-to-date hydraulic power plants for developing electrical energy in the world. Yet such is the fact. This plant will be completed within a year, and when in operation will have no rival in actual horsepower outside of the United States, and will be equalled by but three or four in that land of large enterprises.

The operations are being conducted by the Sao Paulo Railway, Light and Power Company, limited, which, in short, has a power plant at that city and operates several lines of street cars, and is introducing electric lighting and power on an extensive scale. It is to enlarge the scope of its operations that this energetic corporation is erecting a great hydraulic and electric power plant at Parahyba, distant some twenty-two miles northwest of Sao Paulo.

The River Parahyba rises among the mountains about 100 miles northeast of Sao Paulo, and debouches into the ocean some 150 miles north of Rio de Janeiro, at S. Jeao da Barva. At Parahyba, an ancient Brazilian village, it is a wide and brawling stream, with a fall that gives it energy in times of flood to tumble about boulders weighing many tons as if they were pebbles. The enterprise of using this splendid water power owes its practical application to F. S. Pierson, consulting engineer of the Metropolitan Traction Company of New York. The power house now nearly completed at Parahyba is intended to do away with the expensive production of electrical energy from coal at Sao Paulo, and eventually to supply both that city and Santos, its port, with as perfect a system of electric lighting, traction, and power as modern science can afford. When the installation at Parahyba is complete it will develop 16,000 horse power, of which 8,000 horse power will be available within a year.

150 MILES OF TROLLEY LINE.

The immediate result of this enterprise will be to give Sao Paulo 150 miles of the most modern electric trolley railway, and to place it in advance of any South American city in this particular. The design, construction, and material will all be American, and put in under American supervision.

The cars being supplied are all of the highest class American construction, and all other features of the system are American. In addition the General Electric Company of New York, through its agents in Brazil, are installing a grand system of electric lighting for the city and electric power where needed, all to be supplied from the Parahyba power house. The plans of the company also contemplate the eventual supplying of similar advantages to the City of Santos, sixty-five miles distant, on the Atlantic Coast.

The work at Parahyba was started in August, 1899, under direction of Hugh L. Cooper, engineer in charge of construction. The first operation, after laying the plans, was to clear up some hundreds of acres of dense jungle and forest, and to build a good wagon road to Bakuery, the nearest railroad station. Altogether some sixteen miles of good road have been built, and more than 1,300 acres of the wildest sort of tropical jungle cleared.

The constructive work involves the building of two dams, one 800 feet and the other 300 feet in length, the laying of a pipe line 2,400 feet in length and 12 feet in diameter, and the building of a power house, with foundations and a structure for the hydraulic machinery. The main dam, which crosses the Farahyba River, is 800 feet in length, and will form a lake eight miles in length and in places half a mile wide, winding among most novel and beautiful scenery. The main dam will have an average head of 38 feet, and its greatest height is 57 feet.

The second, or reservoir dam, is of equally solid construction, and a splendid feature of the work is the pipe line, 2,400 feet in length and 12 feet in diameter, connecting the two reservoirs. This pipe line has no equal in the world, 2,000 tons of steel plate having been used in its construction.

The engineering throughout has involved many important problems, which have been met with great boldness and skill. The treacherous Parahyba, invested by the aborigines with malevolent powers because of its violence at times, has been shifted about and diverted from channel to channel by cofferdams as the work proceeded, and the power house has been planted in its very bed and on the scene of its past uncontrolled power.

A most interesting problem of modern hydraulic engineering is here for the first time being worked out on a large scale. To insure a uniform pressure at the water wheels the double reservoir system has been adopted, with connecting pipe line, as before described. The power house is placed at the foot of the second or reservoir dam, which has a head of 77 feet. The water is conveyed to the wheels through an 8-foot pipe line, which, being short, admits of the easy manipulation of the wheels. Each water engine will have a capacity of 2,000 horse power, and will revolve at the rate of 200 revolutions per minute. By this method of main and supply reservoirs, a constant energy is maintained, no more water than is actually needed being at any time allowed to enter the supply reservoir.

The total cost of hydraulic construction, independent of the electrical machinery, will not be less than $1,500,000.

The work at Parahyba will stand when completed as a monument of solid and well designed construction, and it can be safely said will be unsurpassed in the world for the thoroughness in which every detail is worked out. Mr. Cooper, the engineer in charge, was given carte blanche as to expense, the only requirement being that he should secure the best attainable result.

Altogether the outlay of the Sao Paulo Railway, Light and Power Company will not be less than $7,000,000 when its works at Parahyba and in the city are completed, and this expenditure will be doubled when the Santos installation is effected. It is impossible to estimate the effect of this enterprise upon the future of Brazil. That it will prove a tremendous lever, both in practice and example, toward modernizing and developing a magnificent section cannot be doubted.

BLOW AT LONDON EDUCATION.

Decision that School Board Cannot Pay for Teaching Science and Art to Adults Causes Alarm.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—A decision of the Queen's Bench Division, declaring it to be illegal for the London School Board to spend the ratepayers' money for teaching science and art at evening classes for adults, has created perturbation. Some 90,000 pupils are affected, and the whole of London's educational system must be reorganized if the House of Lords upholds the verdict.

The Speaker declares it is the most serious disaster which has befallen education for some time. Columns of comment appear on the subject in the daily papers. Other large cities are seriously concerned, as they all have classes similar to those of London.

The head masters of expensive schools appear to approve of the decision, maintaining that the School Board is endangering the existence of the secondary schools.

"INTELLECTUAL TYRANNY."

The Spectator Comments on the Dismissal of Prof. Ross of Stanford University.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—"Upward of two years ago," says The Spectator, "the Americans were scandalized by the dismissal of President Andrews of Brown University," and the paper proceeds to draw a lengthy parallel with the case of Prof. Ross of the Stanford University.

In so doing, The Spectator holds to the claim that moneyed power endowing institutions in order to control learning is entirely fatal to the very idea of a university; remarks that the wealth of the American universities and the generosity of American public men are splendid; says no doubt some of the donations involve loss of freedom, and adds:

"A certain commercial atmosphere now envelops some of the universities. We would rather see Oxford and Cambridge poor and free than rich and shackled. If a few trust millionaires are to have their way economic truth cannot be reached in some, at least, of the American universities. It would, indeed, be a sad thing were America, with her free political life, to permit any kind of intellectual tyranny to raise its head in her midst."

INFLUENZA IN ST. PETERSBURG.

Mortality Returns the Highest in the Past Ten Years.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 22.—The influenza epidemic here is so severe that the mortality returns for the last week have been the highest for a decade. The disease has swept the city, and every office has vacant desks and every private table has or has had vacant chairs.

A meeting of physicians was summoned to discuss remedies, but scarcely half a dozen responded to the call, the rest being overworked, or themselves being victims of the malady. The weather is conducive to the spread of the disorder, being changeable, with snow and slush alternating.

MRS. MAYBRICK'S CHANCES.

Lord Halsbury Said to be Bitterly Opposed to Her Release.

LONDON, Dec. 22. — Once again Mrs. Florence Maybrick spends an unhappy Christmas in her prison cell. In spite of the various reports, her chances of liberty are no brighter than last year.

Secretary Hay has forwarded to Mr. Choate several private letters, which will shortly be presented to the new Home Secretary, Mr. Ritchie, in accordance with the custom of approaching each new occupant of that office. But it is reported that there is no chance of anything being done so long as Lord Halsbury is Lord High Chancellor. Lord Halsbury apparently made the Maybrick case the basis of a feud with the late Lord Chief Justice, Baron Russell of Killowen, and cherishes it just as bitterly now as before Lord Russell's death. When a new Chancellor is appointed, Mrs. Maybrick will have a good chance of freedom.

The Duchess of Bedford, who is reported to be especially interested in Mrs. Maybrick, states that she only sees the celebrated prisoner in the course of her regular visits to Aylesbury Prison, not especially in the interest of her case, and does not intend to express any opinion of her guilt or innocence.

London Club Forbids Bridge.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—A sensation has been caused by one of the foremost London clubs prohibiting the game of bridge within the precincts of the club. The committee declares this is the only course by which it can preserve harmony, disputes having become so frequent over the question of rules. It is rumored that the rows have developed blows. Bridge is so new that its varying rules create endless differences of opinion, causing more dissentions in clubland than existed at the time of the Home Rule bill discussion, considering that bridge is by far the most popular card game of the day. It is played extensively by royalty and in almost every country house, generally for high stakes. The club's decision has come in for a lot of criticism.

Germany's Designs in Western Asia.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 22.—Taking the unconfirmed rumor that Germany and Turkey have signed a pearl fisheries convention in regard to the Persian Gulf for its text, the Novoe Vremya urges that the Russian Government exercise eternal watchfulness upon Germany's progress and designs in the nearer Orient, declaring her industrial and commercial activity is a cloak for political plans.

Conservative Wins By-Election.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—Worsley Taylor (Conservative) has been elected to represent the Blackpool Division of Lancashire in the House of Commons, in succession to the Right Hon. Sir Matthew White Ridley, who was Home Secretary in the late Ministry and who has been elevated to the Peerage with the title of Viscount Ridley. In this by-election the Conservative majority was cut in half. In the late general election Sir Matthew was unopposed.

Steamers for Chinese Coast Trade.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 10.—The East Chinese Railroad, the prolongation of the Siberian Railroad, has ordered six steamers for the Chinese coast trade. Two will be built at Rostock, two at Trieste, and the others at Grabow, near Stettin, Germany. They will be utilized until the railroad is completed in the transportation of material for its construction.

Advises Sugar Production in Siberia.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 10.—The Journal of Commerce and Industry recommends capitalists to turn their attention to sugar production in Siberia. It regards this industry as more remunerative than mining, and thinks all the necessary conditions for success are to be found in the Government of Yeniseisk, where one factory was actually operated from 1888 to 1898.

ANGLO-FRENCH CLASH FEARED.

Treaty Coast Modus Vivendi Expires Dec. 31—Newfoundland Demands Favorable New Arrangement.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Dec. 22.—On the last day of December the Anglo-French modus vivendi respecting the Newfoundland treaty coast expires, and this, it is expected, will create serious complications between these two powers.

It is highly unlikely that the Newfoundland Legislature will consent to renew the present arrangement, in which case grave friction will probably ensue unless Great Britain makes another arrangement with France. The colony's position, however, is so strong with the British public that such arrangement must be decidedly favorable to Newfoundland.

MEXICAN BEGGARS ON STRIKE.

Protest Against a Regulation Calling for Proof of Inability to Support Themselves.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

CITY OF MEXICO, Dec. 10.—The beggars in this city are not going to be left behind in the march of progress and reform. Righteous indignation surges in their ragcovered, unwashed bosoms, and they have gone on strike.

A meeting held in one of the public gardens was attended by the most prominent and influential members of the craft. After setting forth their wrongs, a commission was appointed to present a petition to the Governor of the Federal District, asking that the edict concerning them be rescinded. The edict was as follows:

"No beggars allowed who cannot prove themselves to be entirely without other means of support. No beggars of any kind allowed on the streets in the central parts of the city."

No one not a beggar can imagine the effect of this official decree on one of the most flourishing industries in Mexico. At any time it would have caused consternation, but coming as it did at the beginning of the tourist season it was simply unbearable.

The man whose face is burned beyond all semblance to humanity may have to abandon his place on the sidewalk, simply because he may happen to have a sturdy son able to support him, and the whining, teasing, hideous woman carried about on a man's back, imploring charity in the name of all the saints, may find that the man can support her in even greater luxury by digging in the ditches. The miserable, dirty wretches, men and women, covered with rags and parasites, that infest the city, may now enjoy a bath and change of raiment, even a change of headquarters from the cathedral doors, without fear of losing caste.

There is, however, no reform without its drawback. The sores and open places may now be allowed to heal, having no mercantile value. Miss the miserable, sickening creatures? Of course they will be missed—gladly missed—but the stumpy, jolly little woman who passes part of every day in front of the Church of Santa Brigida, what of her? Her fate is in the balance, and her friends are trembling lest it be found that she, too, has other means of support. For she is a popular character, and deprived of the social advantages she now enjoys, what will become of her? A shower never incommodes her, as she has a big straw hat which she placidly puts on the end of a stick and hoists as an umbrella. She is always chewing and laughing and praying, with her little fat dog and woven basket close beside her. She is a reader of character, too, and criticises the passers-by whose faces she has learned to know. "Ay, Dios, his ticket must have fallen well in the lottery yesterday, he swings his cane so high"; "Bless you, Nina, for giving to the poor." So she rattles on, stopping suddenly to pray rapidly as some one draws near, and sinking her voice to the proper note of appeal. Will this happy-go-lucky old woman turn out to be a millionaire in disguise, as did one favorite beggar not long ago who had been helped for years?

Aristocratic in their ideas, the mendigos of Mexico actually despite the tourist. For example, two young Mexicans in European dress stood looking in a large show window, when two brown little beggars slipped between them and the glass and pleaded: "Meester, gif me wan leetly cent."

The speaker was about six years old, and had been drilled in his part. The young men looked down at them, and the urchins saw their mistake. The gentlemen were not "Meesters," but Señores. The older boy, about nine, exclaimed: "Panchito! They are not turistas, but decent folk!" and he dragged the little boy away.

OLD STYLE ENGLISH CHRISTMAS.

Custom of a Dance in Servants' Hall to be Revived in Many Houses.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—There will be a merry Christmas in England, though London is already one of the dullest spots in the United Kingdom. The fashionable world has incontinently deserted the metropolis and sought refuge in the country places.

There will be such a round of house parties as has been unknown for several years. They will be accompanied by the revival of the queer, old customs which, a century ago, made the season the occasion for unrestrained merrymaking among rich and poor alike. It would seem that those who are able to celebrate realize the necessity for detracting public attention from the events in South Africa.

At Osborne, the Queen will be surrounded by the Duke and Duchess of York, Princess Henry of Battenberg, and several grandchildren. At Sandringham, the Prince of Wales will entertain the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and their children with royal Christmas trees. Welbeck Abbey, Blenheim Palace, Hatfield House, and all the stately homes of England's aristocracy are filling up with scores of guests prepared to make the most of Yuletide. Balls, amateur theatricals, and entertainments without end have been arranged, conspicuous among which is the old English custom of a dance in the servants' hall.

At the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire's, Earl and Countess Spencer's, the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry's, and other places Christmas Eve will be marked by the strange spectacle of butlers dancing with Duchesses, footmen with Countesses, and grooms with the daughters. Earls, while ladies' maids, chambermaids, and cooks will have as partners Cabinet Ministers and other male heads of illustrious families. The ancient practice of the land owners enjoying the servants' quadrille had almost lapsed, except in the case of a few families.

The revival is perhaps no little due to the increasing necessity for pampering the British servant. The onlooker says the householders now have to study the comfort of their domestics as much as their own, and quotes one country house where a set of rooms is specially allotted to them for recreation, comprising a ballroom, music room, library, and billiard room. In the last-named a marker is kept for the servants' sole use.

America's Commercial Successes.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—America's commercial rivalry has been forming the basis for long analytical articles in The Daily Express and The Daily Mail, written by engineering and other experts, which retail the results of recent trips to the United States under the headlines: "Wake Up, England!" "Why Are We Falling Behind?" &c. The authors reiterate that the British manufacturers lack initiative and are absurd in their conservatism. Their argument is summed up in the following paragraph in one of the articles: "If the foregoing facts are unpalatable, it is better they should be known than that the nation should continue to dream on in a fool's paradise until the next cycle of bad trade, when we may find our markets in the possession of others."

British Artists' Union Planned.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—That dilettante class, the artists, are joining the ranks of organized labor. Headed by Alma-Tadema, a group of well-known artists, including Prinsep, Dicksee, Stone, and Fildes, are sending out circulars to their brethren urging the formation of a professional union on lines similar to those of the Society of Authors. They hope to get 700 members to pay a guinea each. The especial object of the organization will be watching the business interests of struggling painters. "As it is now," says Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, "the successful painter cares and troubles little about his less successful brothers. But, given an association with common interests, the young, unknown man has an infinitely better chance of forwarding both his own interests and those of his profession."

DEATH OF GEORGE R. RHODES.

Former Police Inspector Stricken with Cerebral Apoplexy — Thirty Years a Policeman.

Ex-Police Inspector George R. Rhodes, who had been doing duty on the police force in Greenpoint for thirty years, and who was retired on May 4 at his own request, died from cerebral apoplexy at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at his residence, 127 Milton Avenue, Brooklyn. He was stricken on Friday as he entered his house, after returning from a long walk.

Mr. Rhodes was born in New York on Feb. 3, 1824, and was the son of Foster Rhodes, for many years Naval Constructor to the Sultan of Turkey. He spent two years of his early life in Constantinople, and, returning to the United States, was educated at Dr. Hanks's Academy for Boys in Flushing, L. I., where he was a classmate of Thomas F. Bayard, ex-Secretary of State. In 1857 he was appointed a patrolman on the old Metropolitan police of Brooklyn, and in 1860, through political influence, was made a Roundsman, a Sergeant, and then a Captain. He was on duty in South Brooklyn, and afterward helped to suppress the draft riots in New York. In 1870 he was legislated out of office, but was reinstated by a decision of court. He was made an Inspector and transferred to Greenpoint. He leaves a widow and a daughter, Mrs. Willard Smiffin. She is the only survivor of seven children. The recent ill-health of the ex-Inspector was due largely to the loss of his two sons, George R. and William J. Rhodes, who were lawyers, and died three years ago.

GOV. ROOSEVELT A MASON.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., Dec. 22.—It was learned to-night that Gov. Roosevelt has been elected a member of Matinnecock Lodge, No. 806, F. and A. M., of Oyster Bay. The matter was kept quiet until an invitation was issued to members of the local lodge and many prominent Masons throughout the country to attend a "stated communication" to be held Wednesday, Jan. 2, 1901, at 7:30 P. M., when the first degree will be conferred upon Theodore Roosevelt.

After the ceremonies there will be a dinner, and it is expected that prominent Masons from all over the country will be present.

Anglo-American Association Sued.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Walter F. Sidall and Harry A. Beck to-day began suit against the Anglo-American Savings and Loan Association of New York, asking the district Supreme Court to appoint a receiver to take charge of the affairs of the organization and also for an injunction to restrain the officers of the association from interfering with the Receiver. The complainants declare that they are stockholders in the organization; that the interest is in default on certain deeds of trust, and that their interests are endangered. James H. Claggett and eleven others filed similar suits in equity yesterday, asking for a receiver and for the sale of certain real estate.

IMP NOT TO BE RETIRED

The Old Race Mare Now at a Chilicothe Stock Farm.

LONG AND HARD CAMPAIGN

Record of the Great Horse for the Last Five Years—$82,254.50 She Won in Purses.

The announcement, widely published, that the great old race mare Imp has been permanently retired from the race track is premature. The black heroine of five seasons of racing is now at the farm of the man who bred her, D. R. Harness, at Chilicothe, Ohio, in Winter quarters, jaded by a long and hard campaign, but sound as the proverbial bell of brass and with every prospect of standing training for one or more seasons. No horse ever raced so long and finished with feet and legs in better condition, and the only question to be considered in regard to her ability to win races in 1901 concerns the popular old mare's inclination to run. Imp was reported broken down every few weeks last season, when, as a matter of fact, her only ailment was an abrasion where she had bruised a pastern, an injury that was purely temporary. She won races even while the wound was healing, and there was never a time when the injury threatened to damage in any way her racing quality.

Imp's retirement from racing rests solely with Charles Brossman, her trainer, who, under a contract with Mr. Harness, has a half interest in the old mare's racing qualities, with the option of training her as long as he desires. Brossman has had charge of Imp through her entire career on the turf, and he was a successful trainer in the days before Imp took her first swig the night of day; but, notwithstanding, he came in for a great share of abuse for alleged incapacity and cruelty in keeping the popular mare going each time that the story of her alleged breakdown was renewed. Even worse things were said about him in connection with Imp's eccentricities in form, but it is questionable whether any other trainer in the world could have raced the mare an equal number of times with greater success. She might have been beaten fewer times, had she been "placed," or, in other words, had easy races picked for her, while evading meeting the best horses; but it is Imp's greatest glory, and the chief reason for her popularity, that when she was ready to run she met all comers, and declined no struggle, no matter what were the odds. It was for that cause and no other that victorious or vanquished there were always cheers for the gallant black from Ohio, and that an outburst of applause always greeted her appearance on the race track. Shrewdly managed, she might have had a smaller proportion of defeats, but no management could have gained for her greater honors than she earned, carrying all kinds of weights, against the best horses of her time, and always rendering a good account of herself. As the first mare that ever achieved victory in one of the great Spring handicaps, her fame is established aside from her truly remarkable turf career, and the public triumphs which it saw her divide whether she were the greatest as a sprinter, in middle distances, or over a cup course. Imp, in her five years on the turf, has run more than 150 races, but except that she raced vastly better her career has not been harder than those of Geraldine, Yo Tambien, Maud Marsan, and Los Angeles, nor has she run as many races as Bessie Bisland, yet those mares were not considered as ill-treated.

IMP AS GOOD AS EVER.

Before his departure for Ohio, Trainer Brossman said, in explanation of Imp's vagaries in her races:

"She has as much speed now, and can carry it as far as she ever could in her life, but there is always the question upon of whether she feels inclined to do all she can. Five years of racing has made her cranky, and the kinks have grown much how to keep on trying it it does not suit her. In every way she is as sound and hearty as she was the first day I put a bridle on her, and to the last of the season, when she was feeling fresh and good in the morning she would work as fast for me as any one could ask. It came to another matter in her races, however. If she got away well and was permitted to go on and race her own way it would take the best horse in the world to live with her, and as long as she felt like running I do not believe any horse could beat her. She did not like to be bustled away from the post, and hustled along, and jockeys who rode her that way made her stop as often as did any other cause. But let her go away, her rider sitting back with a good hold on her, permitting her to get into her stride, and go on against the bit, and she would run all day. No one could know Imp better than I do, and that was one reason that I did not often put up crack jockeys. They would too often insist on riding the mare as they thought she ought to be ridden. What I wanted was a rider who would follow my orders, and when I got that sort of rider Imp usually won. I was abused and criticised for putting up so-called 'bad riders,' but a glance over Imp's record will show that she won oftener with those boys, who obeyed instructions, than she did with crack jockeys, who thought they knew more about the mare than I did."

Imp's record for the five years that she has raced is particularly interesting as compared with the records of some of the so-called "iron horses" of the past ten years. Bankrupt in fourteen years ran 344 races and won fifty. Logan ran 385 times in nine seasons and won 80 races. Charade, a good horse, ran 141 races and won 30. Geraldine, famous in her time, ran in 119 races and was 43 times first. These quite frequently met the very commonest horses in training on small and obscure tracks. Imp, on the other hand, has always aimed high. Wherever she raced, she met the best company there, and for three seasons her racing has been on the best tracks in the country. In her five years of racing she has started 154 times and won first money in 58 races; her victories averaging something better than one in three, while she has failed to earn some part of the money in only 38 races. It is not in the least remarkable that she is popular. Her popularity, in fact, exceeds that of probably any horse that ever raced, even including the famous The Bard, concerning whose illness public interest was so great that the newspapers published bulletins stating his progress toward recovery in the manner customary when a great public man is ill.

Should Imp really be retired from the turf she will be sadly missed by the general populace, for she is the best known horse that has raced in many years, and thousands upon thousands of occasional racegoers are indebted to the old black mare for profitable and pleasant holidays, for among her peculiarities Imp had the one of running her best races on holidays. She undoubtedly loved the large crowds and excitement of such occasions, and the louder and more continued the shouts of her admirers the better she seemed to perform. When mingled with other cries, the shout "Let her sleep!" in sing-song hallo, is heard, the effect actually seems to stimulate the Ohio mare. It is a pet idea of the young negro who is Imp's special attendant and rubber that she goes to sleep when racing, and if permitted to keep on sleeping will continue to race her fastest until she is aroused. That may not be strictly true, but the notion has caught the public fancy, and last year the public grew into the habit of singing with the black rubber, Tom Tardy, "Let her sleep, don't wake her up," until the refrain echoed around the race course. Some few other horses have won more money than Imp, but few have ever earned such a record as hers. Following is a condensed table of the mare's doings on the turf, East and West, in the five years of her career:

HORSEMAN CONDEMNED.

New Orleans Stewards Decide Against the Mare Donna Rita and Her Trainer.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 22.—The Stewards this afternoon announced their conclusion in the case of the mare Donna Rita and the stable of T. Licalzi, suspended on Dec. 17. After an exhaustive investigation the Stewards decided to give Licalzi the benefit of any existing doubt and remove the ban announced against the stable, "with the understanding that no consideration will be given the mare Donna Rita for inconsistent racing." W. Hurley, the suspended trainer, is held responsible for the in-and-out performances of the mare, which are attributed to the use or non-use of stimulants, and his suspension is continued indefinitely, and the License Committee of the American Turf Congress is urged to revoke his license forthwith. Jockey Bradford is fully exonerated.

The usual Saturday stake was the $2,000 Crescent City handicap at a mile and an eighth, for which imp, Mint Sauce, was made favorite, backed from 4 to 1 to 7 to 2. Knight Banneret was the ring's choice at the opening, but his allotted weight was deemed too much, and the talent refused him. Mint Sauce had no rivals. In the first furlong he opened up a gap which he speedily widened until at the end he led his field by eight lengths. Grey Daisy was the only other winning favorite. Weather fine and track slow. Summaries:

Six furlongs—Grey Daisy, 103, (Postel,) 1; Valdez, 105, 2; Porter B., 105, 3. Time—1:18.¾. One mile and a sixteenth—Star Cotton, 87, (Cochran,) 1; Orchard Cassidy, 96, 2; Brown Vail, 96, 3. Sloan May Ride, Conditionally.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 22.—J. T. Sloan to-day made application to the San Francisco Jockey Club for a jockey's license. In accordance with the rules of the San Francisco Jockey Club, which authorize granting a jockey's license to riders holding at the time of their application a license from any reputable association, Sloan's request was granted, but he was notified that the license was subject to the pending actions of the New York Jockey Club, from which he holds a license, concerning certain limitations from the English Jockey Club involving his riding in England in 1901.

Another Race Track for St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 22.—St. Louis is to have another race track, and its projectors claim it will rank with the best race courses in the country. A tract of 6,426 acres of land on Delmar Avenue, just outside the city limits, has been bought by J. G. Cella of Chicago and Joseph Adler of Fort Smith, Ark. The Bonhomme Park Jockey Club will be incorporated for $150,000, and all of that and perhaps more will be spent in the construction of the plant.

GYMNASTIC DIRECTORS TO MEET.

The Annual Convention of the Association to be Held at Columbia University.

An important meeting of college gymnasium Directors will be held at Columbia University on Friday and Saturday of this week. The occasion is the annual convention of the American College Gymnasium Directors' Association, which was organized to promote gymnastics and athletics in the various American institutions of learning.

President Seth Low will welcome the Directors to Columbia, after which Dr. Anderson of Yale, President of the association, will make his annual report. An interesting series of papers and discussions have been prepared as follows: "On the Advisability of Determining the Physical Condition of Candidates for Gymnastic and Athletic Exercise," by Dr. Jay W. Seaver of Yale. Dr. Miller of the University of Pennsylvania, and Dr. Watson L. Savage of Columbia; "Strength Tests and the Inspection of Instruments," by Dr. Dudley S. Sargent of Harvard. Dr. Jay W. Seaver of Yale, and Dr. Watson L. Savage of Columbia; "On the Adoption of a Uniform Terminology for Gymnastic Exercise," by Dr. Anderson of Yale; "Credit for Gymnastic Training in College Work," by Dr. Lambeth of Haverford. Dr. Paul C. Phillips of Amherst, and Dr. MacKenzie of McGill University, Montreal; "The Relationship Between the Departments of Gymnastics and Athletics," by Frederick Marvel of Wesleyan and Dr. Anderson of Yale; "On a New Manual of Anthropometry," by Dr. Edward Hitchcock of Amherst; "On Sprinters—Physical Measurements and Deductions," by Dr. Paul C. Phillips of Amherst.

Dr. MacKenzie of McGill will deliver a special lecture, illustrated by lantern slides, on "Strain, Breathlessness, and Fatigue as Shown in the Face."

After the reading of the papers, general discussion of the topics treated will be the order. All arrangements are in the hands of Dr. Watson L. Savage of Columbia, and the meeting gives promise of being the most noteworthy of its kind yet held. The officers of the association are as follows: President—Dr. Anderson of Yale; Vice President—Dr. MacKenzie of McGill; Secretary and Treasurer—Dr. Watson L. Savage of Columbia; Executive Committee—Dr. Miller of the University of Pennsylvania, and Dr. Paul C. Phillips of Amherst.

YALE TEAMS FOR BUFFALO.

Pan-American Exposition Directors Want the Blue's Athletes to Compete.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Dec. 22.—Invitations have been received by the assistant managers of all the Yale athletic organizations to take part in the carnival of sports arranged by the Buffalo Exposition Committee for this coming Summer and next Fall. It is the plan of the Pan-American Exposition Athletic Committee to make the year an interesting one in the athletic line, and all of the large Eastern universities have been invited to send their teams to compete. To Yale the invitation has been unusually pressing. The committee desires to have all of the Yale athletic organizations appear in the carnival during the progress of the fair, and unusually attractive offers have been made to get them there. It is hardly likely, however, that any of the Yale teams except perhaps the track team and baseball team will accept.

An invitation has been sent to the Yale crew to go to Buffalo and row against several leading college crews, but as the Yale crew will have its hands full getting ready for the Harvard race, and, as after that hard preparation it will be difficult to get the crew back into condition for another race, the Yale managers have refused the offer. It has also been suggested to Yale and Princeton that the annual football game between the two universities, which is scheduled for this city next Fall, will also be transferred to Buffalo, but Yale has emphatically stated that this will be impossible. How Princeton looks at the proposition is not known. The baseball team has been approached and may play in Buffalo during the exhibition with one of the leading university teams, though this is not at all assured. Yale's baseball season ends with the commencement game with Harvard, and while the men may like to play another series the Faculty may object.

The Yale track team is the most likely to accept the Buffalo offer. This team will be in condition after the Spring meet to begin practice for the all-American meet, and it is partly assured now that the Buffalo trip will be taken.

Adelphi Defeats Erasmus Hall.

Good service in the championship handball tournament of the Long Island Interscholastic Athletic League won for the wearers of the canary and brown stripes yesterday morning over the Erasmus Hall High School team in the handball championship tournament of the Long Island League. The scores follow:

E. Humpstone, Adelphi Academy, defeated G. C. Willis, Erasmus Hall High School, 21 points to 4.

J. H. Van Loan, Erasmus Hall High School, defeated Robert Kelley, Adelphi Academy, 21 points to 15.

Adelphi Academy won eight games; Erasmus Hall High School won one. Umpires—Roger Mason, Adelphi Academy, and H. S. McNulty, Erasmus Hall High School.

SPEEDWAY BRUSH PROTEST

Alice Barnes's Owner Claimed a Foul Against The Monk.

MR. GERKEN REFUSED TO RACE

Judge Walker Ruled Against The Monk, but His Owner Claimed a Victory Over the Mare.

The match race between the fast little trotting mare Alice Barnes, 2:11½, owned by E. E. Smathers, and "Fred" Gerken's trotter The Monk, 2:08½, on the Harlem River Speedway yesterday afternoon, ended in a very unsatisfactory manner, Mr. Gerken claiming a victory and Mr. Smathers declaring there was a foul. Frank Walker, the well-known Grand Circuit starter, who acted as judge at the finish, admitted the claim of foul, and ordered another heat. There was a difference of opinion as to the justness of this ruling, and Mr. Gerken refused to start again, claiming that he had held the lead on Alice Barnes from the start, and that if Mr. Smathers got pocketed it was his own fault. Mr. Smathers was willing to start again, and said that he did not think Mr. Gerken was playing fair by refusing to abide by the judge's decision. Neither driver would give in and the party dispersed after a very heated discussion at "The Club," where there was talk of $10,000 match races between the two trotters.

The crowd that journeyed to the Speedway to witness the brushes was a record-breaker for a week day. They lined both sides of the stretch standing two and three deep, and were unusually enthusiastic and generous with applause. The race was to be run off in two heats, and a final if necessary over the regular half-mile upper stretch. To make the race more interesting the owners made a side wager of $200 to be paid to some charity or Christmas tree fund. The roadbed was in prime condition, and both horses were on the ground early, apparently in the best of form and condition. Dr. Gill was appointed starter, and Frank Walker judge at the finish. When the trotters were taken to the start the road was cleared for them, and they got away on fairly even terms. For a short distance they traveled on even terms, neither animal seeming to be able to gain a lead. Nearing the first quarter post The Monk made a desperate spurt and gained a lead of a head, which he held until near the point of rocks, where a touch of the whip caused him to break and spoil his chances of winning. He was on his feet in an instant, however, but Alice Barnes had taken advantage of the opportunity, and she crossed the line a length ahead of her opponent amid the cheers of the crowd.

THE MONK'S VICTORY.

After a rest and a rub down, the animals were brought to the mark for the second heat. The Monk seemed to be the favorite, although Alice Barnes, who has earned the title of "The Queen of the Speedway," had many friends. After several false starts, Dr. Gill finally got them away, Alice Barnes having a trifling advantage. They went away at a furious gait, The Monk soon placing himself on even terms with Alice Barnes. Then followed as pretty a race as one would want to witness. It was either animal's race when they struck the head of the stretch. Both drivers were urging their horses to their utmost speed, but neither appeared to be able to gain a lead, so evenly did they seem to be matched. There was every indication of a dead heat, when, as a last resort, Mr. Gerken used his whip. This time The Monk stood it, and its touch acted like magic upon him, for he made a spurt that carried him a length in front of his opponent and he won out easily. Cheer after cheer rang out as the two horses were jogged back, and great interest centred in the third and final heat. It was over a half hour before this was started, and the crowd had begun to grow impatient, when some one shouted "They're off!" Instantly there was a rush for the road, and all vehicles drew to one side in order to give the star performers a clear track. But a clear track did not seem to be what they wanted, for on starting both seemed to crowd into the west curb, which was lined with vehicles two deep. The Monk led the way by half a length to the head of the stretch, when Alice Barnes showed a remarkable burst of speed, and was gradually closing the gap, when several vehicles blocked the way, and in order to avoid a collision Mr. Smathers was obliged to make a slight turn. Small as the advantage was, The Monk took full measure, and landed a winner by a couple of lengths.

The sympathy of the crowd seemed to be with Mr. Smathers, for they immediately begun to cry "Foul." The judge at the finish decided that the heat was off, and that there must be another start. Mr. Smathers agreed to start again, but Mr. Gerken refused, and, followed by a large crowd, all walked up the drive to the club, where the discussion became very animated. Mr. Smathers said that he would go over the course himself and claim the race if Mr. Gerken would not start, but George Coleman, who was to have started the third heat, refused to give him the word to go, saying that he did not care to mix up in any discussion. Mr. Gerken contended that it was a road race, and that the horse that crossed the finish line first won. He also offered bet $10,000 that The Monk could beat Alice Barnes next August on any track that Mr. Smathers cared to name. Mr. Smathers was not present when this statement was made, but it is likely that a race will be fixed for a large amount, as both owners have the utmost confidence in their horses. The entire matter, however, ended very unsatisfactorily.

Between the heats there were several very lively brushes. Domby, Jr., 2:11¼, driven by Elmer Stevens, gave the bay pacer N. T. B., 2:21¼, driven by James Kennedy, a very pretty race, and beat him by an open length. About the only three-cornered brush of importance was between Honor Bright, driven by John F. Cockerill; Kingwood, 2:17½, driven by De Witt C. Flanigan, and the trotter Louis Victor, 2:10, with David Lamar handling the reins. A blanket would have covered all three horses until the stretch was reached, when Honor Bright shot away and won by an open length from Kingwood.

MATINEE DRIVERS PROTEST.

Amateur Reinsmen of Cleveland Denounce National Trotting Board's Ruling on Technical Records.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Dec. 22.—The Gentleman's Driving Club, one of the wealthiest and largest organizations of amateur horsemen in the country, met to-day and adopted the following resolutions, which will be sent to the Board of Appeals of the National Trotting Association and to all amateur driving clubs, the latter being requested to take co-operative action:

Whereas, Matinée racing began at a time when turf interests were at a low ebb, when horse values were the lowest reached during the past quarter century, and when the breeding industry was in a generally demoralized condition, has in a large measure caused the present condition of prosperity in all lines of turf interests, and

Whereas, Matinée racing begun at a time when conducted on the same successful lines and remain a benefit to the trotting interests of this country if technical records be forced upon its horses;

It is unanimously resolved by the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Cleveland assembled that in the decision of the Board of Review of the National Trotting Association, which ruled that John A. McKerron acquired a record of 2:10 when he won the Challenge Trophy of the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Boston, a great injustice has not only been done to the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Cleveland and to matinée racing in Cleveland, but to all other clubs conducting their affairs under similar conditions, and,

It is Resolved, That as this ruling is worded, it cannot mean other than that many horses that have been allowed to trot here and elsewhere, under the impression that they would not acquire record, should acquire technical records, making a condition that would cause a serious injury to the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Cleveland, to matinée racing in general, and most particularly to the future contests for this Boston trophy, which promises so much for the benefit of the American trotting turf, and

It is further resolved, That if this decision of the Board of Review shall be sustained by the Board of Appeals, and shall be allowed to stand, the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Cleveland must resign as a member of the National Trotting Association, and hereafter conduct its matinée racing under rules of its own, and most particularly

We appeal to the matinée clubs of this country to join with us in bringing about a condition that will not prevent our enjoying a sport that benefits not only the horse interest, but the personal interests of every road driver in this country.

INTERCOLLEGIATE GOLF.

Championship Meeting to be Held During Week of May 7—Three Courses Named.

Five universities were represented by delegates yesterday at the annual meeting of the Intercollegiate Golf Association, held at the Holland House. Chester Griswold, Jr., as President, represented Princeton, and the other delegates were: Harvard, C. H. Henderson, Jr.; Yale, T. Markoe Robertson and T. M. Cheney; Columbia, S. P. Nash, Jr.; University of Pennsylvania, H. Kennady Hill.

The most important matter of business was fixing a date for the next intercollegiate championship tournament for individual and team honors. The week of May 7 was decided upon and preference for the course was given to Atlantic City, Nassau Country, or Dyker Meadow. The Executive Committee will confer with the officers of these clubs, and announce the club selected for the contest early in the year. The links of each of these will be in good playing condition at that early season of the year, and on that account they were picked out for the tournament.

A change was made in the mode of scoring in the team championships. The collegians have been famous for trying new schemes for equitable team scoring, and the plan adopted yesterday, to go into effect with the May tournament, provides that one point shall go to the winner, and one-half of the number of holes won beyond that. For instance, if a man wins his match by eight holes, he would score one point for the victory, and as he would have to win by one hole for the victory, he would have seven holes in excess, one-half of that number is 3½, so his score would be 4½ points.

New officers for the coming year were elected as follows: President, Charles H. Henderson, Jr., Harvard; Vice President, Courtlandt D. Barnes, Jr., Yale; Secretary and Treasurer, Stephen P. Nash, Jr., Columbia, the last being a re-election.

The present individual intercollegiate champion is Percy R. Pyne, 2d, of Princeton, while Harvard holds the team championship. The team championship cup, presented by the Ardsley Club five years ago, has been won twice by Yale and twice by Harvard. It is to become the property of the college whose team wins it three times, and the rivalry is particularly keen between these two colleges for the coming tournament. The last championship was held on the Garden City links, in the Fall of 1899, but it was decided immediately after that to hold the tournaments in the Spring of the year hereafter and to hold the fifth annual contest in the Spring of 1901.

NICHOLLS BEATEN IN ENGLAND.

The Boston Golfer Indignant at His Treatment by His Former Countrymen.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—In the thirty-six-hole golf match on the Romford links to-day James Braid beat Bernard Nicholls of Boston, Mass., by 9 up and 7 to play.

The contest was spoiled by a prevailing fog, but Nicholls, who was strange to the course, did not show to advantage. He was 7 down on the first round, and the home man completed the first round with the score of 77.

Nicholls, who defeated the English crack Peter Paxton on Thursday, is of English birth, and returned here after having passed many years in America. He is indignant at the fact that the Tooting Bec Golf Club compelled him to lunch in the workshop, though the club members were glad to face the December storm to witness his play. Nicholls said:

"Had I never been in America and witnessed the lavish kindness bestowed on Vardon and other English players, I might not have resented this treatment; but you may be assured I will never remain in England long, and if it were not for meeting Braid, who is a personal friend, I would not play on on another English link. You may depend on it, Vardon will not remain here long, for I know he will be unable to stand this sort of thing after the kindness he has received in the United States.

"The curious thing about it all is that America will soon outstrip England, not only in golf playing, but in the manufacture of golf equipment, for the Americans are getting the best talent in England, which, under better auspices, is sure to outstrip the home talent."

Dyker Meadow Golfers.

The first competition for the silver cup given by Dr. William Jarvie to the Dyker Meadow Golf Club was played yesterday on the club links near Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn. It was a handicap contest, the first four net scores to qualify for match play competition on Christmas Day. J. H. Merritt led the field at 84 net, having at the same time the best gross score of 92 strokes. Five then tied at 86—J. B. Dithridge, Arthur P. Clapp, C. Adams, Norman S. Dike, and C. T. Notman. They played off the tie and Dike and Adams lost. The four who will meet in the match play round on Tuesday, therefore, are Merritt, Notman, Dithridge, and Clapp. The scores of the qualifying event were:

	Gross.	Hdcp.	Net.
J. H. Merritt	92	8	84
J. B. Dithridge	107	21	86
C. T. Notman	99	13	86

Indoor Baseball Champions.

TROY, N. Y., Dec. 22.—The indoor baseball team of St. Peter's Lyceum won the State championship at the armory here Friday night by defeating the crack Sixth Separate Company team of this city in a ten-inning game. Score: 2 to 1.

Joint Athletic Meet.

The chief event of the joint athletic games and reception to be held by Company I of the Seventy-first Regiment and the Star Athletic Club at the armory Jan. 12, 1901, will be a two-mile handicap run.

Aside from the clubs of New York and Brooklyn, colleges and athletic clubs in Connecticut, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania have applied for entry blanks for the purpose of entering men in this race. Secretary McCahill of Company I and Secretary Homarth of the Star Athletic Club think there will be no less than forty starters in this contest. Entries for all the events, of which there are ten, will close Jan. 5, 1901.

ON LOCAL BOWLING ALLEYS

Changes in Standing as a Result of the Week's Games.

LONG ISLAND SERIES OVER

East New York Bowling Club Wins First Prize—Imperials Were Second—Philadelphos Scored On.

The Long Island League tournament is the first of the present season to finish its schedule, having been completed during the past week. The East New York Bowling Club won first prize, with a record of 12 games won to 2 lost. The Imperial team won second prize, and the Prospect and Manhattan fives will roll off a tie for third and fourth places next Wednesday evening.

In the Brooklyn Royal Arcanum League the Philadelphos team was scored against for the first time and lost the lead to East New York Council. The standing of the clubs in the principal local leagues is as follows:

DEFENDER'S KEEL CAST

First Important Detail on the New Yacht Completed.

NINETY TONS OF LEAD USED

It Will Require Two Days for Metal to Cool—Angle Irons in Construction Shop.

Special to The New York Times.

BRISTOL, R. I., Dec. 22.—The work of putting together the new cup defender can now begin and be continued without delay, for the lead keel for the new boat was successfully cast to-day. There wasn't a hitch of any nature, and the ninety tons of metal was poured from the heating furnace into the mold as slickly as though the work was an every day matter. The job of building the boat starts off a month earlier than ever before. The keel of the 1899 champion was cast Jan. 24 of that year.

Everything having been made ready yesterday afternoon for the big job to be done to-day, there was an early start in melting the lead in the iron kettles swinging high above the level of the mold. The actual work was begun at 5 o'clock this morning, and by 7 two streams of molten metal were pouring into the mold. A good force of workmen were engaged about the furnaces this forenoon, carrying pigs of lead from the pile to the kettles, pouring melted metal into cracks and crevices from ladles, and packing clay about the sides of the mold, where the mass had shrunken.

When the metal cools, will come the trimming, fitting, and fastening of the keel plates, which will take a week or two to do. Then the main part of the hull construction can be hustled along, so as to assure a launching at the stated time—the middle of May, or as soon as the challenger now in the hands of the builders at Dumbarton is launched. Efforts will be made in Bristol to get the defender overboard before the challenger is in the water. This, however, will depend upon the prompt arrival of material for construction at Bristol between now and next May, in many respects the details of construction of the new defender at Bristol are well in hand, and, in fact, some of the woodwork is further ahead than it was two years ago at this time, when the Columbia was about to be begun.

It is reported that the keel plates of the new cup defender were molded from the same patterns used in the casts for the Columbia's keel, and from the source it comes from, the story seems very likely to be the case; then much of the construction will be simplified in and about the various sections where these plates will rest in the body of the boat, because it will be only a matter of duplicating many of Columbia's fittings from patterns of two years ago.

Although the story is not officially confirmed and with little expectation of the matter ever being told by the designer or syndicate, there are various things coming to light that would mark it as a well-greunded report. The new keel plates off the Columbia's keel plate molds would of necessity bring the top of the lead keel of the new cup defender to the exact curves and dimensions as those of the champion of 1899, the Columbia, but not necessarily to the same identical weights in outside ballast. Particulars learned about the wooden mold of keel relative to capacity that drawing a line athwartships directly in the centre, midship section, it will be found that the part forward of the line will contain one-third more lead than will be in the after section.

The greatest bulk of lead will be within a foot of the bottom, and in the forward half, one-third of the distance aft from the forward end, eighteen inches is the widest part of the top of the mold, while the greatest breadth is about thirty-two inches, and this low down and well forward. A man six feet in height, standing up straight in the forward end of the mold cannot be seen by any one standing near by on the floor level, but at the after end the meld is not as deep by a foot or thereabouts as it is forward.

Everything goes to show that the mold is flat at the bottom from forward to aft, with the stem rounded to a point and the after end four inches in width. Altogether these things tend to convey the idea that the new lead keel will have about the same proportions and shape as Columbia is described, even to a length on the upper surface of twenty-nine feet and between three and four inches, the forward and after ends raking at angles of about 45 degrees, which gives an idea as to the length of the keel at the bottom.

There is much to cause the theory to arise that the new boat will be constructed on lines close to Columbia's, with a flatter midship section, to lend her wings on a reach or a run. It is doubtful if there can be any improvement over Columbia in sailing close to the wind or going in stays in the new boat.

Contract for Lawson Boat Let.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 22.—The contract for the Tobin bronze for the Lawson cup defender was closed to-day and the metal is expected here at once. The lead is also on the way, and the mold for the keel is expected to be cast next week, which is earlier than had even been hoped. The work of construction now will begin to be pushed as rapidly as possible.

A race between the Lawson boat and the Hanley centreboard yacht is a positive event of the coming racing season. L. M. Clark, ex-President of the Hull Yacht Club, who is to be on the boat with Designer Crowninshield, wants to see a race of this kind, and it is the general impression that one of the first races after both boats are built will be between the Lawson keel and the Hanley centreboard. The race will probably be off Marblehead and will be effective for trying out both boats.

Gen. Paine is to co-operate directly with the Hanleys in their centreboard boat, as it expresses his own preference. The entire subscription of the necessary $75,000 is now pledged, and the materials for the boat are now being ordered.

AT THE CRESCENT A. C. TRAPS.

Banks Defeats Fanning in a 100 Target Match by a Close Margin.

The feature of the weekly shoot at the Crescent Athletic Club traps, Bay Ridge, yesterday afternoon, was a match at 100 targets between Edward Banks and J. S. Fanning. Banks won, scoring 88 to Fanning's 85. His best string was his fourth, in which he made but one miss. Fanning did not score over 22 in any string.

The third contest for the December Cup was won by Dr. J. J. Keyes, whose score, including handicap added, reached the maximum of 50 points. Edward Banks was second, with an actual score of 49. The usual trophy and sweepstakes matches were also shot. The scores follow:

NATIONAL RIFLEMEN MEET.

Marksmen from All Nations to be Invited to Compete in the Big Event at Sea Girt.

The Executive Committee of the National Rifle Association, which was organized in 1871 and reorganized or revived during the Spring of the present year, met last night at the Union League Club, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-ninth Street. Those present were Brig. Gen. Bird W. Spencer, Brig. Gen. George W. Wingate, Brig. Gen. John S. Saunders, Lieut. Albert S. Jones, and Nathan Spering.

The Executive Committee met at 7 o'clock, and afterward they were entertained at dinner by Brig. Gen. Bird Spencer.

The primary object of the meeting last night was to make arrangements for the international rifle meet, to be held next Summer or Fall. The date has not been positively set yet, but it will probably be held in September, 1901. Challenges have already been sent to England, Ireland, Scotland, Australia, France, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, Denmark, Austria, and Holland, and the committee is now preparing circulars for delivery in a few days to the prominent business men of the country asking them for subscriptions to defray the expenses of the meet, which the New Jersey State Rifle Association has promised to bring off at Sea Girt.

At present the army, the navy, twelve States, and all the prominent rifle associations are interested in the movement, and it is their intention to make the meet one in which civilians as well as army and navy men will take an active interest; for it is the desire to make the citizens and National Guardsmen familiar with the weapons which they may be called upon to use in time of war, and which, under the present laws, they cannot buy, even for use in practice. At this meet innovations will be introduced in the way of running-deer targets, running-man targets, and disappearing and long-range rifles.

Lieut. Albert S. Jones, the Secretary of the association, said that he had received a number of letters from the older marksmen who were interested in the National Rifle Association years ago, and since the Centennial Trophy was regained last Summer the interest in the matter of rifle practice has been very much on the boom.

Since 1881, Lieut. Jones said, other sports have displaced rifle practice in the minds of the public, such as baseball, football, &c., but he is confident that the International meet next Fall will revive the sport of rifle shooting if it is made the success which he is confident that it will.

A committee of three was appointed to draw up a bill for presentation to Congress, urging it to take steps to revive the interest in rifle practice.

Fallert Won New Utrecht Handicap.

Special to The New York Times.

QUEENS, L. I., Dec. 22.—Joseph Fallert of Brooklyn won the main event of the New Utrecht Gun Club's weekly trap shooting tournament at the Inter-State Park traps near here to-day with the only clean score of ten straight kills made in the event. Summary:

The New Utrecht Gun Club Handicap, Ten Live Birds Per Man.—Joseph Fallert, 28 yards, 10; F. G. Vandergrifft, 28 yards, 9; Stephen M. Van Allen, 30 yards, 8; J. H. Brooks, 28 yards, 8; Charles A. Lockwood, 28 yards, 7; G. H. Chapman, 28 yards, 7; B. Fallert, 28 yards, 6; Dr. Charles J. Pflug, 28 yards, 6; Charles F. Plate, 28 yards, 4; Charles A. Lincoln, 28 yards, 6; William H. Losee, 28 yards, 6.

Sweepstakes, Five Live Birds Per Man.—Losee, 29 yards, 5; Lincoln, 29 yards, 5; Vandergrifft, 28 yards, 5; Plate, 28 yards, 4; Chapman, 28 yards, 4; Lockwood, 28 yards, 4; Brooks, 28 yards, 3; J. Fallert, 28 yards, 3; Dr. Pflug, 28 yards, 3; B. Fallert, 28 yards, 1.

Owing to darkness all ties divided the money in their classes respectively.

Skater Kearney Beat Leroy See.

Philip Kearney of the Pawnee Athletic Club won the mile handicap skating race at the Claremont Avenue Skating Rink, Brooklyn, last night, after a close finish with Le Roy See of the New York Athletic Club. Kearney had a handicap of 80 yards, while See was scratch. C. Westen, 180 yards, was third. There were six other starters, and the time was 2:09 4-5.

See made a magnificent race, catching the long-distance men on the fifth lap, and obtaining the lead on the fifteenth and last lap. It looked as if he would win with ease, but the pace was too swift, and a few yards before the finish Kearney spurted and won. See fell five yards from the finish and slid across the line.

Previous to the race Kearney paced Harry McDonald in a half-mile exhibition, which was made in 1:30 1-5.

Latin School Boys Good Skaters.

Brooklyn Latin School skaters won at the Clermont Avenue Rink, Brooklyn, yesterday, where the first interscholastic handicap skating race of the season was held. Fifteen starters faced the officials in a half-mile race, and three of the representatives of Latin School finished first, second, and third, garnering all the honors in a hotly contested event. Summary:

Interscholastic Handicap, Half Mile.—Won by J. Schmeltzer, Brooklyn Latin School, 60 yards; Ray Calvi, Brooklyn Latin School, second; Russel Calvi, Brooklyn Latin School, 180 yards, third; O. Minton, Polytechnic Preparatory School, scratch, fourth. Time—1:48 3-5.

The William B. Curtis Monument Fund.

A most unusual announcement has been made by the Amateur Athletic Union's committee having charge of the William B. Curtis Monument Fund, to the effect that recent subscriptions of the fund have been too large individually. The members of the committee decided and wish it distinctly understood that further large donations are not desired, as it has been planned to erect the proposed monument by popular subscription. Some of the friends of the late "Father Bill" have indicated a willingness to subscribe the entire amount needed if allowed to do so, but the committee wishes rather that the monument shall be a tribute to the life work of Mr. Curtis in the interest of amateur sports from amateurs generally and the lovers of athletic sports at large. With this object in view the Monument Fund Committee has adopted suitable resolutions, and E. E. Babb, President of the New England Association, has been authorized to appoint a sub-committee consisting of one member from each association to assist the Amateur Athletic Union committee. John J. Dixon, Secretary of the Metropolitan Association, has been delegated to receive funds from this district.

GEN. LEE EXPLAINS.

Says His St. Louis Speech About Cuba Was Misunderstood.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 22.—Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, Commander of the Department of the Missouri, who is in the city as the guest of the New England Society, said to-day in regard to a dispatch published in a Chicago paper, purporting to quote from his speech made on the St. Louis Merchants' Exchange yesterday, in which he was said to have made the prediction that the American flag will continue to float over the island of Cuba:

"The meaning I intended to convey was that the American flag would float over Cuba until a stable Government shall be formed, capable of protecting life and property and giving confidence to capital. The United States has promised the Cubans self-government and will carry out its promise. Upon the Cubans will rest the responsibility of determining whether that Government shall be permanent or otherwise."

Gen. Lee and staff and party arrived here yesterday. When he responded to the address of welcome at the Merchants' Exchange he touched upon Cuba, reviewing the war, the destruction of the Spanish fleet, the conquest and surrender of the island, and finally the evacuation by the Spanish troops. Then came the utterance which caused so much astonishment. He said:

"And now the Stars and Stripes float over Matanzas, over El Caney, over Morro, over Havana, and I'll tell you, on the quiet, that the flag is going to stay there."

ELKES CONQUERS MICHAEL

Cycling Enthusiasts Cheer the Fifteen-Mile Victor in the Garden.

FAST PACE FROM THE START

The Six-Day Champion Led the Little Welshman by Nearly Two Yards —Other Races.

"Jimmy" Michael was dethroned last night from the premiership he has enjoyed as a middle-distance pace-following bicyclist by Harry Elkes, the young man from Glens Falls, N. Y., who has recently carried everything before him at both long and short distance riding.

The much-talked-of fifteen-mile motor-paced race between these two speedy masters of the wheel took place last night in the Madison Square Garden, and was witnessed by over 5,000 enthusiasts, who cheered each man repeatedly as he spun around the track, culminating with a prolonged ovation as Harry Elkes crossed the fifteen-mile line, one and three-quarter laps ahead of the Welsh midget, in the good time of 26 minutes 3 1-5 seconds.

It was a spirited race, but Elkes's superiority was shown from the first three laps. He picked up three-quarters of a lap in the first mile, passed Michael at one and one-half miles, and just before the tenth mile passed him again. Elkes rode behind his crack pacers on their motor tandem, Crooks and Tinssler, the men who set the pace for him on Thursday night, when Elkes made the new world's record of 1 minute 36 1-5 seconds for an indoor paced mile. Each man had two motors ready with relays of pacers, Elkes's second men being Hoyt and Thompson. He did not have to call upon the latter.

On the contrary, Michael had difficulty with his pacers from the start. He started with Vetter and Sherer, his favorite pacemakers. Nothing particular was the matter with them, except that they could not go as fast as the men on their rival's motor. When Elkes surprised the little Welshman by picking up so rapidly at one and a half miles, Michael gave the signal of distress, and his second motor, ridden by Miller and Hedstrom, came on and set the gait. Evidently they did not quite fill the bill, for Elkes kept gaining, and at three miles the former team came back. At nine miles the second motor was called into requisition again, and they kept the track to the finish.

It should also be started in justice to Michael that he was suffering from an exceedingly stiff leg, due to a fall he received on the track early in the week. The side of one leg and knee were badly cut. Nevertheless, he kept up with his pacers, and Elkes won clearly through superior speed in every particular.

Every mile was under two minutes, the time for each being:

Distance.	Leader.	Time.
One mile	Elkes	1:48 3-5
Two miles	Elkes	3:27 3-5
Three miles	Elkes	5:07 2-5
Four miles	Elkes	6:49 4-5
Five miles	Elkes	8:31 1-3
Six miles	Elkes	10:13
Seven miles	Elkes	11:56 2-5
Eight miles	Elkes	13:40 4-5
Nine miles	Elkes	15:23 3-5
Ten miles	Elkes	17:11 4-5
Eleven miles	Elkes	18:58 2-5
Twelve miles	Elkes	20:45 4-5
Thirteen miles	Elkes	22:32 3-5
Fourteen miles	Elkes	24:20 2-5
Fifteen miles	Elkes	26:03 1-5

Judging from the applause which greeted the victor, it was a very popular victory. Elkes will leave to-day for Boston, where he is to ride in the six-day bicycle race during the first week of the new year.

This professional race was preceded by two amateur events.

Of the nine men who qualified for the final heat in the amateur one-mile handicap, four were scratch competitors, G. C. Schrieber and J. H. Hunter, both of the Harlem Wheelmen and respectively one-mile and half-mile indoor champions of America; F. J. Cowell of Hartford, and George Schofield of the Kings County Wheelmen, and the amateur one-mile champion. Only one, Schofield, got a place in the four prize positions. He was second after a sensational finish with the Brooklyn boy, Walter W. Smith, who had thirty yards handicap. The men were so close together that the spectators could scarcely discriminate between them. Smith crossed the line first by about four inches. Wilbur L. Lesee, another Brooklyn lad, with thirty yards handicap, got third, and Daniel Sullivan, a Dwight School student of this city, with fifteen yards allowance, took the fourth prize. Less than a wheel's length separated the first and fourth men, the race for the last two laps being of the keenest possible nature, and the spectators yelled themselves hoarse with delight at the finish.

Part of the interest in the amateur team pursuit race was destroyed through the absence of the college element, Columbia and Yale failing to send their teams. The match then resolved itself into a speed test between the Harlem and Kings County Wheelmen. The former had a strong team in "Jimmy" Hunter, George Schrieber, and "Johnny" King, but after a spirited six-mile tussle, the Kings County contingent, represented by George Schofield, H. L. Brown, and G. E. Homan, succeeded in overhauling all of their opponents. King was the last man caught. The Kings County team rode the six miles in 14 minutes 2 3-5 seconds.

The summaries:

Schofield One-Mile Amateur Handicap.—First heat won by P. J. Cadwall, Hartford, scratch; Peter Van Cott, Nassau Wheelmen, 15 yards, second; Walter W. Smith, Kings County, 30 yards, third. Time—2:11. Second heat won by Wilbur L. Losee, Brooklyn, 30 yards; Daniel Sullivan, Dwight School, 15 yards, second; G. C. Schrieber, Harlem Wheelmen, scratch, third. Time—2:10 1-5. Third heat won by W. H. Connors, New York, 45 yards; George Schofield, Kings County, scratch, second; J. H. Hunter, Harlem Wheelmen, scratch, third. Time—2:14. Final heat won by Walter W. Smith, Kings County; George Schofield, Kings County, second; Wilbur L. Losee, Brooklyn, third. Daniel Sullivan, Dwight School, fourth. Time—2:11 1-5.

Amateur Team Pursuit Race.—Harlem Wheelmen—J. H. Hunter, George C. Schrieber, and John King vs. Kings County Wheelmen—George Schofield, H. L. Brown, Jr., and G. E. Homan. Won by Kings County in 6 miles. Time—14:02 3-5.

Professional Motor-Paced Fifteen-Mile Race.—Harry Elkes, Glens Falls, beat Jimmy Michael by 1¾ laps. Time—26:03 1-5.

BICYCLER ARONSON DEAD.

Pneumonia, Complicated by His Injuries, Results Fatally in New York Hospital.

Carl A. Aronson, the six-day bicycle rider who was taken to the New York Hospital on Thursday, Dec. 13, suffering from contusion of the spine and other injuries received in the worst fall of that race on the Wednesday evening previous, died late yesterday afternoon from pneumonia. Aronson never left the hospital from the time he entered. He had a cold when he was taken to the hospital, and last week it developed into pneumonia. His weakened condition made it impossible for him to throw off the disease, and he rapidly grew worse.

Aronson was about twenty-five years of age, and his home was at 139 Sixth Avenue, Brooklyn. His sister and mother live in Chicago, and they were informed of the death last night.

James C. Kennedy, manager of the six-day race, learned the news last night in Madison Square Garden, during the Elkes-Michael race. "I am exceedingly sorry to hear of it," he said, "for Aronson was a good fellow. I have informed the hospital authorities that the management will take charge of the body and attend to the burial, but before more definite arrangements can be made I am awaiting word from his relatives in Chicago."

After the disastrous fall which took both Aronson and Turville from the race, each man going to the hospital, their partners were allowed to ride for seventh money, $150, and Babcock, Aronson's partner, won. The deceased rider had been a prominent professional bicyclist for three years. His first six-day race was in 1898, and last year he got second place for individual honors. In the San Francisco six-day contest last year he finished second to Charley Miller.

Simar, one of the French riders, who was stricken with pneumonia after the race, is still confined to his room at his hotel with the disease, but his friends in Madison Square Garden last night said that his condition was greatly improved.

TO BE GOVERNOR OF BENGUET.

Philippine Commission Appoints H. P. Whitmarsh—Thirty-nine Priests Proffer Submission.

MANILA, Dec. 22.—The Philippine Commission has appointed H. Phelps Whitmarsh Governor and Otto Scherer Secretary of the Province of Benguet. Mr. Whitmarsh has been here two years, principally engaged as a newspaper correspondent, and has resided latterly at Baguim, which will be the seat of government, and is the central point of the region. Mr. Scherer is a German, who has lived twenty years in the Philippines, five of which have been passed in the Province of Benguet, where for a long time he was the only white man. He speaks the native language and several European tongues fluently, and is intimate with the Igorrotes.

Thirty-nine priests, seventeen of them belonging in the Province of Bulacan, the strongest of the Tagal provinces, have signed and forwarded to the Philippine Commission a paper proffering their submission and loyalty to its authority, adding that the promise is made voluntarily and without mental reservation. Judge Taft has replied, welcoming the priests' assistance in the pacification of a people "over whom you will have so great an influence."

ACTIVITY AGAINST INSURGENTS.

MANILA, Dec. 22.—A detachment of the Sixteenth Infantry has captured Bautista, the head of the Katipunan Society, in Northwestern Luson.

A detachment of the Forty-ninth Infantry recently attacked a barrio on the Cagayan River, in Isabella Province, drove out the insurgents, killing several of them, and captured 1,000 rounds of ammunition. The Americans also burned the insurgent quarters.

The latest reports from Iloilo say that the Islands of Panay and Cebu since the rainy season set in are being rapidly cleared of the enemy, and that in a few weeks the only opposition encountered will be that offered by scattering Ladrones.

A Sick Congressman Arrested.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Dec. 22.—Congressman Herman B. Dahle of the Second District of Wisconsin spent last night in a cell at the Central Police Station and was compelled to appear in a police court this morning, all because he was unfortunate enough to become ill on a street car. He was on his way home to spend the holidays, and stopped in Cleveland to visit a friend, L. Brundage, a commission merchant. While on a street car, Mr. Dahle became ill and was helped into a drug store. He was almost unconscious, and, acting peculiarly, a policeman arrested him. In court this morning he revealed his identity, explained the matter, and was discharged.

The McDonough to be Launched Monday

EAST BRAINTREE, Mass., Dec. 22.—The launching of the new torpedo-boat destroyer McDonough, now under construction at the Fore River Engine Works, will take place Monday at noon. It was expected that the launching would be made to-day, but conditions were not favorable. Mrs. Lucy McDonough Reade of Philadelphia, who will christen the boat, was present to-day, as were also the invited guests.

Porto Rico Federals Acquitted.

SAN JUAN, Port Rico, Dec. 22.—Munoz Rivera and eight other leading Federals, after five days' trial by the local court, were to-day acquitted on the charge of resisting public authority. The charges were the outcome of the riots which occurred on the night of Sept. 14 last, when Señor Rivera's house was mobbed and 500 shots were fired. The courtroom was continually jammed. The trial was concluded last evening, and the decision was rendered to-day. Señor Rivera received hundreds of congratulatory messages by telegraph.

A BUSINESS-LIKE KING.

Robert P. Porter Finds Roumania Making Progress Under Present Monarch.

Robert P. Porter, who has been abroad since October, arrived on the American liner St. Louis yesterday. Most of his time abroad was spent in Berlin and Roumania. He has a very high opinion of the future of Roumania. The Roumanian King, he said, was a business man, and the country was making great progress in the right direction.

He said that he was much interested in the treaties and other questions before Congress. There are many important questions, he said, to be settled in the next four years, and among the most important were the treaty questions. Especially during this time he expected to see our commercial status much enhanced.

MISS ROCKEFELLER HOME.

Neither She Nor Her Father Would Talk of the Operation for a New Ear Drum.

Miss Alta Rockefeller, who has been in Vienna under the treatment of Dr. Isidor Muller, the ear specialist, arrived on the Cunard liner Campania yesterday morning. She refused to say anything concerning Dr. Muller's treatment. She was met at the pier by her father, John D. Rockefeller, who refused to say anything concerning the report that his daughter had been provided with new ear drums by the Vienna specialist.

Miss Rockefeller's fiancé, E. Parmelee Prentice of Chicago, was a passenger on the St. Louis.

ALLEGED SHOPLIFTERS.

Arrested in Department Stores and Locked Up by Detectives.

Christmas shopping in the big department stores has brought the usual crop of shoplifters. Detectives in all the big stores have received instructions to be watchful of shoplifters during the present rush, and yesterday the floor detectives in a Sixth Avenue store made three arrests.

The prisoners were Rose Miniot, 226 West Twenty-fourth Street, charged with stealing a hairpin; Helen Silber, 208 East One Hundred and Twelfth Street, charged with stealing a woman's waist, and Fred Bryan, 200 Eleventh Avenue, who is said to have stolen a number of books.

At another store, where there has been a larger crop of shoplifters this season than in any other department store in the city, Harold Russel, 101 West Twenty-eighth Street, was caught stealing men's furnishing goods. The prisoners were locked up in the West Thirtieth Street Police Station pending further investigation.

THIRD ATTEMPT TO BURN HOUSE

Contains Thirteen Families, Who Have Become Almost Panic-stricken.

For the third time since Sept. 19, an attempt was made early yesterday morning to set fire to the five-story tenement house at 604 Columbus Avenue. The house contains thirteen families. On Sept. 19 and on Dec. 10 the incendiary succeeded in starting a serious blaze, which, however, was put out without more serious result than a panic. Yesterday the fire was started in the hallway on the top floor in front of the apartments of George Quinn, the identical place where it was found on Dec. 10. Upon investigation it was found that the floor had been saturated with kerosene and that there was every indication of an attempt to set fire to the premises.

It was shortly after 4 o'clock when Quinn was awakened by the odor of kerosene. Through the crevice under the door he saw a reddish light and by the aid of a small lamp he could see the room was full of smoke. He jumped out of bed and tore open the door. A sheet of flame and a cloud of smoke enveloped him and he threw the door to and ran to a window and cried "Fire!"

Policeman Sullivan, who was on duty directly opposite the burning house, ran to the nearest box and sent in an alarm. Then he ran into the house, and by pounding and shouting awakened the tenants. W. H. Seaton, who lives in the neighborhood and who happened to come home late, ran to the officer's assistance, and together the men put out the flames before the engines had time to arrive. An investigation showed that the hallway in front of Quinn's apartment had been soaked with kerosene.

Similar attempt to start a fire had been made on the landing of the fourth stairway. When Fire Marshal Smith arrived he made an investigation, but found no clue to the firebug. A new one-gallon can full of kerosene was found under the stairway on the first floor, but no one in the house was there to claim it.

Many tenants in the house have become thoroughly alarmed and threaten to move to safer quarters. They do not think the attempts due to insurance speculation, but suppose there is some one in the house with a mania for setting fires. Up to a late hour this morning neither the detectives from the One Hundredth Street Station nor the firemen have been able to get a line on the firebug.

MISS CONDIT-SMITH ARRIVES.

Lost Clothing in Siege of Peking, and Must Pay Duty on New Wardrobe.

Miss Condit-Smith, a sister-in-law of Gov. Gen. Leonard Wood, who was in Peking at the time of the siege as a guest of Minister Conger, was an arrival on the American liner St. Louis yesterday. When she left Peking the only wearing apparel she possessed was the clothes she wore, and when she arrived yesterday she was much surprised to learn that her wardrobe, which she had purchased in Paris and London, would have to be sent to the Public Stores pending the decision of the Washington authorities as to whether it was subject to duty.

The authorities in Washington were notified as soon as possible, and it is thought the trunks, two in number, will be ordered released as soon as they understand the nature of the seizure.

SHARPERS FOOLED ON CAMPANIA.

Notice Was Posted Warning Passengers Against Gamblers.

There were several disappointed gamblers on the Cunard liner Campania when she reached her pier yesterday morning. A notice had been posted in the smoking room of the vessel warning the habitutes of that most popular of steamship apartments, that certain individuals of unsavory reputation were supposed to be on board. The notice had its effect, hardly a game of chance of any kind being played on the way across. "It was either the worst scared or else the stingiest crowd that ever crossed the Atlantic," said one, "for not a sovereign was seen from port to port worth mentioning. Getting up even a pool on a day's run was out of the question. There were over 400 passengers in the saloon, too. I've been across two-score times, but this breaks the record."

According to the story current on the ship, the gamblers went over a few weeks ago on the White Star liner Teutonic. When they secured passage for the return trip on the Cunarder, their identity was made known to the ship's officers.

MISSING GIRL IS HOME.

Bertha Friedman Is Back After an Exciting Experience on a Train.

Fifteen-year-old Bertha Friedman of 232 East Third Street, who ran away from home after a quarrel with her mother two weeks ago and later narrowly escaped abduction in Summit, N. J., returned to her home last night.

Bertha disappeared Dec. 3, and was not heard from until a few days later, when Mrs. Friedman received a letter dated Summit, in which Bertha said she was unhappy, broken-hearted, and contemplated suicide. Andrew Friedman, the girl's father, received a telegram from Judge J. B. Vreeland of Morristown Monday last saying the girl would arrive in Hoboken that evening. The telegram was delayed, and Friedman reached Hoboken some hours after the train arrived. Since that time he has been searching Summit and Morristown for his missing daughter.

Judge Vreeland said that while he was returning home from New York last Monday a pretty young girl boarded the train at Summit, and going to the rear of the car, spoke to two men and a woman, whom she apparently expected to meet on the train. The four conversed for a few moments, when the girl suddenly turned and ran to the front of the car. One of the men pulled her back to the seat and struck her violently in the face.

Judge Vreeland hurried to the girl's assistance and compelled the man to release her. At Morristown the Judge sent the weeping Bertha back to New York by the first train and notified her parents. Bertha, when seen at her home last night, said that, desiring to earn her own living, she had started for Morristown to get a position in a factory. While on the train she was approached, she said, by a woman and two men, who engaged her in conversation, and when the train arrived at Summit they said it was Morristown and induced her to get out.

Discovering the deceit, she ran back into the car, she claims, and was followed by the two men and the woman, who endeavored to take her off. She again ran from the car, and one of the men, attempting to restrain her, struck her violently, attracting Judge Vreeland's attention. Since returning, she said she had been working in a New York department store.

GREATER VARIETY OF DEALING

Latest Sales by Brokers—Holiday Auction Business of Routine Character —A Case of By-Bidding.

In point of volume the business the last week will compare favorably with that of any similar period since the recent resumption of active dealing, and there has also been a noticeable broadening of the market as shown in sales of business properties in the middle section of Fifth Avenue, as well as in the down-town district. Vacant property that can be included under that rather elastic term "desirable" seems to be in demand in almost every neighborhood where there is a reasonable prospect for a successful building operation.

Down town the probable site of the Chamber of Commerce's new building continues to be the principal theme for gossip, and although it had been expected that some definite announcement on this subject would be made last week, those interested now say that the matter will go over until after Jan. 1. A rumor with a set of conditions that fitted the Bennett Building fairly closely was current early in the week, but the owners of that property deny that any sale of it has been effected. Ex-Mayor Schieren's purchase of the northeast corner of Fulton and Gold Streets was an interesting transaction, both because it is of an investment character and because it comes from a section with seldom figures in the real estate calendars.

Fifth Avenue, between Thirty-fourth and Forty-second Streets, furnished two of the week's most important deals, the sale of the Mayer-Kahn estate's building, at Nos. 483 and 485, and George C. Boldt's purchase of the remodeled dwelling at No. 334, just north of Thirty-sixth Street. Mr. Lahey's new holding is said to show an excellent investment return.

Deals in vacant property on upper Broadway were on a large scale, Charles T. Barney disposed of another of his block fronts—that on the east side of the thoroughfare between Eighty-fifth and Eighty-sixth Streets—presumably for improvement. Fake & Dowling, who last Spring, conducted an operation involving the block front on the north side of One Hundred and First Street between Broadway and West End Avenue, bought last week from Dr. Alfred Hegeman another large plot at the northeast corner of Broadway and One Hundred and First Street. At the southwest corner of Broadway and Sixty-seventh Street, adjoining the Hotel Marie Antoinette, August Bruggeman of Hoboken, who is said to be a new comer into the New York real estate field, will undertake the erection of a ten-story apartment hotel.

Among the other transactions of the week which have shown the improved character of business was the sale of the Iroquois apartment house by Irons & Todd to an investment corporation. John Jacob Astor's purchase of 55 West Twenty-fifth Street may not be of any special significance, but it gives symmetry to his plot at that point, and to casual observers would indicate that matters are not shaping themselves for the improvement of the block front on the east side of Sixth Avenue, between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth Streets—perhaps at no very distant date.

Latest Sales by Brokers.

Albert E. Gibbs & Co. have sold for Mrs. M. M. Mott to Mrs. M. Miller the four-story brick and stone-front dwelling, 131 West Eighty-first Street, 17.5x75x102.2.

Ex-Mayor Charles A. Schieren of Brooklyn is the buyer of the six-story building at the northeast corner of Fulton and Gold Streets. Sold by the estate of John T. Wilson.

Ex-Mayor Hugh J. Grant has sold the lot at the northwest corner of West End Avenue and Seventy-first Street, 25x100.

David Stewart has sold for the Cunningham estate to an investor the three-story business building on the west side of Amsterdam Avenue, 75 feet north of One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street, 50x100.

John Peters has sold for Frederick Weber to Carrie Gill for $18,500 the five-story double flat, 308 East Ninety-third Street, 25x100.8½.

Louis Lese has bought from Rosalie Rosenbaum the frame dwelling, 320 East One Hundred and Twenty-first Street, 25x100.11.

Lowenfeld & Prager have sold the old building, 228 East Eightieth Street, 20x102.2, to Samuel D. Tomback, who recently purchased Nos. 230 to 234 adjoining.

It is reported that Walter Jennings has sold the dwelling, 17 East Forty-first Street, 21x98.9, to Thomas Hastings of the firm of Carrere & Hastings.

Morris F. Joachim has bought for Moritz Koppe for $29,400 the five-story double tenement, with stores, 223 Second Street, 24.9x88

New Building Operations.

Geraldine Broadbelt will erect, from plans filed yesterday by Architect Henry Andersen, eleven five-story brick and limestone dwellings on the north side of One Hundred and Seventeenth Street, beginning 175 feet west of Lenox Avenue, at a cost of $200,000.

A seven-story elevator apartment house, 100 by 97.2, will be built for D. Willis James at the southwest corner of Amsterdam Avenue and Eighty-sixth Street, at a cost of $150,000, from plans by Hill & Stout.

Plans were also filed yesterday by Architects Buchman & Fox for a seven-story apartment house, 45 by 98.9, to be erected for Joseph Fleischman on the north side of Twenty-ninth Street, 50 feet east of Fourth Avenue, at a cost of $125,000.

The Auction Room.

By-bidding in the salesroom has been the subject of so much discussion that there might seem to be little occasion to call attention to a case that occurred last week. The work was done in such a manner, however, and its results were so disastrous as to cause general comment among those who witnessed it. Not the slightest blame or suspicion attaches to the auctioneer who was conducting the sale, and the incident serves, among other things, to strengthen the contention of the auctioneers, that owners, after instructing an auctioneer to announce that a sale will be without reserve or protection, frequently turn around and act in direct violation of these instructions.

The sale in question involved a small property on the lower east side. It was well situated, running through from one street to another, and several operators were carrying along the bidding at a rate that promised to realize a satisfactory price, when a woman who apparently had never before attended an auction sale of anything, much less of real estate, made a bid. Her excited manner at once occasioned suspicion among the other bidders. To leave no room for doubt, however, as to her position at the sale, she promptly raised her own bid, and was eager to do so a second time in spite of the auctioneer's efforts to restrain her. The sale practically ended right there. The other bidders walked away, although one of them said that he wanted the property and would have gone to a higher figure to get it had he not been thoroughly convinced that it was being protected.

The week's business, most of it of the foreclosure variety, developed little out of the ordinary. The Florence Building, at the northeast corner of Second Avenue and First Street, sold by order of the liquidating committee of the Tradesmen's National Bank, was bought by Jacob Korn for $114,000. Few voluntary offerings will be tried during the holiday week. Of the foreclosures, two are of more than ordinary importance. On Wednesday Auctioneer Meyer will sell the seven five-story dwellings 317 to 329 West One Hundred and Eighth Street, as the result of proceedings brought by Samuel G. Bayne against Patrick Flanagan and others, and on the following day 49 and 51 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street will be sold to satisfy a judgment of $42,000.

There were recorded last week 293 mortgages, for $4,458,704, of which 88, for $1,410,900, were at 5 per cent.; 109, for $978,806, were at more, and 96, for $2,068,908, were at less. In the corresponding week last year there were recorded 340 mortgages, for $4,319,847, of which 111, for $1,555,994, were at 5 per cent.; 160, for $1,219,035, were at more, and 78, for $1,543,813, were at less.

MORSE BUILDING ALTERATIONS.

Addition of Six Stories and a General Remodeling Will Cost $150,000.

Six stories will be added to the Morse Building, at the northeast corner of Nassau and Beekman Streets, now eight and one-half stories in height, while general alterations will be made throughout the interior of the structure. Plans for the work were submitted to the Building Department yesterday by Architects Bannister & Schell, who have estimated the cost of the improvements at $150,000.

The present owner of the Morse Building is Charles Ward Hall, who acquired it about a month ago in a trade with the Washington Life Insurance Company, giving in exchange the Hamilton Storage Warehouse property at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Park Avenue.

LARGE GROUND LEASE.

Plot at Tenth Avenue and Thirteenth Street Taken by Conron Brothers.

Charles E. Duross has leased to Conron Brothers the block front between Thirteenth and Fourteenth Streets, on the east side of Tenth Avenue, running back 150 feet, with the exception of the southeast corner of Fourteenth Street and Tenth Avenue, 22 by 80. Six lots were leased from the Weeks estate. For a lease on part of the Weeks property, held by a Mr. Reilly, Conron Brothers paid $12,000 premium. Four lots on Tenth Avenue were leased from the Ludlow estate, and two lots on West Fourteenth Street from the Roosevelt estate. The lease is for twenty-one years, with renewals. Conron Brothers expect to erect a four-story store and warehouse building covering the twelve lots adapted to their poultry business and for the accommodation of such firms as may use cold storage. The building will become the property of the various estates upon the expiration of the lease.

This change of location for the large poultry and beef houses has become necessary on account of the action of the city in taking for dock purposes the property in West Washington Market, which is now occupied by the large Western firms.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS.

In the following list "mtg" stands for mortgage and "R S" for revenue stamps. The war revenue law provides that stamps shall be placed on all conveyances at the rate of 50 cents for each $500 of consideration. This "consideration" has been held to mean only the equity above the mortgage, except in the rare cases where the purchaser assumes payment of the mortgage. The amount of the mortgage plus 1,000 times the value of the revenue stamps on the conveyances should therefore show the true consideration:

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

New York City.

MARIE GUMPERT.—Judge Brown of the United States District Court has appointed Charles M. Hough receiver of the assets of Marie Gumpert, dealer in millinery at 216 Sixth Avenue, who filed a petition in bankruptcy on Friday, on the application of David Sheeline, a creditor.

GEORGE A. BALLANTINE.—Another judgment was entered yesterday against George A. Ballantine, son of the late Newark brewer, for $2,311 in favor of T. M. & J. M. Fox for a dressmaker's bill for his wife. The goods were made between Feb. 28 and June 18, 1900, the total amount of the bill being $2,990, on which he paid $750 on account.

GEORGE W. SCHMIDT.—Deputy Sheriff Ahearn has received an execution against George W. Schmidt, manufacturer of women's hats at 7 and 9 Bedford Street, for $224 in favor of Abegg & Rusch, and the Sheriff made a levy. At a meeting of creditors recently held at the office of Strasbourger, Weil, Eschwege & Schallek an offer of settlement at 25 cents on the dollar, cash, in thirty days. The liabilities are stated to be about $9,500.

MARCUSE & MIDDAGH.—Judge Brown of the United States District Court has appointed Herman T. Wood receiver of the assets of Marcuse & Middagh, clothing dealers at Kingston, against whom a creditors' petition in bankruptcy was filed here on Thursday, on the application of Solomon Levi, representing Harry R. Marcuse, one of the partners. It was stated that on Dec. 17 Mr. Marcuse received, on behalf of the firm, an advance on the stock of goods of the firm of $2,700, and part of the goods were thereupon placed for shipment in a West Shore Railroad freight car. John J. Middagh, the other partner, on Dec. 19 commenced an action for the dissolution of the firm and obtained a temporary injunction restraining Mr. Marcuse and the railroad company from removing the goods, and they are still in the freight car on the tracks at Kingston. They are valued at $4,000. As there is a conflict as to who is entitled to the goods, it was claimed that it will be for the best interests of all concerned that they be turned over to the receiver.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

JOHN W. DUNNE.—John W. Dunne, a traveling salesman, residing at 117 West Fifteenth Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $5,452 and no assets. The debts were contracted from 1887 to 1898.

S. KORNSAND & CO.—Simon Kornsand and Moses H. Bernstein, composing the firm of S. Kornsand & Co., shoe dealers at 679 Broadway, have filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $6,036 and assets of $934, consisting of stock, $400; debts due, $34; claim for goods taken on a writ of replevin, $500. They have been in business since July 1, 1897.

DAVIS SILVERMAN.—A petition in involuntary bankruptcy has been filed against Davis Silverman, dealer in men's furnishings, dry, and fancy goods at 119 Delancey Street, by the following creditors: Wachsstef Shirt Company, $174; S. Mann & Co., $285, and Van Zandt, Jacobs & Co., $135. It was alleged that he is insolvent, and on Dec. 10 transferred his property. He has been in business since 1892, and in the trade is reported to have sold his stock to an auctioneer.

BERNARD TRAYNOR.—A petition in involuntary bankruptcy has been filed against Bernard Traynor, dealer in dry goods at 129 Amsterdam Avenue, by Tausky & Lesser, for the following creditors: John Haydock, $242; Sloggatt & Cotter Company, $124; Gilbert Manufacturing Company, $93, and Ralph M. Cohen, $59. It was alleged that he is insolvent, and at a meeting of creditors offered to settle at 12½ cents on the dollar, but a majority of creditors refused to sign the agreement. Also, on Dec. 18 he admitted in writing his inability to meet his obligations, and desire to be adjudged bankrupt. Judge Brown of the United States District Court appointed Benjamin Barker receiver of the assets on the application of Ralph M. Cohen, who stated that Mr. Traynor for some weeks has been unable to attend to his business, his wife has full charge of it, and it was necessary, for the protection of the creditors' interests, that she be relieved of control, and the stock, which is valued at $2,000, be sold at once. Mr. Traynor has been in the dry goods business since 1887, and built up a large store at Sixty-second Street and Amsterdam Avenue. On Dec. 19, 1899, creditors put him into bankruptcy, his schedules showing liabilities of $38,598, and he received his discharge on Sept. 5, 1900. A few months ago he opened a small store at 129 Amsterdam Avenue.

BULLS AND BEARS IN A WILD REVEL

Uproarious Fun on the Floor of the Stock Exchange.

A Rain of Confetti and "Fatted Calves" —Wholesale Smashing of Hats— Women in the Grand March.

Before a large and appreciative audience of women yesterday the brokers of the Stock Exchange proceeded to make merry in honor of the Christmas holidays, and for nearly an hour there was such a scene on the floor of the Exchange that even that amphitheatre of queer sights had never before witnessed. Everything conspired to add to the jollity of the occasion—a bull market, enormous trading—in fact, a record Saturday—money to burn, and a prospective three days' relief from the cares of accumulating wealth.

The committee having the affair in charge did things lavishly in everything except providing accommodations for others than their immediate families and friends, who early took up the choice seats and points of vantage, and let the others holding tickets of admission hustle for places. At the Broad Street entrance there was an enormous Christmas tree, three stories high, laden with knick-knacks and strung with electric lights. The Seventh Regiment Band occupied a platform in the rotunda, and up in the high gallery John Dillon, in charge of the messengers, had tons of confetti, paper streamers, and a thousand and one other things to throw at the jostling crowd below.

Promptly at 12:30, when the loan crowd had finished its shouting, there was a sound of a gong, and the Christmas tree blazed forth in radiance. The figures "1836" and "1900" were displayed in fire at each side of the tree, and as the lights shone out the messengers up above let fall showers of confetti on the jostling crowd below until the floor looked as if it had received a variegated snowfall.

The brokers on the floor went wild. They banged each other about, smashed hats, especially pot hats, tore clothes, showered each other with confetti, and, in fact, paid no consideration to anything other than the men who had vaccination tags pinned on the sleeves of their coats. A fellow-feeling made them respect this badge of courage.

Just before President Keppler mounted the platform to make an address, what looked like a herd of falling cows came sailing through the air. The bovines were made of bladders, filled with air, and as they floated down to the waiting crowd below it was seen that each bore the sign "The Fatted Calf," and the brokers proceeded to kill them in the most approved style. Then a dummy man, also made of inflated bladders and labeled "Louis Wormser," fell into the brokers' midst. A shout went up.

"Here comes Louis," they cried, and a moment later, as the figure landed, the brokers had treated it as they had the calves.

When President Keppler had obtained a semblance of order, he tried to tell the crowd around the platform how thankful they ought to be for the prosperity they were enjoying. He struggled to make himself heard, and a moment later there was a yell of approval as an ivory and gold gavel, the gift of the members, was handed to him. Then C. E. Knoblauch, one of the most popular men on the Exchange, who was a Rough Rider with Gov. Roosevelt, forced his way through the crowd and proceeded to distribute the gifts. By his side stood Isidor Wormser, and from all over the house came cries of "Izzy, Izzy," "What it is, is it," while the crowd bombarded the banker with confetti.

Archie Pell was summoned first, and Mr. Knoblauch handed him a copy of his family tree, marked "The Royal Family." It was a collection of royal flushes pasted on a green cloth. Robert P. Doremus, Commodore of the Atlantic Yacht Club, after being told that he had won everything in the sloop class, received "a schooner of deep draught" in the shape of a mammoth beer glass. McPherson Kennedy got a handsome silver-trimmed cigar case, and as F. Dwight Porter came blushingly forward, "Santa Claus" Knoblauch hauled him a bewitching blonde doll, telling him that now he had a soubrette of his very own. The crowd yelled, and Porter hugged the blonde baby to his manly chest.

Walter Watson, who tooled a coach last season at Monmouth, got a ticket for next season for the coach, "with the wine thrown in and the bonds thrown out." The ticket was a miniature coach horn. Eddie Wasserman, whose escapade in London was still fresh in the minds of his friends, received a catcher's mask, with the warning that he should wear it on occasions similar to the last one in London. William McClure, the Secretary of the Exchange, got a massive silver inkstand, and George J. Weaver a toy automobile. Richard King, Jr., who, Mr. Knoblauch said, often got ruffled while he was trading in Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, got a pair of curling irons, and "Marks" of Wormsers got a monkey on a stick. An axe was given to Frank Savin, with which he was told he could "split blocks," and William Weeber, the roll keeper of the Exchange, had a pocketbook handed to him with the expressed hope that it would always be full.

All this time the yelling, the confetti throwing, and the hat smashing went on right merrily to the great delight of the hatters in the neighborhood. Messenger boys were running about with fists full of bankbills, looking like ticket speculators. Later a number of women who had been in the galleries descended to the floor, and when at the end the band walked around playing a lively march tune the brokers fell into line, and the women, carried away by the spirit of the occasion, marched with them.

For hours afterward the restaurants about the Exchange were filled with merry lunching parties. The streets looked like the day after the carnival, and the messengers found out-of-the-way corners in which to count up their tips. It was a great holiday ushering in for the Stock Exchange.

ON THE CONSOLIDATED BOARD.

Musical and Vaudeville Programmes Amuse Brokers and Guests.

On the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange the members and their friends enjoyed an entertainment which in point of enthusiasm and genuine pleasure was not one whit behind that on the larger Exchange. The committee in charge of the entertainment were H. L. Joeckel, Chairman; W. E. Valentine, and Gus Weinberg.

Long before the close of business the galleries were crowded with friends of the brokers, who watched with interest the wild scramble to buy and sell stocks during the morning. The gong sounded, and business at an end, a corps of carpenters took possession of the floor, and in short order had erected a platform in the middle of the room, while at the same time the finishing touches to the general decoration of the room were completed. Over the Chairman's platform had been suspended three large flags, while potted palms and plants here and there added to the pleasing effect.

Promptly at 12:30 o'clock the programme was begun by the Eighth Regiment Band, under the leadership of Charles J. Crowley, the opening selection being Sutton's march, "Electric Wave." Following this came other selections, including Strauss's "Artist's Life," Stern's "Popular Georgia," Patrie's "Asleep in the Deep," Benedix's "American Melodies," and Beyer's "Happy Hours in Coontown." Following this came the vaudeville part of the entertainment, including a tenor solo by C. McKay Smock, a "talk" by "Press" Eldridge, styled "Commander in Chief of the Army of Fun"; songs by the Eureka trio, a selection by "Ed" Latelle, musical comedian, and more music by the Eighth Regiment Band.

The entertainment concluded with a grand march around, headed by the band.

MRS. HOWARD GOULD'S GUESTS

Nearly a Hundred East Side Children Enjoy Her Hospitality.

Mrs. Howard Gould, according to her annual custom, gave a Christmas tree to nearly a hundred east side children yesterday afternoon in Tuxedo Hall, Madison Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street. The little guests, who had been invited in accordance with a list compiled by Mrs. L. S. Bainbridge, Superintendent of the New York City Mission Society, arrived in a procession of stages which afterward returned them to their homes.

The children, some of them coatless, but all sportlessly clean, were received in a commodious ante-room, where they first witnessed a Punch and Judy show and a wonderful sleight-of-hand performance, and then they had lunch. There were sandwiches, coffee, and ice cream, topped off with lady fingers, macaroons, and dainty little chocolate cakes, and meringues, served to them by Mrs. Gould herself and a number of her friends who had come to see the happy show.

Mrs. Gould looked almost as pleased as the merriest of her tiny guests as she moved about among them clad in a black cloth tailor-made suit and waist with pink Persian velvet and a pink velvet hat. Mr. Gould was there, too, and surveyed the scene with placid satisfaction.

After full justice had been done to the dainties, Mrs. Kirkpatrick struck up a lively march on the piano, and Santa Claus suddenly appeared in the room from no one knew where. The folding doors rolled apart and a chorus of delighted "Ohs!" and "Ahs!" burst from the children, for there, in the middle of the big room, stood the tree, bending under a weight of brilliant ornaments all gleaming in the light of scores of red, white, and blue electric globes, dispersed among its branches, while great ranparts of presents inclosed the lawn of fresh green moss from which it grew.

The procession about the tree was more of a dance than a march, and the shouts of childish glee almost drowned the music of the piano. Then Santa Claus, who had been cutting all sorts of funny capers, gave out the presents, each marked with the name of the recipient. Each girl had a pretty dress, all tied up, with a handle to carry home, and a beautifully dressed doll, and for each boy there was a pair of shoes and mittens of just the right size, and a drawing slate of ground glass, with lots of wonderful pictures to trace, and to each boy and girl the Saint gave a big box of candy, and in one corner there were great heaps of sweet popcorn balls, fresh oranges, and ripe, red apples.

The little ones had a romp about the room, and it was late in the afternoon before they started for home with their armfuls of gifts.

STUNNED, THOUGHT DEAD.

Veteran Montgomery Suddenly Revived in the Hospital and Walked Home.

Hugh Montgomery, Grand Army veteran, was carried into Bellevue Hospital yesterday evening unconscious and apparently dying. He was laid on a cot, and two doctors bent over him, making a close examination for the injuries.

Suddenly the patient started up in the cot and ripped out an oath. "What's the matter here?" he demanded, in a burst of lurid profanity. "What do you mean by running me in like this? What have I done?" He then displayed his Grand Army badge and said it was a shame that an old veteran could not be let alone.

Montgomery, who is a laborer, was on his way to his home, at 440 West Thirty-first Street, when, being fatigued, he had jumped on the rear end of a passing truck, traveling west along Twenty-third Street, and sat there dangling his legs over the end of the truck until a street car came up and knocked him off. He was left lying in the middle of the street, apparently dead.

On the way to the hospital in the ambulance he displayed not the slightest signs of life, and the doctors were merely trying to find out what the fatal injuries were when Montgomery interrupted them. He then left the hospital, his only injury being a slight bruise on the leg where the bumper of the car had struck him.

SHOUTING CONSTABLE IGNORED

He Wanted Escaping Prisoner Caught, but People Thought He Was Crazy.

Constable Conrad Kaufman of Rockland County was passing along Chambers Street near West Street yesterday afternoon on his way to the Kings County Penitentiary with two prisoners, when suddenly one of the prisoners, James Foley, broke away and made a dash for liberty. The constable did not dare leave his other prisoner, and could only shout lustily and gesticulate in the direction of the fugitive. There was no policeman in sight, and the pedestrians, not understanding the situation, thought the shouting and perspiring Kaufman was crazy. The constable tried several times to induce the other prisoner to get up speed and run with him in a sort of team race, but the other balked, and the fugitive disappeared from sight.

After disposing of his remaining prisoner Kaufman went to Police Headquarters and left a description of the escaped convict. Foley had been convicted of disorderly conduct.

BRIDEGROOM SAMPLIN A THIEF.

Married Only a Month, but Has Been Stealing from Letters for Three Years.

Post Office Inspector Towison of Boston arrested in the Registered Letter Division of the General Post Office yesterday Clerk Joseph Samplin, whose thefts of coin from registered mail during the past three years will, according to his own confession, amount to several thousand dollars.

The inspector had been placed at work as an extra clerk beside Samplin, and saw him take $3.05 from a registered letter. After the thief was caught the 140 clerks cheered loudly, as each one has felt himself under suspicion since the thefts became known.

Complaints have been made to Chief Inspector King of losses of money in registered letters received at the New York Post Office for the past three years. Samplin, the guilty clerk, let it be understood among his fellows that he was especially designated to watch for the thief. During the Christmas rush Chief King decided to place an unknown Inspector at work next to Samplin. Towison arrived yesterday, donned a suit of working clothes, and took his place next Samplin. He had been at work but twenty minutes, said Chief King, when he saw the suspected clerk furtively slip a registered letter with a sharp eraser and remove several coins. Springing to Samplin's side, Inspector Towison placed him under arrest while the money was still in his hands.

Samplin confessed to Chief King. He has been a Post Office clerk for eight years, and for the past three says that he has been daily removing money from letters by a clever device. Only coin was taken by him, and this he could feel in the envelope within the Post Office envelope. Shaking the letter until of its own weight the money would break through its first covering, he would slit the outer envelope just enough to remove the coins.

One month ago, having saved enough of his nine-hundred-dollar salary, with his stealings, he says he considered he had sufficient money to support a wife and consequently married a young lady of Harlem. "This disgrace will break my wife's heart," he said to Chief King, weeping bitterly. "I don't know why I did it. I just couldn't resist the jingle of the coins, and after I took the first dollar I couldn't stop. I knew some day I'd get caught, but I couldn't resist temptation."

Samplin was held by Commissioner Shields in $2,000 bail for examination.

COUGHED HIMSELF TO DEATH.

Copious Draughts of Water Failed to Save William Stalen.

William Stalen, forty-one years old, of 78 Morris Street, Jersey City, employed as engineer of the tugboat I. S. Smith, was seized with a fit of coughing yesterday. A second fit followed the first, and then the coughing became continuous. He tried to stop the coughing by copious draughts of water, but they did no good.

Finally the coughing resulted in the rupture of a blood vessel which caused death from internal hemorrhage.

TELEPHONE POLES AT AUCTION.

Will Be Seized in Union Hill and Sold for Taxes.

The Hudson Telephone Company having failed to pay the taxes assessed against it in Union Hill, Collector of Arrears Eugene Knox, at noon yesterday, posted notices throughout the town that all the company's poles within the municipal limits would be sold for taxes on Dec. 28.

The Western Union and Postal Telegraph Companies were also included in the original notices, but these companies have offered a compromise, which will probably be accepted.

Nearly seventy years since, Dr. D. Jayne wrote the prescription for Jayne's Expectorant, and still it's the best remedy.—Adv.

TWENTY BROADWAY BLOCKS TORN UP

Progress on the West Side Section of the Underground Railway.

Three Contractors at Work with Big Gangs of Men—Blasting Rock Near the Surface—Supports for Car Tracks.

Broadway is now torn up by the tunnel sub-contractors between the Circle at Fifty-ninth Street and West One Hundred and Twenty-third Street, in twenty different blocks, including Fifty-ninth to Sixty-fourth, Eighty-second to Eighty-third, Eighty-fourth to Eighty-fifth, Eighty-sixth to Ninetieth, and from One Hundred and Fourteenth to One Hundred and Twenty-third Streets. Construction on this part of the line is in the hands of three contractors, the Circle portion including the section from Forty-seventh to Sixtieth Street, in Broadway, is being built by Naughton & Co., from Sixtieth to One Hundred and Fourth by William Bradley, and from One Hundred and Fourth to One Hundred and Twenty-fifth by John Shields, all of whom are employing large forces of men and horses. In all these blocks the trees are down, and the excavations through rock and earth are in several places down to sub-grade. Work has gone ahead to such an extent in three of the blocks between Eighty-second and Ninetieth Street since Oct. 1 that to-morrow Contractor Bradley will begin laying concrete preparatory for the installation of steel a week later.

By early Spring there will be hardly a tree left in the centre of the Boulevard, and with the gradual encroachment of the tunnel builders along the thoroughfare, some peculiar complaints are heard. These come from the bicycle men and women who watch with displeasure the encroachments on their territory. Those who have for years been accustomed to make a rendezvous of the Circle and the lower Boulevard around Sixtieth Street are in a quandary these days for a place to meet next Summer. Likewise a serious proposition confronts the numerous bicycle stores and repair shops in the neighborhood as to where their next season's business is coming from.

Near the northwest corner of the Columbus Statue is a great pile of hundreds of tons of excavated rock. To the north, east, and south of the statue, taking up practically all the space, except the car tracks and narrow roadways, is an excavation daily growing larger and deeper, while huge derricks, hoisting machinery, trusses for track support, and other impediments obstruct the remaining space.

The excavation is for the station, which will be reached on either side of Broadway by two entrances from flights of steps extending to about sixteen feet below the street level to platforms 200 feet long. The down-town tracks will be reached from the west side of Broadway between the Circle and Sixtieth Street; the up-town tracks by two stairways. Express trains will not stop at the Circle station.

A thirty-inch water main is now being carried outside of the tunnel station limits to the south of the Columbus Monument, and its connections will be made by passing over the roof of the tunnel, which is along here not more, on an average, than five or six feet under the street. Outside of these main pipes the engineers have provided for the removal of 200 feet of an old sewer from the street to the west side of the street under the sidewalk. Many of the smaller pipes and the conduits will be carried over the tunnel roof.

The inner tracks of the road as they will curve in just miss the monument, and a problem confronts the engineers to hold it up while the excavation is going on. Plans are now being developed to get by without disturbing any save a small part of the foundation. Rock will have to be blasted out of about two-thirds of the area to be occupied by the station. Much of the preliminary work at the Circle has been done by Naughton & Co., in laying tracks and making connections with the street intersections for the Third Avenue cars, the changes having been hastened to save tearing up the street at a later period.

Below Fifty-ninth Street, in Broadway, Naughton & Co. have also opened the street in five excavations between Forty-seventh and Sixtieth Streets. At Fifty-eighth Street, running along by the Virginia Hotel, is an intricate mass of pipes which will take months to properly dispose of. A rock foundation coming almost to the street surface extends solidly to Forty-sixth Street, and is being carefully cut away and blasted with small charges.

In William Bradley's section ten blocks have been torn up. These run from Sixtieth to Sixty-fourth Streets inclusive, and, beginning again at Eighty-second Street, the remaining six extend to Ninetieth Street. Mr Bradley began his excavation work between Eighty-seventh and Eighty-eighth Streets Oct. 1, having started Aug. 22 to move a 30-inch water main. Instead of running a central air power plant for his drills, as some of the other contractors have done, Mr. Bradley is utilizing individual engines, employing eight derricks and two cableways.

Fifty feet of roadway are opened at a time. An interesting problem to the lay mind is presented in the manner of supporting the car tracks. Trusses built of heavy timber, fifty feet in length and weighing six tons are swung on either side of the tracks over the excavations, and upon these the tracks, with the underground pipes, are temporarily suspended. When the tunnel grade is reached the tracks are supported on trestle work built up from the bottom and the truss supports moved. While the tracks are in suspension the trusses are subjected to a dead weight of seventy-five tons to the fifty-foot span, which is augmented whenever a car passes over by thirteen additional tons and the added weight of the load of passengers. Adjustment is made with mathematical precision with what the engineers call needle beams with bolt hangings, these being heavy rods of steel employed in the manner of jack screws. The truss itself is supported at either end of the excavation upon cribs giving a solid foundation. When the truss is ready to be moved to the next block, it is jacked up, placed on small hand cars, and run ahead with a team. At this period traffic is stopped on the car line for not exceeding an hour and a half, beginning about midnight. The truss between Eighty-seventh and Eighty-eighth streets was moved last night and placed in position on the block ahead.

Contractor Bradley is now down to tunnel grade in five blocks, having completed 400 lineal feet of excavation. The deepest section of his section lies between Ninety-eighth and One Hundred and Fourth Streets, where he will be compelled to excavate from 35 to 40 feet below the street level.

At One Hundred and Third Street the four-track service ends, two tracks on each branch continuing to the end of the line, one at Bronx Park, the other at Bailey Avenue, on the west side.

On this section before grade is struck it will be necessary to remove 343,000 yards of rock and 200,000 yards of earth. There will be used in construction of the tunnel proper in this section 13,000 tons of steel. At present nearly 400 men are employed by the contractor and nearly 70 teams.

Of Contractor Shields's twenty-one blocks nothing has been done south of One Hundred and Fourteenth Street. Between this point and One Hundred and Sixteenth Street steel work will begin about Jan. 1. Between One Hundred and Seventeenth and One Hundred and Eighteenth Streets is a deep rock cut 20 feet down, but yet 15 feet from sub-grade. Between the north side of One Hundred and Twenty-second Street the tunnel portal to half way between One Hundred and Twenty-third and One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Streets is a masonry line cut for the approach to the steel viaduct, beginning at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and leading over Manhattan Valley to One Hundred and Thirty-third Street, where the tunnel again begins. Early in the new year the contractor will, he says, commence construction on the masonry arch at One Hundred and Twentieth and One Hundred and Twenty-first Streets, the entire trench in the block being down to sub-grade.

In sewer work Mr. Shields has moved a twenty-inch water main, but with the excavations enumerated little else has so far been done on his contract. A much larger force will be employed early in the Spring.

No New Trial in Cairo Cafe Case.

Justice Blanchard yesterday denied a motion for a new trial in the case of Margaret A. Oussani, the proprietress of the Cairo Café, on West Twenty-ninth Street, against whom a verdict was rendered in an action brought by the State Excise Commissioner for the recovery of $1,000, being the penalty imposed by the Raines law for violation of the statute. The Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York was made a co-defendant with the Oussani woman.

MILBURY NOT AT HIS OFFICE.

Man Who Used Unauthorized Stationery to Solicit Funds Disappears.

Arthur W. Milbury, whose appeals for money for educational work typewritten on the letter-head of the Committee of One Hundred on India Famine Relief have been declared to be unauthorized by the members of the committee, which has now passed out of existence, was not at his office, at 73 Bible House, yesterday, and it was said that he had not been seen about the building for a week.

He was the Assistant Secretary of the committee, whose name still appears upon the office door. The elevator man referred all inquirers to R. Lenz, who was in charge of the printing establishment of George Hughes & Co., on the same floor.

"He can tell you all about Milbury," he said, but Mr. Lenz could tell very little. While the committee was in operation, he said, the firm had done considerable printing for them, and in this way he had become acquainted with Mr. Milbury, who had asked them to receive letters and packages for him when he was out.

"He hasn't been here since last Saturday," said Mr. Lenz, "but you never can tell when he will drop in. There hasn't been any mail for him, and I suppose he has had his address changed at the Post Office. The address he left us is International General Company, Broad and Chestnut Streets, Philadelphia."

It was learned yesterday that Mr. Milbury has been examined in supplementary proceedings on a judgment of $220.23 obtained against him by William C. Bloomingdale, a commission merchant of 95 Broad Street. The examination was taken Nov. 22, 1898. He had been promoter of the People's Restaurant Committee. He testified as follows:

"My name is Arthur W. Milbury. I live at 170 Bleecker Street. I am the Secretary of the Industrial Christian Alliance. The People's Restaurant Committee was organized in 1893, it was organized as a temporary relief committee, with no financial or official connection with the Industrial Christian Alliance. At this time I was Secretary of the Alliance and one of the Executive Committee and promoter of the People's Restaurant Committee.

"The People's Restaurant Committee started off with a fund of $13,000 or $14,000 collected by subscriptions for this particular purpose. The idea was mine, but I never had any official connection with it, except as a member of the Executive Committee. I have no personal property. I have spent about $10 for clothing in the last two years. I get paid my salary weekly. I have less than a dollar in my pocket. I have no money owing to me outside of my salary. I have no reliance for my support outside of my secretaryship. I belong to the City Club, the Reform, and the Quill. I do not know what my dues are. I only know that they are long overdue."

In his recent appeal for aid for educational work, Mr. Milbury states that he and his associates have already spent several thousand dollars without outside aid, and are now in critical need of $1,000. Mr. Milbury was formerly a newspaper reporter.

ROWAN ACCUSED BY EMPLOYERS.

Young Society Man of Jersey City Arrested for Larceny.

John Rowan, twenty-eight years old, a well-known society man of Jersey City, who studied at Yale for five years, was held in the First Criminal Court of Jersey City yesterday on a charge of grand larceny. Rowan was arrested in New Haven, Conn., on Friday. The complainants against him are Bernstein & Co. of Newark Avenue. A previous charge of larceny against him was settled by his making restitution and paying a fine last week. He then declared to the members of his firm that he had made a full confession.

His employers now say that they have found that he stole much more than he confessed; that his stealings began last March, and that they have traced $400 worth of goods that he pawned within the last three months. How he got the goods, which were chiefly overcoats, out of the store is a mystery. It is believed that he had one or more accomplices, and further arrests are expected. Rowan was held for further examination.

Brooklyn Unions Homeless.

The Central Labor Union of Brooklyn made homeless by the burning of the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum, Myrtle and Willoughby Avenues, has established temporary headquarters in Columbus Hall, corner of Court and State Streets, Brooklyn. Other organizations which have been made homeless by the fire and which have ever since been hustling for new quarters include the Upholsterers' Union, the Metal Polishers' Union, Brewers' Union No. 60, Framers' Union No. 90, Carpenters' Union No. 32, and German Athletic Society Voerwarts.

A RAPID TRANSIT HONEYMOON.

Mr. and Mrs. Bucklin Meet Only on the Train To and From Their Work.

Gilford S. Bucklin of Mount Vernon and his wife, Jennie, who is the daughter of Edward Giardon, a dealer in artificial granite at 146 Broadway, with a residence in New Rochelle, are at present enjoying a novel kind of honeymoon. They were secretly married late in November, and on account of the dislike of the bride's father for the bridegroom he did not learn of the marriage until Friday. Mr. Giardon says that he will never permit his son-in-law to enter his house, but that his daughter is welcome to stay with him as long as she wishes. Mrs. Bucklin acts as her father's stenographer and is still living with him. The only opportunity she has of seeing her husband is on the train to this city every morning. She takes an early train every morning, and as her husband is also employed in the city he meets her, and they make the journey together.

With the exception of two days spent at the Savoy Hotel, when Mrs. Bucklin was supposed to be on a visit to relations, this is the only honeymoon that the couple have had. As yet Bucklin has not summoned up sufficient courage to meet his father-in-law, but he hopes that at Christmas the latter will relent and that there will be a reconciliation. Mr. Giardon, however, says that Christmas never makes any difference with his feelings and that he will never allow Bucklin to enter his house.

Mrs. Bucklin is twenty-one years old, a brunette, and very attractive. She is a member of the French Catholic Church of New Rochelle, while her husband, who lives with his mother at Mount Vernon, is an Episcopalian. Bucklin has been acquainted with Mr. Giardon for many years, but has never been in his good graces. When the Spanish war broke out he gained the admiration of the daughter, however, by leaving his position to enlist in the Seventy-first Regiment. When he returned to Mount Vernon he had abundant opportunities for meeting Miss Giardon on the train to New York and they became engaged.

In November Miss Giardon left her home ostensibly to visit relatives in this city. She went instead to the Little Church Around the Corner, where she was married to Bucklin by the Rev. Dr. Houghton. After spending two days at the Savoy Hotel with her husband she returned home again and resumed work as her father's stenographer. She had not the courage to tell him of her elopement, and he did not learn anything about it until Friday, when she left a note on his desk telling him about it and asking his forgiveness. Mr. Giardon said that he would forgive her, and allow her to remain with him as long as she wished, but would never see her husband. Since then she has retained her position as her father's stenographer and remains with him in his office all day, only seeing her husband on the train in the morning. She says that she expects her father to relent before Christmas.

Mr. Giardon when seen yesterday refused to tell what his objections to Bucklin are. "I have a sufficient reason for objecting to him as a son-in-law," he said, "but it is a private reason and I don't want to talk about it to any one. I'll never let him in my house, and if he thinks that I am going to relent because it's Christmas he's mistaken. My daughter will probably remain with me, but I do not want to have anything to do with him. The announcement of the marriage was not only a great surprise to me, but a great shock as well, and was anything but a pleasant Christmas present."

POLICE DISPUTE A DOCTOR.

Physician Says Boyce Died from Poison, but the Police Say from Heart Disease

The Brooklyn police believe that heart disease caused the death of Patrick Boyce, a stonecutter, who died at his home, 467 Essex Street, yesterday morning, while Dr. Francis F. Miller of 118 Pennsylvania Avenue, who attended Boyce, believes that he died from ptomaine poisoning. Boyce was taken suddenly ill on Friday night, and Dr. Miller learned that he had taken a cup of chocolate at supper and that he had also eaten something in a restaurant or saloon in Manhattan in the afternoon.

Dr. Miller took the remains of the cake of chocolate to the Liberty Avenue Station. Detective Kaiser found that Boyce had returned home on Friday evening feeling dizzy and complaining of pain in the region of the heart. Mrs. Boyce said that several other members of the family had partaken of the chocolate with her husband and had not been affected by it. The cake of chocolate will be examined in the Health Department laboratory. Dr. Miller said there was no doubt in his mind that Boyce's death had been caused by ptomaine poisoning.

HEAD NURSE FOR BELLEVUE.

Otto W. F. Shutts Placed in Charge of Alcoholic Ward.

Commissioner Keller of the Department of Charities yesterday morning transferred Otto W. F. Shutts, a graduate nurse of City Island Hospital, to duty in the alcoholic ward in Bellevue Hospital. Shutts is to be head nurse of the ward.

The records of the alcoholic wards show that W. C. Sutters, who is said to have died in Utica as the result of abuses received while in the alcoholic ward of Bellevue, was received at the hospital on Nov. 23. The diagnosis of his case is given as como gastritis and alcoholism. The ambulance surgeon said that Sutters was suffering greatly from alcoholism, although the family stated that he had not been drinking for some time previous to being taken ill.

Thomas Sutters, a brother of the dead man, and Mrs. Perry, his sister, were seen yesterday, and stated that their brother was not suffering from alcoholism, and that he was made delirious by the pain he suffered from a kidney disease. The entire family are positive in their statement that Sutters never drank, except a glass of beer now and then.

Dr. R. W. Hill, Inspector of the State Board of Charities, and Byron Childs visited Commissioner Keller yesterday. Mr. Keller went over with them the testimony he had taken in the matter of the alleged hospital abuses.

William Rhinelander Stewart, President of the State Board of Charities, said yesterday that the board had passed the resolution regarding the investigation of Bellevue, merely to give the power of appointing such a committee as he thought necessary. Meanwhile, he said he had delegated Dr. Hill to supervise and report upon the investigation that is being conducted by Commissioner Keller. He said he thought the Commissioner's investigation would be sufficiently thorough to obviate the necessity of any investigation by the State Board of Charities.

CHICAGO NEWS OF THE WEEK.

J. D. Rockefeller's Christmas Gift to the University of Chicago—Retail Houses and Jobbers.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—John D. Rockefeller still keeps educators and the public generally gasping by the magnificence of his gifts to the University of Chicago. His Christmas present to the institution on the Midway is $1,500,000. Unlike some of his previous donations, this money is available immediately, and will be devoted to erecting some buildings of which the big college stands in need. This makes the total of Mr. Rockefeller's contributions $9,123,874. The total gifts of all other patrons is only $3,872,000.

Mr. Rockefeller easily outstrips all other endowers of colleges in the amount of his donations. Following is a comparative list dealing with American universities:

John D. Rockefeller, University of Chicago	$9,123,874
Stephen Girard, Girard College	7,000,000
Charles Pratt, Pratt Institute	3,600,000
Johns Hopkins, Johns Hopkins University	3,600,000
Anthony J. Drexel, Drexel Institute	3,000,000
L. Stanford, Leland Stanford, Jr., University	2,500,000
Ezra Cornell, Cornell University	1,500,000
The Vanderbilts, Vanderbilt University	1,100,000
Seth Low, Columbia University	1,000,000

The other contributors to the prosperity of the University of Chicago follow:

Miss Helen Culver	$1,000,000
Martin A. Ryerson	500,000
Marshall Field	400,000
William B. Ogden estate	300,000
Charles T. Yerkes	300,000
Sidney A. Kent	225,000
Mrs. Charles Hitchcock	200,000
Mrs. Caroline E. Haskell	150,000
Silas B. Cobb	150,000
George C. Walker	130,000
A. C. Bartlett	125,000
Mrs. M. S. Foster	80,000
Leon Mandel	75,000
Henry A. Rust	50,000
Mrs. Henrietta Snell	50,000
Mrs. Mary Beecher	50,000
Mrs. Elizabeth Kelly	50,000
Mrs. Emmons Blaine	27,000

Reporters on daily newspapers gave the members of the Grand Jury on Thursday an insight into the way in which really valuable information may be obtained about crime in a big city. Some crude and distorted views of ministers of the gospel on the haunts of vice were not satisfactory to the jurors, and they sought of the newspaper men calm, concise statements of fact. They got them, and the result was much more satisfactory, not only in the furtherance of the crusade, but also as to locating the places against which war is to be waged.

Saloon keepers of the more reputable kind, and policemen whose beats lie in "red light" territory are to be called to supplement the evidence given by the reporters. The latter told of methods of the Police Department, especially regarding the receipt by it of money from gamblers and divekeepers for protection. Recommendations for the continuance of the investigation of city evils were made by the newspaper men, and most of them will be carried out. The examination of the reporters, in fact, was only preliminary, and from it the jurors will determine what line of inquiry they will pursue.

This has been a prosperous retail season for Chicago, and business seems to be getting better instead of on the wane. Jobbing houses, too, are enjoying a tremendous rush of business. Many of the big jobbing firms are months behind in their orders, which are coming in so fast that the prospect of catching up is becoming more and more remote. One mail order jewelry house is 6,000 orders behind, and the managers are in despair, for they have no prospect of getting the goods to fill the orders for a long time—the wholesalers to whom they look for relief being behind also. What the cause of this rush of business is puzzles the traders. It is far and beyond the usual holiday congestion. They are willing to concede that it is a wave of prosperity, and let it go at that, for they are too busy to try to figure out any other reasons.

NEBRASKA'S SENATORIAL RACE.

D. E. Thompson Confident of Winning—Assistant Secretary Meiklejohn May Have a Hard Fight.

Special to The New York Times.

LINCOLN, Neb. Dec. 22.—Sensational correspondents have injected many unpleasant features in the Senatorial fight in this State. There are nearly one dozen avowed candidates for the two positions in the Senate from Nebraska, and of these but one man is looked upon as sure of election. D. E. Thompson of this city will be the Senator from the South Platte portion of the State unless, as is improbable, all candidates should combine against him. Of the others George D. Meiklejohn, Assistant Secretary of War, is the leading candidate, and unless combined against by a number of others, will probably win out in a long and bitter fight.

Prospects for a prolonged struggle are good. Mr. Meiklejohn has arrived in the city from Washington to conduct his campaign. The Thompson interests are friendly to Meiklejohn, and he would receive aid from Mr. Thompson if it were deemed good policy on the part of the stronger candidate. Mr. Thompson has so far shown plainly his desire to conduct his campaign without entangling alliances.

The two Houses will cast 133 votes on joint ballot for Senator. Of this number of votes the Republicans have a total of 71. Mr. Thompson's friends claim he will enter the fight with more than fifty Republican votes. Just how nearly this is correct cannot be told, as more than half of the members on the Republican side refuse to state where they stand.

D. E. Thompson is a wealthy man. His wealth is estimated at more than $1,000,000. He came to Lincoln twenty-five years ago a poor boy. He took a position as a trucker in a railroad freight depot. Later he became a brakeman for the Burlington Road, and by dint of hard work he soon rose to the position of Superintendent of this road west of the river. Later he resigned this position to manage his own property, the Lincoln Gas and Electric Lighting plant, and in this he made a fortune. Not long ago he sold the lighting plant, and is now devoting his attention to the management of an insurance company, which he practically owns, and to the management of a line of railway hotels along the Burlington system.

Mr. Thompson is very popular with the laboring element of the State, but is opposed by many old-time politicians, who claim that two years ago he tried to sell out the Republican Party to secure an election to the Senate through the aid of Populist votes.

"Buy China and Glass Right"

HIGGINS & SEITER

FINE CHINA

RICH CUT GLASS.

NEW YORK'S GREATEST PRESENT STORE—AND WHY:

Partly because of the Nature of the Goods—Glass and China, as we sell it, being both eminently Useful, and pre-eminently Artistic—making the Ideal Gift.

Partly because of the superb and absolutely unsurpassed variety—from the pretty, inexpensive trifle, to the magnificent Dinner Set of Costly China, or the full service of elaborately Cut Glass.

A vastly larger stock this year than ever,—
The Art Works of the World contributing
Their rarest, choicest, loveliest effects.

And once more, because Holiday Season, or any other season, our original price policy,

"1/4 Less Than Elsewhere," is always steadfastly in force, unless, as often happens, reductions from established values are even greater, as will be the case to-morrow.

So great were our plans for the Christmas and New Year purchasing of 1900 that although our sales for this year have far exceeded that of any previous year, our stock is yet complete, and for those who have delayed purchasing their Christmas gifts they will find here not odds and ends, but a full, complete Christmas stock. Extra inducements to early buyers, such as the following:

STEINS. A present always appreciated by a man is a stein. We were fortunate in just securing a late shipment at a great reduction. $1.00 buys a very handsome stein. From this price upward.

ROYAL BONN PLAQUES. We have about 50 Delft Blue Royal Bonn Plaques. They ordinarily sell from $5.00 upward. You take your choice of the entire lot at $3.75 each.

FRENCH VASES, TEPLITZ BUSTS, 20% REDUCTION.

For Monday only we will offer our entire line of French Ormolu mounted vases and genuine imported Teplitz busts and figures at a special reduction of 20 per cent. Remember that this reduction will be for Monday only. After Christmas the present prices will be maintained.

BRONZE LAMPS. A useful present and one that is always appreciated is a good lamp. We have recently had mounted after our own design some 25 or 30 very handsome bronze lamps. They are mounted with appropriate shades, and instead of at the ordinary prices you take your choice from the entire lot at $12.00 complete.

Large Assortment of Other Lamps at Interesting Prices.

CHINA CLOCKS. In all perhaps 50 china clocks. Some in Dresden with raised flowers, others with hand painted decoration. Many different colors, shapes, sizes and styles. Some moderately priced at $25.00. We will place the entire line on sale Monday and offer them to you at $10.00 each.

GOLD GLASS. Next to cut glass perhaps comes the pretty gold glass. The designs of fruit and flowers are first cut in the glass and then filled in with gold. There are bon-bons in many shapes and sizes, fruit or berry bowls, olive dishes, etc., from $1.50 upwards.

STERLING MOUNTED CUT GLASS CLARET JUGS.

We have just received the last lot of Sterling silver mounted rich cut glass claret jugs. The mountings are heavy and beautiful. There are many different styles of cuttings and they are moderately priced at $8.75, $10.00, $12.75, $16.50, $18.00 and $27.50.

Unusual preparations have been made for Monday deliveries, and our customers can be sure that all purchases made will be delivered before Christmas morning.

The Pianola Yourself and Your Piano.

The Pianola is an Ideal Christmas Gift.

Have you a piano?
If you have spent your money for a piano, how much good do you realize from it?
Do you use it yourself?
Do half the members of your family use it?
Is it ever used?
How many selections are included in the aggregate repertory of all who use it—more than ten, fifteen or twenty-five?
Do they play well—well enough to entertain musical people?

Do You Know that With the Pianola

You and every member of your family can play the piano—
You can play anything you wish to hear—Liszt's Rhapsodies, Chopin's Nocturnes, Sousa's Marches, Coon Songs, etc—
You have complete control of the expression and can get an artistic, vivifying effect?
Paderewski has a Pianola—he has two Pianolas. After having one for several months in his home in Paris, he has just ordered another for his residence in Switzerland.

Nobody is getting the full value from his piano unless he has a Pianola. Many never expected to get much use from it. They bought it because they thought they had to have a piano. The Pianola has changed all this. The piano becomes a "live pleasure" and every member of the family a participant and thereby enjoys an intimate acquaintance with the great composers.

PRICE $250.

Can be bought by moderate monthly payments.

The Pianola is an ideal Christmas gift, as it brings pleasure to the entire family throughout the year.

DIFFICULTIES OF REFORMING CHINA

Only the People's Helplessness Makes Success Possible.

Boxer Leaders Would Be Punished Severely If Obliged to Look On at the Work of Reform.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

PEKING, Oct. 29.—Should peace terms move ahead on the basis proposed by the diplomatic representatives of the allied powers, the traditions and practices of centuries in Chinese affairs will be reversed and a revolution accomplished among a most conservative and exclusive people. If China were not helpless the outlook for a settlement on such terms would be most unpromising. It cannot be said even now to point to anything better than a long step in the direction favored by commercial interests and agitated with more zeal than discretion by the reformers in the middle and southern parts of the empire.

If it rested with the people of China to decide what should be done, the question would doubtless be referred back by them to those who must now deal with it. Possibly they might not consider themselves incapable, for modesty is hardly a native trait in any conspicuous degree; but the habit of reliance upon those in authority has become almost instinctive. The people are not wholly unaware that they are and have been victims of a gigantic confidence game. So were their ancestors, and precedent counts for so much with them that in general they rather enjoy being bunkoed. A native merchant is a good man with whom to deal, for he keeps his engagements, and the disposition of the people has been trained to a sense of fairness in matters of money, with variations from accepted methods elsewhere due to temperament and example.

The trouble is that the average Chinese mind, relying for guidance on the official class, cannot contemplate without excitement or prejudice any subject that involves China with another nation. Hence the payment of a foreign debt, incurred by methods regarded everywhere else as legitimate, stirs the spirit of revolt; while stealing and corruption, as indulged by the official class, pass as a matter of course.

Paternalism probably counts for more here than anywhere else. It has its highest form in the Government, which as an abstraction ennobles, embodies, and typifies the family tradition. The liberties taken or abuses fostered by the favorite sons of the empire, the office holders, sometimes provoke mischief or captious conduct by those upon whom nothing has been bestowed except the right of existence, and hence rebellions occur—affairs quite within the family. On the whole, however, the office holders do much us they like, and the people admire them and follow them as natural leaders.

When reform raised its head, its advocates were not of the ignorant, unquestioning level, but men who dared think for themselves, and who foresaw in commercial tendencies political disaster for China unless she fell into the world's procession. Their weakness was in lack of practical judgment. They tried to upset the ancient order at once, without preparing the way either at Court or among the people. Possibly little short of actual rebellion, with force and a widely roused sentiment behind it, would have been effectual. They were ready neither for that nor for an agitation that might pass as respectful and patriotic.

If the short work which the authorities made of them indicates the present temper toward reform, it may well be supposed that even should final foreign demands find imperial acceptance, the prospect of being restricted merely to adequate pay for services rendered and of having a foreign overseer always looking over the official shoulder will provoke all the opposition that the office-holding class can command. Deprivation of rich perquisites and the indignity of being watched by persons of co-ordinate authority, probably of superior authority in matters of complaint or appeal—make more bitter medicine than can be swallowed without trouble.

Anti-foreign influence must be made quite harmless as a condition of permanent peace; as an encouragement in the direction of peace. Punishment by death is the Chinese fashion of disposing of obnoxious persons. While some of the Europeans favored this method at first, and the demand for it finds frequent expression even yet, it may be doubted now if executions would be general were all the leading conspirators in foreign hands. Europe does not need to follow a style set in the Orient in this respect. Indeed, death might be a punishment more welcome to these lordly ones than if they were kept where they could do no mischief, and be compelled to witness the shedding of the scales that have long kept China blind. By pulling the fangs of evil influence, Europe can work sweeter and less uncivilized revenges than by a head-chopping exhibition. Heads have dropped in China for too many years to make that form of punishment specially terrorizing except to those immediately concerned, nor is suicide instructive or exemplary.

The attitude and intentions of the Empress Dowager must be judged largely by surmise. Doubtless she would like to be well out of her troubles, for by this time she must appreciate their gravity. Yet she cannot bring herself to give up the things she most fondly cherishes, and all her ingenuity has been, and probably will be, applied to a struggle to save what she may. Surprises being always in order, any day may bring substantial results; or plans may take a promising turn and then halt and hitch all through the cold season.

FREDERICK W. EDDY.

COST OF LAW DEPARTMENT.

Controller Coler Gives Out His Fourth Partial Analysis of the Budget.

Controller Coler yesterday gave out his fourth partial analysis of the Budget for 1901, taking the Law Department. He has previously taken the Police, Fire, and Park Departments, and is giving one of the analyses every week. The object in the Controller taking the time and trouble to have the statements compiled is so that the average citizen may the more readily understand the Budget.

In the Law Department in the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx for 1890 there were seventy-two men employed with a total cost, including aggregate salaries and expenses, of $201,200. The per capita cost that year was 122, and the men had an average salary of $1,978.33. The following year, and every year until 1898, salaries and all expenses, even including the number of men employed, rose gradually. In 1898 the expenses took a tremendous jump, as consolidation took place that year. From 1898 until the present time all five boroughs are reckoned with Manhattan and The Bronx.

In the Borough of Brooklyn, prior to the consolidation, the greatest cost for the Law Department was in 1897, when it reached a total of $79,370.57. The per capita cost that year was .074, with an average salary of $2,719.50 for a staff of twenty-four men. In Queens and Richmond the same year was the most expensive, the being cost being $26,866.75 and $30,634.42, respectively. Since 1897 all costs and statements are counted in the greater city.

In the appended table it will be seen that in the greater city, from 1890 to 1901, inclusive, there has been an increase of $161,-950.53 in the aggregate cost. It will also be noticed that the difference in the cost for the years 1897 and 1898 was $58,793.03, caused by extra work for consolidation. The per capita cost from 1890 to 1901 inclusive has risen .014, while from 1897 to 1898 it rose .018. A table of the cost, per capita cost and average salary, for 1890 to 1901, inclusive, is as follows:

Year.	Aggregate Cost.	Per Capita Cost.	Average Salary.
1890	$201,007.47	.105	$2,015.85
1891	275,316.53	.106	2,130.31
1892	279,760.48	.104	2,126.41
1893	284,122.57	.102	2,158.88
1894	283,091.99	.102	2,189.52
1895	291,734.74	.102	2,211.78
1896	338,048.35	.110	2,287.37
1897	351,511.74	.111	2,527.78
1898	421,104.77	.129	2,600.09
1899	423,038.00	.126	2,642.16
1900	423,048.00	.123	2,645.01
1901	423,048.00	.119	2,645.01

Seventy-first Regiment Anniversary.

In honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Seventy-first Regiment, Brig. Gen. George Moore Smith will review the command at the armory next Friday night. A reception will follow the military ceremonies, and many prominent military men have been invited.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

Such unfortunates as have to live in boarding houses or take their meals at restaurants have noticed a decrease in the frequency with which bacon and eggs are served in the one instance and in the increase in price of the same breakfast dish at the "popular price" restaurants. This increase of 10 cents or more in the price per portion in the dining saloons without an increase in the size of the portion has made some bachelors wonder as to the cause. The woman who runs a boarding house could tell him, for she keeps a close watch of the markets and knows that the price for both has gone kiting. Eggs of the strictly fresh type sell at from 45 to 60 cents a dozen, and cold storage eggs can rarely be had that are fit for use at less than 30 cents the dozen. The reason is that it is now the off season with most hens. They are laying so little that farmers whose hens do attend to business can get about any price they demand for fresh eggs. This will be the case until March or April, say the men who make a specialty in handling eggs. Fancy fresh eggs promise to go even higher in price before the Spring brings an ample supply again. Then there is a belief that there is a fairly well engineered corner in stored eggs, and that the manipulators of this scheme have a sufficient supply in storage to control the market. These cold storage eggs lose their flavor, of course, but they will not spoil in the four or five months or even longer time in which they are held for just such occasions as this, when the supply is short. It will be a particularly long and severe Winter that will exhaust the supply before the Spring crop appears. But prices will hold high until then. As to the reason for the fact that bacon now costs more than most any meat in the market, wholesale handlers supply an explanation. The increased cost is due to the fact that the various Governments that now have exceptionally large armies in the field take all of that sort of meat the packers have in the way of surplus. They also absorb much of the regular supply. So the price is kept away beyond what it normally would be. Bacon is the staple food of the soldier in the field. Packers have standing orders from the United States, British, and German Governments for all the bacon they can spare. So taking the scarcity of both commodities is easy to see why there is a scarcity of the general breakfast dish in boarding houses and an increase in the price for the dish on the bills of fare.

"I have found a little hand glass the best preventative of rheumatism I have ever tried," remarked the Drummer as he sat at the Herald Square Hotel discussing his ills with a party of his fellows. "Of course I carry a horse chestnut in my pocket, and to make the thing doubly sure, carry an old potato that has been my companion until it is now about as hard as a chunk of coal. Damp sheets make rheumatism, is my theory. So when I strike a hotel I take my hand glass from my grip and place it between the sheets as soon as a room is assigned to me. If on removing it from between them I find the faintest trace of dampness on the glass I decide that the sheets won't do for me. Once in a while I find at some of the older of the hotels a warming pan that can be used to dry out the sheets, but outside of New England and some of the Southwestern States such a thing is rarely available. If that is the case I get a pair of warmed and dried sheets. When it is so late that this is not possible I have the sheets taken off and sleep between the woolen blankets. Since I adopted this plan I have suffered less from rheumatic pains than ever before in all my experience on the road."

An inquisitive man who was anxious to find the reason for the many hawks of the smaller sorts—generally known as sparrow hawks—about the city parks, asked one of the many bird sharps for the cause. "Sparrows," was the prompt reply. His theory is that the presence of so many of the fat sparrows about the parks brings here the hawks in search of a supply of food. They are one of the evils that come in the train of the English sparrow. The latter unquestionably number millions, and as they are easy game for the hawks, the latter throng the parks and live easily and luxuriously off the little fellows. Incidentally, too, they also devour other birds that Winter here, and when the Spring brings the singing migrants back, make havoc in their ranks. Just now the hawks are very numerous about Central Park, the Zoological Gardens, and in portions of Van Courtlandt Park. Keepers think the hawks are responsible in great measure for the lack of increase in the numbers of squirrels that should naturally show in the parks. They are said to have a particular fondness for the young rodents and attack them when they find them alone. How to get rid of the hawks is a question that is puzzling those who have in mind the keeping up of the parks as a place for song birds.

Speaking of hawks, one of the men at the Museum of Natural History tells a story of how one was fooled at the State Museum at Raleigh, N. C., a few weeks ago. One of the curators there was mounting a number of partridges that had recently been presented to the institution. One of the stuffed partridges was on the sill of a window near where the curator was at work. A hawk flying by saw the bird and pounced down on it, falling with it into the room where the men were at work on the specimens. An assistant of the curator as promptly pounced on the hawk, and after a very short battle had captured a fine specimen of what is known as Cooper's hawk. The bird was dispatched and has been added to the other specimens in the museum.

It has come to be a fad with the woman who wears the "common sense heels" on her shoes to have them rubber-tired. Rubber heels can now be had at all the stores. Women like them because they say it saves all jars when they are walking, and so prevents their feet from getting tired during the shopping expeditions that they must, perhaps from inherited force of habit, indulge in.

Vaccination guards are the latest, and the drug stores have all kinds for the use of the multitudes with sore spots on their left arms. About the cleverest and best of these seems to be one that has inserted between a couple of layers of soft felt a thin but stiff gauze wire, so arched over the hole cut in the felt where the vaccination sore is given room to blossom at will as to protect the sore. The whole thing is attached to the arm just as a porous plaster is placed on the body. Its advantage is that the bit of wire protects the scabbed sore when some jovial idiot comes along and grasps one by the arm just where the vaccine is getting in its fine work.

"There goes the man who spends more money for railroad tickets than any one person in the United States," said the passenger agent of one of the Western railroads as Charles Frohman, the theatrical manager, passed him. "If I had the money he will spend in railroad fares for the members of his different companies before this theatrical season is ended I would retire and live on my income. He is a liberal patron of the sleepers and drawing-room cars, for the members of his companies travel in first-class shape. As he has some thirty companies that are traveling more or less every week, and as they only take in the larger cities, which means long 'jumps,' his expenditures for railroad travel are enough each year to keep a good-sized mercantile or mechanical concern in successful operation even against a trust. A party of us were figuring as to his expense in this direction the other day, and we came to the conclusion that his bills for a year for transportation alone must aggregate very close to $100,000. That's a heap of money to throw away in railroad fares when you come to think of it."

It was an old army officer with a Loyal Legion badge in his button hole who was the complainant this time. "I see one of the Western Grand Army Posts has protested against the singing of 'Dixie' in the public schools and the playing of the same tune in the theatres as 'treasonable.' It never struck me as being so when I have heard the song applauded in the theatres. I fought all through the war and was twice wounded, but 'Dixie' in these days doesn't stir my bile at all. I confess I rather enjoy it, as it reminds me of the old days. Seems to me that some of these Grand Army fellows who pass such resolutions bring their organization into disrepute. The only thing that this sort of veterans seem to think is not treasonable are raids on the Treasury for pension money. Any such raid that brings money to a man who fought in the civil war, or who at least enlisted to fight, meets with their approval whether the men who receive the money deserve it or need it or not. Such raids are considered by them as 'patriotic' in the extreme. Opposition to them is 'treasonable.'"

During the recent sale of trotting horses at the Madison Square Garden there was considerable speculation among buyers as to the identity of one "William Benjamin," who was announced as the purchaser of several of the best horses offered, among them Stats Regent, Regal Chimes, and Betty Hamlin of the Village Farm string. The purchaser turns out to have been Commodore William B. Bangan of Providence, one of the rubber manufacturing family of that name, a man who counts his fortune in the millions, and who is known as a clever amateur yachtsman and whip. His purchases were for use on the Speedway that is to be built in Providence. There is more than a chance that when his horses are properly trained and their new owner is used to them, they will be tried out on the Speedway here, when sufficient snow comes to permit of the use of a cutter sleigh.

SOME CHRISTMAS NOTES.

One of the prettiest things in the way of ornaments to be seen in the shops this year is in glass. It is cut and then engraved. The designs are after the new art, and are odd. Small vases are in three-cornered shapes, and larger dishes, vases, or bowls are something of a diamond shape. The glass is heavy. The designs are simple, the tulip being one that is used to good effect, the flowers and stems being about natural size. Most of the specimens are in the plain white glass, though there are a few in the colored, which are very beautiful.

***

Shell, that most delicate of materials put to practical use, is being brought out in a wonderful number of different useful articles this year. There are entire toilet sets of it. Fans also are made of the shell, and very pretty they are, too. Then there are large, round, high shell combs, such as were worn by our great-grandmothers. There are smaller combs of infinite variety, with delicate lines of gold inlaid, and pins for the hair in many varieties, but none of these are specially new. A rather new method in which shell is used for the hair is in the big French bowknots.

***

A diamond ring which is a little out of the ordinary has five large white stones set in line horizontally and reaching almost to the middle joint of the finger. To preserve something of a balance in appearance there is a cluster of small diamonds set on either side in the body of the ring.

***

When a pretty girl is seen to wear what looks like a big round thin locket on a long chain, it may be a locket, but very probably it is not. It may contain the picture of some one of whom the pretty girl is very fond, but nine times out of ten she will only see her own face when she opens it, for most of these lockets have mirrors on the inside. They do not always have a cover. They make pretty Christmas gifts.

***

There is no animal too commonplace to hold his place upon an umbrella handle nowadays. A gold pig figures upon one umbrella handle, and the trimmings are of gold, very plain, dull, and heavy, as they must be to be in good taste with so prominent a headpiece. There is the horse's head, of course; a donkey is gay in trappings; there is a chanticleer announcing himself an egoist to the world; and other animals of various kinds in fine metal. The donkey is appropriately in dull gray silver. There is some little superstition of luck with most of these animals. The pig is always a lucky emblem.

***

Satin slippers have many of them flowers hand painted upon the toes. They are pretty enough, but they have no particular style. A little seed pearl butterfly bow is prettier by half. Most attractive little slippers for boudoir use are mules of different kinds edged with fur and with a tiny fur head upon the top.

***

One of the prettiest handkerchiefs for the season has mistletoe embroidered upon it in little sprays in the natural colors, green and white, and work in here and there little dots of red, like fallen holly berries. It is one of the daintiest of embroidered handkerchiefs.

***

The Orientalists are figuring like every one else at this season of the year for the children. There is a toy box in which there is a variety of small things that would delight a small boy or girl. There is a queer horse, which is most interesting as a study in anatomy, for the Chinese and Japanese are famous for making horses which are like no animal ever seen on sea or land. There is a little Jap in a jinrickishaw, a little Japanese doll, a funny little coat, and a number of things which make up a most interesting collection; and the box is sold for a song.

Two little Southern children, who are stopping at one of the big city hotels for the Winter, are having two pretty little party gowns made. These are of white china silk, selected with great care, the finest kind, in which all the threads are even. The little girls are contrasts, one a blonde and the other a brunette, and one is always dressed in blue and the other in pink. The little blue girl is to have forget-me-nots painted on her gown by an artist who does delightful work in flowers, and the little pink girl is to have her gown ornamented with pink rosebuds. The little skirts to the gowns are to be made accordion plaited, and on the inside fold of each plait will be the painting, which will be visible as the little gowns flutter when the little girls are wearing them. There are to be sashes with painted ends, and there will be more rosebuds and forget-me-nots around the neck and sleeves of the little gowns. The gowns are a present from a fond grandmamma.

"Fine things for Christmas?" queried the man in the shop. "No, indeed, this is not the season of the year when we expect to sell our finest goods. You do not find people investing in anything very extravagant for any one outside of the family, not even millionaires, and I have had a good deal to do with them. It is seldom that more than $5 or $10 at the most goes into a Christmas present which is to go outside the family."

Florists are busy during the holiday season. Flowers continue to be considered most desirable gifts, and it is a continual surprise to see the perfection to which a single plant can be brought. Some of the most beautiful plants this year are begonias, pink ones, which are a mass of blooms, the leaves being entirely overshadowed.

***

Doilies, which are folded cornerwise have the whole of the corner which is uppermost embroidered with detached blossoms. It is a pretty new method of putting on the embroidery and is effective when the doily is unfolded. They are the original idea of a woman who does a good business in articles of this kind.

TO TAX M. MENIER'S ISLAND.

Authorities of Saguenay County, Quebec, About to Make Demands on the French Manufacturer.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Dec. 22.—Henri Menier, of chocolate fame, is the owner of the Island of Anticosti in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and, as his possessions have become valuable, the authorities of the County of Saguenay are about to make demands upon him to pay taxes. As M. Menier's land is now worth a large sum, and the county very extensive, sparsely-settled, and poor, taxes on his property will mean a good deal to the county exchequer.

M. Menier is developing the island on a magnificent scale. He has three sawmills on a tramway line connecting with a wharf 1,000 feet long; is building a big lobster factory, and has a place for the breeding of fur-bearing animals. He has the beginning of a town for his work people, and maintains a fortnightly service to Quebec with his steamer the Savoy. His expenditures so far are about $1,000,000. He is now preparing to erect a factory for pulp-grinding. There is abundant material therefor, there being some 2,500,000 acres of spruce wood on the island.

The price M. Menier paid for the island was only $125,000, but he is said to have refused $3,000,000 for it. He looks upon the island as a commercial speculation, and intends to make of it a source of revenue. Now comes the tax collector and proposes that he share the proceeds with the county.

INDIA IS HERSELF AGAIN

Autumn Crops Good and Sowings Unusually Large.

VICEROY REVIEWS THE FAMINE

Draws Attention to the Low Death Rate Compared with Previous Disasters of the Same Kind.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

SIMLA, Nov. 15.—The annual sojourn of the Government of India in these Himalayan heights is over and the place is fast becoming empty of officials in consequence. The Viceroy himself left here some three weeks ago for the purpose of making an extended tour throughout Western and Southern India before again meeting his Council at Calcutta shortly before Christmas. The various departments of the Government of India have also moved their headquarters to the metropolis on the Hooghly.

This great change of the seat of Government takes place twice a year, in March and October, and necessitates the moving to and from Simla and Calcutta of an enormous number of clerks, officials, and others, together with thousands of cases of documents and records. The mercantile community of Calcutta and the other great cities of the hot and steamy plains of India have long cried out against what they term the wasteful extravagance of this double annual move. If, they say, they can carry on their business in spite of a rising thermometer, there is no reason why the Government officials should not do likewise. And the great majority of Government officials do carry on their business all the year round in the plains. It is only the favored few, an infinitesimal minority, attached to the headquarters of Government, who get away from the scorching heat and unhealthy seasons of the plains.

And there is a good deal to be said for the move of Government to the hills. It is of importance that those in supreme authority should be in good health, and the maintenance of this is certainly easier in the hills than in the plains. And so, in spite of the outcries and the sarcasms of those whose duties compel them to remain down below when the hot winds begin to blow, it is probable that the annual exodus to the hills on the part of Government will continue to be a feature of Indian polity.

THE VICEROY'S SPEECH.

Before leaving Simla Lord Curzon delivered an important speech on the occasion of the last meeting for the season of his Council, a speech which merits more than passing notice. He pointed out that exactly a year ago he had delivered a speech in Council regarding the then impending famine, a famine which has since proved to be the most severe within the range of its incidence which India has ever known. He claimed that this terrible famine had been the main preoccupation of the Government in the twelve months which had elapsed. It had engrossed all attention, placed a terrible strain both on the resources and the officials of the country, disorganized its finances, and addressed a perpetual and irresistible appeal to individual humanity. Now that the famine was drawing to a close he took the opportunity to sum up the results of the past year's experience, so that the public might realize within a short compass what the great famine of 1899-1900 had meant, how the Government had endeavored to meet it, what a mark it has left upon the people and the country, and what teaching might be derived from a study of its features.

Lord Curzon energetically defended his administration against the charge of short-sightedness which has been made in ill-informed quarters. He pointed out that as soon as it became apparent from the scanty nature of the rainfall in July last year that there might be scarcity and famine in some portions of India, he at once put in train all the necessary measures. Both the Government of India and the various local administrations were at once engaged in drawing up schemes of relief. By October last year active relief had already been commenced, no less than half a million people being fed as early as that by the Government. This total speedily rose by leaps and bounds, until in July this year there were close on six and a half million people in receipt of Government relief. But, Lord Curzon claimed, quickly as the famine grew, the measures of the Government expanded with equal celerity.

THE GOVERNMENT'S LIBERALITY.

Proceeding, the Viceroy pointed out that the distinguishing feature of this famine as compared with all others had been the great generosity of the Government. There was no parallel in the history of India, or, indeed, in that of any other country in the world, to the total of over 6,000,000 people who had been for months fed and looked after by the Government. Direct expenditure on the famine by the Government would probably reach a total of £7,000,000 by the end of the current financial year. He pointed out that the watchword of the Government had been to save life and to mitigate genuine distress, while at the same time to guard against indiscriminate and pauperizing charity. As a general rule success had crowned the efforts of the administration. But in certain parts of the country, notably in Gujerat, things had hardly been as satisfactory as could have been wished. Gujerat had never, within living memory, experienced famine. It was the most fertile district of Western India. Hence when the rains failed there the rapidity and completeness of the calamity took the people by surprise, and the weakness and incapacity for resistance of the people took the local Government by surprise. Had there been greater previous experience in either respect the results might have been modified. As it was there had been unfortunately considerable mortality in Gujerat.

Comparing the recent famine with previous famines Lord Curzon pointed out that in the Bengal famine of 1770, under native administration, 10,000,000 out of less than 30,000,000 population perished within nine months. The returns showed that the excess of mortality over the normal during the last year had amounted to 750,000, but out of this total 250,000 had fallen victims to epidemics of cholera and smallpox. Thus the mortality directly or indirectly due to the famine was about 500,000, out of a total of 60,000,000-odd affected. It was claimed that in no previous famine in India had the mortality been kept so low. "And," said Lord Curzon, "I challenge contradiction when I say that there has never been a famine when the general mortality has been less, when distress has been more amply or swiftly relieved, or when the Government and its officers have given themselves with a more whole-hearted devotion to the saving of life and the service of the people."

THE FAMINE RELIEF FUND.

Passing on to other topics connected with the famine, the Viceroy dwelt with satisfaction on the noble response which had been made to the appeal sent out for assistance. About £1,000,000 had been contributed to the Famine Relief Fund, about a third of this sum being contributed by Great Britain, in spite of the demands occasioned by the war; one-fifth by India, and the rest by foreign countries, notably America. Analyzing the figures, Lord Curzon pointed out that the rich natives of India, with a very few notable exceptions, had contributed not a farthing toward the relief funds, while the noisy agitators who in fair weather are always shouting out their zeal for the people, had likewise failed in this emergency to back up their words by deeds. The relief funds had been spent to the greatest advantage, and there was no doubt that an enormous amount of suffering had been saved through their operation.

Speaking of the actual famine workers, official and unofficial, Lord Curzon said:

"It would not be difficult, but it might be invidious, to select any names for special mention. Numerous cases of devotion amounting to the loftiest heroism have been brought under my notice. I have heard of Englishmen dying at their posts without a murmur. I have seen cases where the entire organization of a vast area and the lives of thousands of beings rested upon the shoulders of a single individual, laboring on in silence and solitude, while his bodily health was fast ebbing away. I have known of natives who, inspired by this example, have thrown themselves with equal ardor into the struggle and have unmurmuringly laid down their lives for their countrymen. Particularly must I mention the noble efforts of the missionary agencies of various Christian denominations. If ever there was an occasion in which their local knowledge and influence were likely to be of value, and in which it was open to them to vindicate the highest standards of their beneficent calling, it was here, and strenuously and faithfully have they performed the task."

PRESENT OUTLOOK FAIR.

As to the immediate future, the outlook, the Viceroy said, was fairly bright. The rains had in most districts been favorable. The early Autumn crops had been harvested and had proved good. Prices were steadily falling to their accustomed level. A good cotton crop was in the ground, and, as this was worth £13,000,000 in an average year, the present favorable prospects were very gratifying. Sowings for the Winter crops had progressed favorably, being unusually large in many districts, in spite of the paucity of cattle for all agricultural purposes. If these crops should prove to turn out well they might once more see the export of Indian corn, which for the last few years, owing to successive scarcities, had been almost at a standstill. The first object of the Government, now that the famine was over, was to start the agriculturists again with reasonable prospects of success. To this end large advances in cash and kind would be made, and heavy remissions of revenue due to the Government sanctioned. Everything possible would be done to put the people on their legs again, and every endeavor would be made, with the help of all the resources and credit of the country, to wipe out as speedily as possible all traces of a calamity unprecedented alike in its severity and extent. Concluding, the Viceroy said:

"The late famine has been a terrible incident and an abiding landmark in the history of the Indian people. As such, its management and its study impose a heavy responsibility upon those of us who are charged with the government of this great dependency. It is with the object of demonstrating to the Indian public that in the administration of the recent famine we have not been unworthy of our trust, and that this year of strain and suffering will not have passed by without our profiting by its lessons, that I have made this speech."

LORD CURZON'S TOUR.

Since leaving Simla Lord Curzon has been making a tour which is somewhat remarkable in its extent. Proceeding from the Summer capital he crossed something like a thousand miles of more or less desert country to Karachi, the young and rising capital of Sind, and principal seaport of the far west of India. Not so long ago Karachi was merely a fishing village; to-day it is an essentially modern town with a very considerable export and import trade, and with a community which is perhaps the most pushing and enterprising of any port in the east. Railway communication has done everything for Karachi. By this means the great wheat harvests from the plains of the Panjab are brought down to the sea, and with the additional railway facilities which will shortly be arranged, facilities which will bring Karachi into direct touch with Rajputana and the northwest provinces, it is certain that Karachi will forge still further ahead, principally at the expense of Bombay.

From Karachi Lord and Lady Curzon, with a numerous staff, took ship and sailed down to the Gulf of Katch, landing at Katch Mandvi, and thence went by land to Ehuj, there to pay a visit of two days' duration to the Rao of Katch, an enlightened ruler who governs his subjects well and wisely. Leaving Bhuj again for Mandvi, where the ship was again brought into use, the Viceroy traveled down to Veraval on the coast of Kathiawar, landing there. Here a visit was made to the ancient ruins of Somnath, the temple whose famous gates a former conqueror of India, Mahmud of Ghazni, carried off to Central Asia, whence they were supposed to have been rescued during the Afghan war which terminated in 1842. The gates then brought down, however, and received in India with so tremendous a flourish of trumpets by the then Governor General, the bombastic and eccentric Lord Ellenborough, were not the real ones, and were never restored to Somnath, they being now to be seen at Agra.

A TYPICAL INDIAN SCENE.

After visiting Jamnaggar, a quaint native State, Lord Curzon proceeded to Rajkot, where a great assemblage of all the many chiefs and rulers of Kathiawar was held. Full dress was the order of the day, and great was the display of barbaric pearl and gold on the part of the Princes of this western peninsula of India. Very quaint, too, were some of the equipages brought forth on this occasion. It was a typical Indian scene, such as might have taken place in the days of Akbar or Jehangir, when India was really the gorgeous East, and not the somewhat prosaic and uninteresting country which modern civilization has to a large extent made it. Passing from Rajkot to British territory at Surat, and so on to Bombay, Lord Curzon traveled as quickly as special trains could take him. A feverish day or two of speechmaking, business, and receptions in Bombay, and then the train was once more entered, and a start made for the Deccan country, Poona, and beyond.

A temporary halt was made for a few hours in order to inspect the wonderful old caves at Karli, monuments of a religion and a civilization more than twenty centuries old, and then the journey was continued through Bijapore, once the splendid capital of an independent Mussulman dynasty, and so on to Goa, the picturesque Old World seaport which is now almost the sole remnant of the once great Portuguese Empire in the East. From Goa the Viceroy took ship and coasted down to Hanovar, where the party landed for the purpose of seeing the far-famed falls of Gairsoppa 800 feet high, and then the journey was continued southward to Cochin.

Here the ship was finally left, for the Viceroy will journey through the native State of Travancore, staying for a few days' big game shooting en route, to Bangalore and Mysore. In the latter flourishing native State he will witness some elephant-catching operations, and will also inspect the famous castle of Seringapatam, the erstwhile stronghold of Tipu Sultan, and the place which is now chiefly remembered because it was there that Arthur Wellesley, afterward Duke of Wellington, first made a name for himself just 101 years ago. In Mysore, too, the Viceroy will also visit the very flourishing Kolar gold fields, which during the last twenty years or so have produced some millions sterling of gold.

An interesting feature about these gold fields is that they are shortly to be equipped with electric power derived from the falls of the Cauvery River, nearly a hundred miles away, the whole of the plant for the same being procured from America, no European firm being able to supply it at a reasonable rate or within a reasonable time. The progress of this initial installation of electrical energy in India will be watched with particular interest, for there are at present millions of horse power running to waste, which might well be utilized for industrial purposes.

All the perennial streams and torrents which issue from the Himalayan range, fed by its eternal snows, are capable of supplying an enormous amount of power, could it be but conducted economically to the centres of population. It is to America, and to the genius of Tesla, that India looks for the solution of many of these problems.

After the visit to the gold fields there will remain but a short sojourn in Madras before a move is made for Calcutta, and the first Viceregal tour of the season comes to an end.

TAXES FOR THE THIRD QUARTER.

Table Showing that Manhattan Pays 72 Per Cent. of the Whole.

The report of the Department of Taxes and Assessments for the third quarter of 1900 was made public yesterday. The report shows the amount of the taxes levied in each borough, and, in accordance with the request of President Guggenheimer of the Municipal Council, there is printed a statement showing the amount each borough is assessed for taxes. The total tax by boroughs follows:

Manhattan Borough	$59,480,196.78
The Bronx	3,292,556.20
Brooklyn	16,106,209.65
Queens	2,572,874.65
Richmond	1,087,360.31

The foregoing table shows that Manhattan borough pays 72 per cent., Brooklyn 19½, Bronx 4, Queens 3½, and Richmond 1%.

"The Old Guard" Ball.

The Old Guard is to give its annual ball and reception at the Metropolitan Opera House on Thursday evening, Jan. 24. Preparations are being made to have the ball this year more brilliant than its predecessors. The Opera House will be elaborately decorated. No tickets will be sold this year, admission being by invitation. Boxes may be obtained at the Old Guard Armory, Broadway and Forty-ninth Street, or at the office of Capt. James T. Wenman, 12 Old Slip.

Mrs. Faile Pringle's Alimony Reduced.

Mrs. Stella A. Faile obtained a divorce from George E. Faile in 1893, and was awarded $900 a year permanent alimony. Mrs. Faile last September married Alexander Pringle. Her former husband considered that he ought not to be asked to pay the $900 a year, and appealed to Justice Russell for a modification of the terms of the decree, claiming that Mr. Pringle ought to support his own wife. Justice Russell reduced the alimony to $450.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

ARRESTS BY THE WHOLESALE EXPECTED IN RUSSIAN POLAND.—It is believed in Warsaw that, owing to certain unmistakable signs lately noticed in the local press known to be under the control of the Administration, the Russian Government is getting ready to make another effort to stamp out the Polish National League, which of late years has been to such an extent unmolested as to make it appear that it had gone out of existence. The signs in the Warsaw press noted consist of the publication, from time to time, of alleged machinations of the Polish National League reported in such a way as to prejudice all foreigners, and even Poles who do not know the truth, against the league. For example, it was recently stated that the means by which the league collects funds are far from legal, for emissaries of the league are sent out to waylay wealthy Poles and levy tribute on them under threats of violence. Four cases of this nature were reported in the Russophile press of Warsaw during November, but no names were mentioned.

Judging from these indications, it is thought that a blow will shortly be struck the league under the criminal laws, the men arrested being charged with criminal conspiracy, with extortion, with blackmail, or with robbery, while plenty of witnesses will be secured for the Government from its numerous agents. The affair thus separated from its political aspect, it is believed, will fail to excite that sympathy abroad which has heretofore accompanied the prosecution of members of the Polish National League.

A recent number of the Wiener Tagblatt of Vienna says that there can be no doubt that the league, the object of which is to liberate Poland not only from Russia, but from Austria and Germany as well, is stronger and of wider influence than ever before, and the attempt to arrest the members of the league under the excuse that they are criminals will cause a general uprising throughout Poland. The headquarters of the organization are in Paris, but many secret branches are said to exist throughout the three parts of Poland, while the centres of militant Polish nationalism are particularly in the university towns, where many of the colleges simply exist in order to be the means of distributing Polish literature and furnishing a place where, under the guise of gymnastics, students may be taught military drill. Warsaw, Cracow, and Lemberg are said to be of this character. It is also believed that for the last five years the leaders of the league have been gradually collecting in these towns a large quantity of small arms which are concealed in secret depots.

FOR FINANCIAL REFORM IN ITALY.—In his speech before the Italian Chamber the other day Signor Rubini, the Treasury Minister, outlined a Government scheme for the reduction of taxation. The policy of the Government is less radical than many had hoped, for the programme does not include either a reduction of the tariff or a curtailment of the plans for national defense already published. Signor Rubini also said that a reform of the income tax, on the basis suggested by certain politicians, would, in order to assure the stability of the budget, necessitate assessments at 28 per cent. or 35 per cent. if the tax were made degressive. So as to lighten the direct taxation upon small proprietors, the Finance Minister, Signor Chimirri, had drafted a bill which would imply the loss of 10,500,000 lire (about $2,100,000) by reducing the direct imposts on small incomes. He added that partly to compensate for this loss small imposts on gunpowder, Stock Exchange transactions, and bearer securities which pay no succession duty would be introduced.

In regard to the financial situation, Signor Rubini said that the current year is estimated to close with a deficit of 16,000,000 lire, or, if the cost of the Chinese expedition be included, of 19,000,000 lire, although the steady increase of the normal revenue from manufactures and railways justifies the hope that the final returns may belie the estimate. For the financial year 1901-2 Signor Rubini predicted a deficit of 18,000,000 lire, due mainly to the increase of the home production of sugar and a consequent decrease of the customs revenue. Nevertheless, he insisted on the necessity of continuing the present practice of covering with current revenue the cost of railway construction and of the extinction of the redeemable debt. He pointed out that in 1902 the heavy expenditure for railway construction would cease.

The floating Treasury debt now amounts to 400,625,000 lire, showing a decrease of some 150,000,000 lire since 1887. In order to endow the Treasury with greater elasticity Signor Rubini proposed to substitute 50,000,000 lire long sight Treasury bills for short bills now held by State banks and other financial institutions. He further proposed to postpone the conversion of the 4½ per cent. internal debt, and create new 4 per cent. internal Government bonds by which the 4½ per cents. could be gradually replaced. What he considered the important feature of the financial situation was the average annual absorption by Italian investors of 120,000,000 lire 4 per cent. Government bonds formerly held abroad, a circumstance constituting considerable saving for the Treasury.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE CREATION OF A RUSSIAN CONSUL GENERALSHIP AT PRAGUE.—The recent appointment of a Russian Consul General to Prague in Bohemia has created considerable uneasiness among the semi-official press of Vienna, where it is charged that it is the intention of the Russian Government to make Prague the centre for Slavic propaganda, as has often been the alleged case with the Russian Consulates in Galicia and Bukowina.

In reply to these charges the Novoe Vremya of St. Petersburg, in what is supposed to be an inspired article, points out that Austria-Hungary has sixteen Consulates in Russia, while there are only six Russian Consulates in Austria. The Russian organ is also persuaded that the creation of a Russian Consul General at Prague and two or three Consulates in other towns of Bohemia is desirable in the interest both of Russia and Austria. Trade and industry, it is furthermore pointed out, are

MILLIONS SENT ABROAD

Holiday Remittances Show Increase Over Last Year.

WHOLE WORLD IS BENEFITED

Bankers, Expressmen, and Others Say that It Signifies Era of Permanent Prosperity.

"Europeans, more particularly the peasantry and poorer classes, form an exaggerated idea of the magnitude of that much-heralded wave of prosperity that carried upon its benign crest the blessings of contentment, peace, and plenty into every section and corner of the American Continent during the last two years. It is not to be marvelled at, for never in the history of foreign exchange has there been such an enormous exportation of money in small amounts as during the present holiday season.

To give the exact figures would be impossible at this time, but a close estimate made from statements furnished by bankers, express companies, and dealers in foreign exchange, places the amount at $5,000,000. Those figures represent only the Christmas offerings of friends and relatives in America to friends and relatives abroad. It to this sum the total amount of travelers' checks and large drafts were added, the total would, in the opinion of those in a position to approximate it, exceed $12,000,000. This does not include cable orders, bills of exchange, drafts, or other remittances for commercial purposes.

Statistics compiled by General Superintendent Elliott of the Money Order Department of the Post Office show that from Dec. 1 to Dec. 19, 184,417 money orders, representing $2,141,112.29, have been certified for payment abroad. The figures show an increase in the number of money orders sold over last year of 56,902, or 44 per cent., and an increase in money of $65,292.50, or 44 per cent. The average sum per each order was about $12.

The orders were distributed as follows among the various foreign countries:

	No. Orders.	Sum.
Great Britain	100,299	$975,347.31
Germany	37,979	382,804.60
Switzerland	3,930	36,190.81
Italy	4,745	115,418.05
Belgium	568	11,147.21
Portugal	41	510.13
Cape Colony, the Transvaal, etc.	29	479.94
Sweden	22,750	230,056.58
Norway	4,575	66,747.51
Denmark	2,577	30,481.05
Netherlands	546	4,927.83
*Russia	4,067	43,046.81
Luxemburg	81	1,796.35
Austria	7,067	115,392.82
Hungary	3,121	29,970.11
Egypt	17	373.25
France	2,715	37,135.82
Total	184,417	$2,141,112.29

The domestic business done in the same department from Dec. 1 to Dec. 19 inclusive shows a large increase over the amount done the corresponding period in 1899.

No less than 227,903 orders, representing $1,204,796.83, were sold during the sixteen working days of the month ending last Wednesday night, an increase of 20 per cent. in the volume of business and an average payment of 1,182 money orders each day more than last year.

EXPRESS COMPANY'S BIG BUSINESS

The greatest gain in foreign money orders by the Post Office Department was in Great Britain and Ireland and Germany. The traffic in money orders sent to those countries was more than one-third greater than during the holiday season of 1899. As the above table exemplifies, the sympathy, charity, and hospitality of America during this Christmastide have extended to all corners of the earth, even to Egypt and Africa. Points of the earth not reached by the Post Office Money Order Department have received, or will receive the Christmas greetings of friends in America through other mediums.

The American Express Company, for instance, has transmitted and caused to be distributed through its 20,000 regular offices and correspondents in Europe, Egypt, and Africa over $100,000 during the last few days from Greater New York alone. This includes only foreign checks, limited drafts, and remittance blanks, the latter of which correspond to America's domestic Post Office money orders.

The Wells-Fargo, Adams, and United States Express Companies also transmitted many thousands of dollars and thousands of parcels to various parts of the world, all of which are intended as Christmas gifts from relatives in America to needy parents, wives, and children, or brothers and sisters, across the seas. The money was sent in sums ranging from $5 to $20, the largest proportionate amount going to Germany and Hungary.

"The increase in this particular class of business over the month of December a year ago is fully 30 per cent.," said C. Smith, manager of the Eastern financial department. "Reports from managers of the various departments in all sections of the country," he continued, "show that business is in a prosperous condition and gradually increasing in volume. The common laborer and the mill employe exhibit a feeling of confidence and contentment by their exceptionally liberal remittances to friends on the other side. Our company feels the benefit and shares it with the whole people. The beneficent results of this era of prosperity are not confined to our continent. The whole world is made to feel it even to the remotest corner and the universal reputation for hospitality of Americans, native-born or citizens by adoption, has been greatly enhanced. I am prone to say on the dawning of a new and I hope more peaceful and prosperous century."

Joseph A. Kiernan, Treasurer of the Irish Emigrant Society, stated that the Christmas remittances to Ireland through that society exceeded by only about $3,000 the sum of a year ago.

MONEY SENT REGULARLY.

"Many of our former patrons," said he, "now send their remittances by postal order, so that there has been no marked increase in the volume of business, notwithstanding the prosperous times. However, during the past year drafts aggregating $750,000 were sent through this society to Ireland. About $20,000, perhaps $40,000, in small sums was sent during the present month. The Irish emigrant sends money to his relatives abroad regularly throughout the year, usually increasing by a small percentage the sum remitted during the holidays. Our business in foreign exchange has not increased to any great extent during the year. It remains about the same from year to year."

The three banking houses of Knauth, Nachod & Kuehne, corner of Beaver and Broad Streets; Bischoff's, in The Staats-Zeitung Building, and Bolognesi & Hartfield, at 62 Wall Street, state that they sent remittances in small sums to various parts of the world since Dec. 1 aggregating $1,300,000. Of this sum over $200,000 went to Italy, through the banking house of Bolognesi & Hartfield. Over $100,000 was transmitted by Bischoff's banking house to points in Germany, Austria, and Hungary, and nearly $1,000,000 by Knauth, Nachod & Kuehne to nearly all the countries in Continental Europe. Representatives of each one of those firms when asked to assign a cause for the vast increase in foreign exchange exclaimed:

"Prosperity! Prosperity! It's universal, confined to no class of people or section of country. One sees evidence of it all around and about him, and everybody feels it. The great number of small sums sent by the prosperous artisan and thrifty laborer to needy friends in the Old World is indisputable proof that the condition of affairs has greatly improved and that the Nation is enjoying an era of prosperity scarcely without parallel in its history."

Mr. Hartfield of Bolognesi & Hartfield, in accounting for the big sum sent to Italy, said: "The Italian is thrifty, and he never forgets his needy friends upon the other side, especially at this season, when the hearts and purses of all charitably inclined people are opened for the relief of the needy. Our firm sent double the amount of money to Italy this December as compared with that of any other year since the business was founded. The emigration from Italy has been larger than ever before, and on the average of a better class. Some emigrants, well-to-do, come here to open up a small business, many to engage in the importing trade, but the great majority of course were mechanics or laborers. They scattered all over the continent, but wherever they settled they prospered, because times were good and money was plenty. Those people all sent money to their native land, and with them went the impression that truly this is the land of prosperity and the haven of the ~~free~~ and the oppressed."

AN EXPERT ON EXPLOSIVES.

Dynamite All Right If Not Carelessly Handled.

"Speaking of dynamite and other explosives," said an expert blaster, "it is doubtful if there is another subject on which the average lay mind is more misinformed. Taking the Tarrant explosion, for example, more ridiculous theories have been aired by citizens in letters to newspapers giving the possible causes of the explosion than would fill a good-sized joke book. And as if to make sure that the opinions expressed should receive the proper attention, many of the writers felt so cock-sure of their own conclusions that they have not hesitated to mention in their communications that they were experts on the subject.

"As will be remembered, four so-called suspicious iron drums were discovered in the ruins shortly after the fire. The drums were of quarter-inch sheet iron, were 2 feet in diameter, were 4½ feet long, were provided with stout iron chines, upon which they were to be rolled, and were of about 100 gallons capacity. When found two of the drums showed that their heads had been blown out, leaving a ragged hole about 1 foot in diameter.

"Now, there is probably not an expert in existence who would be willing to testify as to what those drums contained unless he made a thorough examination. Yet the ridiculous statement has been made that the drums contained nitro-glycerine—in other words, liquid dynamite. I am no more prepared than any other man who handles explosives to say what really was in the drums. But for several good reasons I am willing to swear that nitro-glycerine was not the contents.

"To begin with, nitro-glycerine is never packed in drums—the manufacturers have too much respect for the compound. Five gallon cans is about the extreme quantity in which this explosive is shipped, and then there are no chines or other rolling arrangements about the cans. There is not a place in this land where nitro-glycerine is drawn off from tanks through a spigot and sold like beer. Moreover, in the heart of New York there is no more sale for nitro-glycerine than there is for life rafts on Broadway. Again, no matter how used a man has become to handling explosives, he retains his esteem for nitro-glycerine. Finally, had nitro-glycerine been in those drums, and had that quantity of that explosive gone off, not a skyscraper within four blocks of the scene would have remained standing. The island would have rocked. Not a house in the lower part of the city would have escaped undamaged. The shock would have been felt down on Fire Island, and instead of a heap of wreckage where the building collapsed, there would be a hole, blown from twenty to thirty feet to rock, and the rock would be burned and crumbled so that it would be scratched away in chunks by one's finger nails.

"It may seem to a layman that the men handling high explosives in quarries and at mines become careless. They may seem careless to one who has not learned to look at the stuff without expecting to soar heavenward for his audacity, but the precautions which these men have been trained to exercise have become so much a second nature to them that they are no longer conscious of observing them. If by any chance a new man does not show in a factory or on a job that he is properly careful, his career as a powder man is cut very short.

WHAT DYNAMITE IS.

"Some one once said, 'Dynamite is like a woman—you never know what it is going to do next.' Without commenting on the woman part of the statement, dynamite, or nitro-glycerine, is one of the most reliable as well as the strongest friend man has. Dynamite, you must know, is nothing but nitro-glycerine soaked up in sawdust or in Indian meal. This makes of the liquid explosive a solid one, which can be handled to better advantage, which can be strengthened, on a scale of percentage, to contain more or less of the explosive oil—according to the quantity of nitro soaked up in a given quantity of the sawdust—and which is more easily handled, both as to safety and as a matter of storing the stuff in fissures of rocks and ledges, where a fluid would run out and away when used.

"Dynamite is cast into sticks, known as cartridges. These are cylindrical in shape, and measure from an inch to an inch and a half in diameter by about six inches in length. In color they resemble the yellow of linseed oil, and they are oily to the touch.

"I have seen some remarkable freaks in the line of tricks of dynamite. Explosive as the stuff is, I have seen a case of 400 cartridges fall 2,200 feet into a shaft, and the case was simply smashed and the dynamite landed in a heap like so much harmless mush. On the other hand, I saw a man drop a cartridge from his hand to the ground, and there was not enough left of him for a grease spot. This peculiarity of dynamite, its tendency to explode under certain conditions and its non-explosive trait under more aggravating circumstances, is something that is not explainable. But the fact remains that, when properly handled, dynamite is not dangerous. Here and there we read of a blaster who blows himself up, and in nine cases out of ten it is simply that the man began drilling in an old hole, not knowing that it was partly loaded with an old charge of dynamite.

"Unless confined, dynamite will burn like so much grease. I have seen a whole cartridge of dynamite thrown into the firebox of a boiler and the stuff burned, roaring like a tugboat blowing off steam. On another occasion I saw a man who had become excited at a burning cartridge throw it to the ground and trample on it trying to stamp out the flames, and the man lived to tell the tale. It is of frequent occurrence that dynamite is accidentally set afire. This happens mostly in Winter. The cartridges then freeze. In that condition they are useless as far as blasting is concerned, for, whether confined or not, they simply burn. To thaw them it is necessary either to immerse them in hot water or to place them near a fire. The hot water, however, draws the strength out of the cartridges. Therefore the bonfire method is more often used. Hence the fires.

"To set off dynamite an explosion is necessary. For this reason a fulminating cap is affixed to the end of the fuse so that when the spark has eaten through the fuse the cap is set off and at the same instant the whole charge of dynamite goes off, sometimes half a ton at a time, and a slice of mountain is blown down to be crushed into stone for our roads and driveways.

ITS ACTION DOWNWARD.

"One of the peculiar actions of dynamite as compared to other explosives is that its action is downward. Often when in a quarry it is desired to break a huge rock quickly, a cartridge of dynamite is simply placed on top of the rock, and after being covered with a little heap of earth, is set off. The rock is split into a number of pieces. Were black powder heaped on a rock in the same way the heap of dirt on top would simply be blown away, leaving the rock unharmed. This downward action of dynamite makes it at once the most useful and the most powerful of explosives known. I once assisted at a number of experiment at the Stevens Institute, it being desired to prove the downward action of dynamite and its incredible force. A number of blocks of iron, six inches in diameter and three inches thick, were practiced upon. An ordinary newspaper was spread over one of the blocks. A cartridge of dynamite was placed on top of the paper, and after being connected with a fuse and covered with a heap of dirt, the charge was set off. When the block was examined after the explosion the print of the paper was distinctly impressed into the surface of the iron. The reason was that the paper, where the printers' ink had touched it, was harder than the rest of the paper, and by the incredibly hard and sudden blow struck by the dynamite, the imprint of the shape of the letters was made as plainly on the iron as if it had been cheese. A similar experiment was then made with an ordinary oak leaf and the outlines of the leaf, ribs and all, was gouged into the iron. Both of these blocks of iron are in the museum attached to the institute.

"With a few outlines of dynamite, or nitro-glycerine, as it really is, made public, perhaps it will quiet an uneasy army of experts, who fear that dynamite and similar explosives are stored under their dining rooms. There are hundreds of explosives besides these most known and most dreaded agents that might have caused the Tarrant explosion. Fierce as that explosion may seem to citizens who saw it, and careful as the explosive chemicals should be excluded from the midst of a community, if that particular explosion had been caused by an agent intended for that purpose, New Yorkers would have a little spot in their midst which it would be worth traveling miles to see."

CATS IN THE NAVY YARD

Vigilant Protectors of Government Property.

Their Warfare on Rats—The Pioneers of the Force—One Teachea Her Kittens How to Catch Mice.

It was learned yesterday that probably the first official recognition ever taken of a cat as a regular member of the United States naval forces has been made by Naval Constructor Bowles of the Brooklyn Navy Yard. He has intimated to the men under him that none of the cats which prowl about the yard are to be annoyed or interfered with in any way.

According to the workmen in the yard, this recognition of the cats is no more than their due. The cats do not cost the Government a cent. They are fed by the men at the dinner hour, and come for the scraps of food saved for them at the various shops as soon as the bell sounds at noon. In return for this, they save Uncle Sam tens of thousands of dollars yearly by keeping rats and mice away from the sheds and shops.

Eight years ago there was not a cat to be seen anywhere about the Brooklyn Navy Yard. The place was overrun with rats instead. The officials had tried all sorts of poisons and traps for years in an effort to get rid of the rats, but in vain. They seemed to make sport of the traps and to grow plump and sleek on the poisons. The Government's outlay in its war on rats is said by the officials of the yard to have been considerable. Every year almost every dock in the yard needed overhauling to repair the places where it had been gnawed by rats, and the losses in rigging, spare sails, and other stores were even greater.

About seven years ago, however, the first cat was allowed to enter the yard, and the rats began to leave. Previous to that dogs had been brought into the yard in the hope that they might banish the rats, but the dogs were no match for the big and ferocious rats. They usually shirked an encounter, and when the rats showed fight fled from the yard in terror. The cats, however, are more than a match for the biggest rats, and now there are more cats than rats in the place.

TWO VETERAN RATTERS.

The oldest cats in the yard are Tom and Minnie, who do the policing of the electrical department. Large quantities of oiled silk and other insulating materials are kept there, and formerly it was impossible to preserve it from the rats. Ever since the arrival of Tom and Minnie, however, the oiled silk is safe from being gnawed. Tom is a very large black cat, while Minnie, who is also black, is by all odds the smallest cat in the place. According to the workmen, she is the best ratter in the navy yard.

"The best ratter in the navy yard!" exclaimed one of the workmen when this remark was made, "she's the best ratter in the United States, or in the world, for that matter. She has the run of the machine rooms, and she knows every wheel and strap there."

As the man spoke a small black cat, scarcely larger than the ordinary kitten appeared dodging about among the whirling belts and wheels in the machine room with the greatest coolness. She ran up to the man and rubbed against his leg, purring softly.

"See that," he said; "she wouldn't go near a stranger, but she's the friend of every man in the place. She can tackle a rat as big as herself, and the rat never gets away when she does tackle him. She can make a jump of eight feet easy. I've seen her jump down a flight of stairs after a rat and land plump on its back. It's sure death for the rat, for she never misses her spring. She deserves a gold medal for preserving the property of the United States Government."

Next to Tom and Minnie, Jerry, who is official rat catcher in the rigging loft, is the oldest cat in the navy yard. He has been there almost seven years. A little over three years ago he was joined by another cat, who responds to the name of George Dewey. Up to Jerry's arrival the rigging loft was infested by large rats and an immense number of mice. Sailmaker Cowan says that at present the loft is afree of rats and mice as any place he has ever been in.

"You have no idea of the change that has taken place there," he said. "The mice used to be awful. They were so bold and fearless that they would come scampering over our hands while we were working at the rigging here. I never saw anything like it. I've had mice run over my feet and try to climb up my legs in the middle of the day, when all the men were working here, and the place was as noisy as a boiler factory. It meant a lot more work for the men, because the damage they did to the rigging kept some of us busy repairing it all the year round.

Jerry is the only cat present in the navy yard, who has ever been on a cruise. He has been on two trips with United States fleets. His last was on board the Monongahela with the Asiatic Squadron. Jerry is in the habit of taking long trips away from the navy yard on his own account. About a month ago he was taken away against his will a considerable distance from the yard by a workman who tried to domesticate him at his own home. The cat appeared at the yard as usual the next day. The workmen declare that he must have traced his way back to the yard by listening for the tolling of the big bell there. About once a month Jerry disappears. He always returns just when the mice are beginning to show themselves again in the rigging loft, and for the first few days after his return he works overtime.

A big black cat presides over the blacksmith's shop, but she has not much to do there. She appears about once in a month, and after killing off any rats or mice that may have taken refuge there during her absence disappears again for another month.

Bob Duke, who is employed in the Construction and Repairs Department of the navy yard, is acknowledged to be the best posted cat fancier in the place. He has a cat named Jennie in Building No. 20, and he asserts she is the most expert ratter in existence.

A LESSON IN RAT CATCHING.

"I've seen cats all over the world," he said yesterday, "but I never saw anything that could hold a candle to Jennie. She litters every three months, and her kittens have been taken all over the world by the warships they have been presented to. They are at a premium in the navy because they are all such corking good ratters. When they are little she gives them a lesson in rat catching every day at noon."

A look of incredulity came over the faces of some of his listeners at Bob Duke's last statement, and he noticed it.

"Come along," he said, "and I'll show that I'm giving you straight goods."

He led the way into Building No. 20. As he entered a tortoise-shell cat ran into an open space in the middle of the room and deposited a dead mouse on the floor. She returned a moment later with a very small tortoise-shell kitten, and the lesson that Bob Duke had promised began. While the kitten watched attentively, Jennie gathered herself in a crouching position at some little distance from the dead mouse, pounced upon it with a sudden spring, and began to worry it, growling fiercely all the while in imitation of anger. After this movement had been repeated several times Jennie drew to one side and allowed the kitten to follow her example. Although the little cat was somewhat unsteady on her legs and was able to take only a very short jump, her movements were such a good imitation of her mother's that she was greeted with a shout of laughter from the spectators.

"What did I tell you?" said her owner in triumph; "that little cat knows just as much as any of us. She's as wise as a Christian."

J. A. Cook of the ship carpenters' department has a white cat named Joan of Arc, which, he says, is every bit as good as Jennie.

"She's a Republican and comes from Omahn," he said; "but she can smell a rat just as quick as if she were a Democrat and came from Cot Hollow."

The workmen in the ship carpenters' shop say that Joan of Arc knows the time of day without hearing a clock strike.

"Why, we set our watches by her," said one of the men. "She comes here every day at five minutes before 12 as regularly as the sun rises and sets. All she is looking for is a little milk and a few scraps of meat, and she knows where she can get it."

The general equipment and ordnance departments and all the other buildings in the yard have their officially recognized cats. Besides the regular cats in the navy yard their are a number of guerrilla cats, who come at intervals to hunt for rats and mice.

Preparations for the Inauguration Well Under Way.

DESERTIONS FROM THE NAVY

2,452 Men Decamped in 1900, Many of Them Because They Wanted Active Service in South Africa.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—On Monday, March 4, William McKinley will be inaugurated as President of the United States for "four years more." The people of this town are being made aware of the forthcoming event every day. Senator Hanna has picked out a business man of standing and influence as the Chairman of the Inaugural Committee of Arrangements, and he has in turn chosen other committees to attend to the details that go to make up an inauguration observance. Perhaps the most important part of this business is the collection from the public of a guarantee fund with which to decorate the streets, to decorate a ballroom, to meet a hundred items of expense, and to supply an outdoor show of fireworks for those who cannot indulge in the luxury of an inauguration ball at $5 the ticket.

The money seems to flow in liberally enough, nearly $50,000 having been subscribed. The Government has allowed the Pension Building to be converted into a ballroom, and there have been some offers of visits by uniformed military and civic organizations. Lacking nothing at this stage of the customary interest, the fact is bothering the managers that the affair is not to be as interesting as the one of four years ago, when Mr. Cleveland and Mr. McKinley rode together up and down the avenue. No inauguration can be quite a failure, but the ceremony in which one President takes the place of another, particularly when the new man is of a different party from his predecessor, naturally arouses superior interest.

To the office-seeker the change about to be made signifies little. The inauguration of Mr. McKinley for his second term will bring few changes in offices. The men who have been found satisfactory for such part of his first term as they have served will generally be retained. A few who have wearied of official life will choose this opportunity to withdraw and afford eager aspirants chances to come in. The army of the seekers will not be here. Such throngs as come will be attracted altogether by the desire to see an inauguration, to once more realize that Mr. Bryan is not to escort Mr. McKinley back to the White House of which he is to cease to be the tenant, and to indulge in such degree of self-approval for a share in making a dull inauguration as he may feel entitled to enjoy. There will be a crowd, but not such a deliriously happy crowd as in the Spring of 1897.

The Fifty-sixth Congress will expire by Constitutional limitation on March 4. As March 3 will happen on a Sunday, the last calendar day of the Congress will be March 2. But the work will not stop for Sunday if Congress is pressed, as what Congress was not at the close of its short session? The legislative day of March 2 will be carried through Sunday and until noon on March 4, and probably at 12:30 o'clock on that day the mendacious employe of the Senate will be pushing back the hands of the Senate clock and perpetrating a legislative falsehood in the sight of as many American citizens as the Senate Chamber will hold.

There may be 10,000, however, waiting in line for the order to move, and the President and his Cabinet may be observing in the President's room that the hour for the beginning of the new term has passed, but the Senate and the House will not admit it, even by permitting their clocks to tell the truth, until the old President has signed every bill Congress regards it necessary to pass, and until the two houses have informed the President that they have no further use for his services and are prepared to adjourn sine die.

This delay will keep Vice President Roosevelt from promptly occupying his place; but it does not take long, after the Senate messenger has stopped putting the clock back, to swear in the Vice President, to escort the President and President-elect out to the east front, and to effect the rest of what is called a change of administration. The day will lack the usual story about the retiring President getting speedily out of the White House and off to some hotel or private residence, in which to make his farewells to intimate friends before returning to his own home. Vice President Roosevelt will at once have an opportunity to try his hand as a presiding officer, but not much in public, as the extra session of the Senate will attend exclusively to executive business. Even of that there will not be a great deal, for there are few strikes to be settled as a result of Mr. McKinley's re-election. He will have about seven months in which to study the Senate rules.

Washington has undertaken to supply out of its own musical resources the deficiency in the way of entertainment that was caused by the abandonment of this city as one of the places included in the annual tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The five concerts that that famous organization was wont to give here did not lack patronage, but the expenses attending the trip here were too great for the return realized. The liberal patronage of good music, however, inspired the notion that an organization of some instrumentalists, under proficient leadership, was practicable.

There is in the city a large number of accomplished players, some of them in the Marine Band, others in the bands at the theatres, and others still who are competent performers, but not employed in any organization. Mr. Santelmann, the leader of the Marine Band, showed Washington on Saturday night what he could be accomplished with some talent. Without much preliminary announcement he gave the first concert of the Washington Philharmonic Orchestra, a body of some sixty musicians, with M. Rakemann, a very skillful violinist, as concertmaster, and with other well-known performers supporting in the very well-adjusted band. The aim of the leader now is to complete the list, when it is stated that the programme included Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, No. 3, the Raff Symphony, "Im Walde," two Slavonic dances by Dvorak, and a concerto, said to have been performed for the first time, composed by Rachmaninoff, and the piano score interpreted by Mr. Sieveking.

Considering the fact that the members of the orchestra are all busy men, and that they have had insufficient time for rehearsals, the concert appeared to judges of good music to be a decided success and to give promise of the better success of the undertaking later on. Mr. Santelmann proved to be an excellent conductor, keeping his musicians thoroughly in hand, and gratifying the critics by his moderation rather than by any effort to create an impression merely by an array of numbers and a flashy programme. Now that he has shown what he can do, it is considered altogether probable that the second concert which is announced for Feb. 3, will be at once a musical and pecuniary success.

An ill-advised attempt to impair the efficiency of the civil service has been decisively beaten in the House in the rejection of a bill, said to have been brought forward under Grand Army auspices, to give all soldiers of the War of the Rebellion and of the Spanish war the preference over all other applicants for appointment to the offices of the Government. Some resentment may be expressed at this action, promoted by men who insist that the veterans no longer command the influence their services entitle them to, but the opposition to the bill was based upon perfectly impartial grounds. Most of the veterans of the civil war are no longer physically fit to take up office, and veterans of the Spanish war are not necessarily better equipped to be clerks than all other applicants.

Even the warmest friends of the old soldiers were unable to bring themselves to vote to put men of sixty years and upward in places requiring the possession of energy, elasticity, habitual industry, and trained intelligence, and the prospect of filling the offices with persons who would be useless and no better than so many pensioners, was intolerable. There are many veterans now in the civil service, and some of them possess no better qualifications for remaining than the discretion to comply with the lax rules for discipline and enjoy the lucrative salaries.

The complaint has often been heard here that the veterans are especially difficult to hold strictly to rules, and popular opinion in the departments has run against dropping them because of conspicuous inefficiency. To let in more of them would be to impair the efficiency of the public service and lead to congestion of business where youth and application are necessary to keep the wheels moving. Under the operation of the civil service law and rules it is already a grave problem to weed out the incapables fast enough. To deliberately add to the number of superannuated clerks who consider themselves privileged would soon be proved to be a terrible blunder, for it would compel the employment of an additional capable clerk to do the work which a worn-out veteran could never efficiently perform.

Representative Powers of Vermont provoked a much uncomplimentary reference to himself the other day, when in his speech on the bills to compel the Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio Railroads to abolish grade crossings by elevating and depressing their tracks in this city, he expressed the opinion that "Washington has too many parks." Part of the plan for the improvement of the terminal facilities of the Pennsylvania contemplates the permanent location of the station on Sixth Street, where it now is, and has been since the late Thomas A. Scott connected Washington with the rest of the world by rail. The plan proposes to allow the railroad to occupy a part of the Smithsonian reservation. To this there was some objection, and an amendment was suggested to remove the station beyond its present location to Maryland Avenue, beyond the reservation, and the plan submitted by Samuel Parsons for greatly extending the reservation south of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. Powers shares the opinions of others that already there are more parks than Washington can occupy or assimilate. Much of what is included in the Smithsonian reservation is put to no particular use. It is not a great pleasure resort, and even if cut down as proposed it will still be a spacious breathing place. Rock Creek Park, secured by the Government several years ago, is still a wild ravine of some 2,000 acres, inaccessible, for the most part, to all but the most adventurous climbers. Such parks as Franklin, Lafayette, Lincoln, Garfield, and the many small reservations at the intersections of streets at right angles, and the radiating avenues, are the most generally used parks. Mr. Powers's utilitarian view is not likely to become that of the House. The anxiety to get the tracks of the two main railroads reaching this city out of the way of destroying life, and the desire to promote the expenditure of some $11,000,000 to complete the improvements, led the members to grant a vested right on land much of which has been occupied by sufferance for many years.

Some surprise was caused by Rear Admiral Crowninshield's report for 1900 by the statement that there had been 2,452 desertions during the year. One reason why the astonishment was provoked was that it has not been customary to report the number of desertions, so that no opportunity was afforded to make a comparison to ascertain whether the number was larger than usual. As a matter of fact, the percentage of desertions in 1899 was smaller than it was in 1900. The desertions of apprentices in 1899 were 362, in 1900, 250, while in 1899 the desertions of men were 2,023, and in 1900 they were 2,202. It seems that the desertions are reported chiefly from among the ranks of apprentices and landsmen. In both classes the persons have entered a calling to which they fancied themselves fitted and have discovered that they really had no call to the sea. Among able seamen the proportion of desertions is smaller.

But all classes of enlisted men are subject to temptations to active service. The war in South Africa proved to be a magnet to many enlisted men, tired of the inactivity of a peace service, and who seized opportunities to desert in ports where British transports were met on their way to South Africa. It is intimated that this was found to be the case to a marked degree in the South Atlantic Squadron, and for that reason it is now believed to have been a wise thing to decide that Rear Admiral Schley's fleet was not to go to any South African port while the war was in progress, as it is plain that the chance for adventurous service would have deprived him of an important part of his force of men and boys. There has been no complaint of bad treatment or any sort of hardship on United States vessels, the crews of which are uniformly well fed and well regulated.

REPORTER TO CAMERLINGO.

A New York Newspaper Man Who Became a Close Friend of Pope Leo XIII.

A recent letter from Rome told of the entombment in the Campo Santo of an old-time New York newspaper reporter, Joseph C. Heywood. He had lived for a long time in Rome, and had for many years held the office of Private Chamberlain, or Camerlingo, to Pope Leo XIII., of whom he was a friend and favorite. A journalist of this city, John Swinton, who was associated with him in newspaper work, spoke of him yesterday. "The last time," he said, "that I saw my former colleague Mr. Heywood, was in his palace at Rome, near St. Peter's, about ten years ago. Previously I had served with him in the dingy office of a New York daily paper; now he had his home in the Palazzo Giraud Jorlonia, a wonderful domicile. Then he was, as I suppose, a Protestant; now he was a Catholic and a fast friend of his Holiness, who was his patron, and whom he served as Camerlingo. Then he was a well-seasoned bachelor; now he was the congenial husband of a rich American wife.

"But Mr. Heywood, when I last saw him in Rome, still had the instincts of a newspaper man, if, indeed, such men have any peculiar instincts. He spoke of other times, asked about his former confrères, and recalled his experiences in New York.

"He had rendered service to many Americans in Rome, and he rejoiced at any opportunity of helping newspaper men. About the time I was in Rome he found occasion to render a particular service to one New York editor. It was through him that arrangements were made at the Vatican for the reception by the Pope of the late Mr. Dana, who once told how, in his presence, the Pope recited a passage from the 'Paradiso' of Dante that seemed to bear directly upon his American hearer, who was not a Catholic.

"The interior of Mr. Heywood's Roman palace was most interesting and impressive to an intelligent visitor. It was richly adorned with objects of art, ancient, mediaeval, and modern, but the most attractive thing in it as a scholar was the library, which was said to be one of the largest and finest private collections in the world.

"There are always opportunities in Rome of securing the rare books of past ages in many languages. He welcomed visitors, and I yet have the card which he sent to me when I arrived at Rome bearing his address, 'Palazzo Giraud Jorlonia, Piazza Scossacavalli.'

"Mr. Heywood's chief work on the daily paper which he served in New York a quarter of a century ago was that of dramatic reporter, but he also sometimes treated questions in art and literature. All his work was thoughtful, graceful, and grave. He himself was the writer of serious dramas, or, as he called them, 'dramatic poems,' which, I think, were designed for the closet, not for the stage. I have three volumes of these works, one entitled 'Herodias,' another 'Antonius,' and the other 'Salinda.' There are not a few impressive scences, powerful passages, and striking characters in these dramas.

"It was last month that the news of Mr. Heywood's death in Rome was cabled to his friends in New York, and it was but last Saturday that the announcement of the death of his wife was received here from Rome. Her departure had come quickly after his own. Both had lived to a good old age; he was fourscore and she over threescore.

"The American colony at Rome and American tourists who go there will miss Mr. Heywood, and so will his aged friend and patron, Pope Leo XIII.

SONS OF THE REVOLUTION.

Twenty-fifth Anniversary to be Celebrated Feb. 22.

Elaborate preparations are being made by the New York Society of the Sons of the Revolution to celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary, on Feb. 22 next. The annual dinner will be held at Delmonico's. Attorney General Griggs, Edmund Wetmore, and the Rev. Dr. H. P. Dewey of Brooklyn have been invited to speak.

Beginning with the coming year, it has been decided to have a paper on some subject of Revolutionary interest read at each of the regular stated meetings. The first meeting of 1901 will be held on the evening of Jan. 17, at Delmonico's, when District Attorney Asa Bird Gardiner will read a paper on "The Bench and Bar of New York in the Revolutionary Days." At the meeting on April 10, the anniversary of the battle of Lexington, Dr. Sidney H. Carney, Jr., will read about the medical profession in this city during the Revolution.

NURSING CANCER PATIENTS

Many Women Volunteer Their Services for the Work.

MRS. LATHROP'S EXPERIENCE

Dominican Sisterhood Not So Hard to Enter as a Convent—Life Not Austere.

The announcement last week of the entrance into a religious life of Miss Mary Watts Keany, daughter of Gen. John Watts Keany, is one of the few such events which become known generally. There are a large number of women continually "leaving the world" for one reason or another, and many of them are from the poorer classes.

Even in the particularly trying work to which Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop has devoted her life—that of curing the poor sufferers from cancers in the city—there are many women who offer their services and wish to devote themselves to a religious life. Mrs. Lathrop receives on an average three letters a week from women who wish to assist her. A large proportion of these cannot be accepted for various reasons, but the requests to become helpers in St. Rose's Free Home still continue. Mrs. Lathrop has four additional helpers who will come to her very soon, increasing the number of the sisters to eleven, and eight are coming a little later. There will then be assistant workers enough to carry on double the work that is going on now in the little Cherry Street hospital.

The history of the women who have come to assist Mrs. Lathrop since she began her work, with those who are still applying, makes interesting reading. The offers of the latter are sometimes almost amusing. They represent all classes of women, and their letters reveal many and various disabilities as far as the possibility of their service is concerned in a Dominican sisterhood. Some of the women who have wished to join have acknowledged that they were not themselves Roman Catholics, but would "just as leave be Catholics as anything else." They are not turned away, but are recommended to some priest, where they can receive religious instruction, and later, if they are still of the same mind, they may be acceptable. Other would-be workers wish to devote only a part of their life to the work, a few months, two years, or perhaps five. Others wish pay for their services, and still others who make application are too young. The work is arduous, and no one is admitted until it is certain she will never regret the step. All the letters received are answered with a fullness of detail, and there is always a possibility that the applicants may be received at another time.

Among the women who have been making applications recently and coming to assist in the work are a number of girls who have been working in factories, some who have been in household service, and women who have been engaged in nursing. Some of the women who make application wish a home, some are leaving their own homes on account of family troubles, and some are recommended by priests and the religious in convents. Those who are fitted for the work are received cordially. It was Mrs. Lathrop's first idea to build up the work with women of business capacity and cultivation. She found later that it was simpler than she expected, that the greatest requirements would be devotion, charity, and a certain humility which would enable the workers to accept an idea and carry it out with great precision. There is a need for workers who can keep books and accounts and write letters, but the chief work to do is the nursing and housework. The sisters do not spare themselves and they have no lay sisters.

NO DOWRY REQUIRED.

There are more restrictions in the way of entering a convent than in becoming a member of the Order of Dominican Sisters, and this is a reason for some of the applications to join in her work. To enter a convent there must be a certain dowry, the applicant must not be older as a rule than thirty-five, and must have a certain amount of health. The convent aims to be a self-supporting institution and contributes to the support of the mother house. The life is austere, the fare meagre, and the work and religious exercises severe. It requires a woman of some physical endurance to undertake it. Much of the work done in many of the convents is teaching, which requires educational qualifications.

No dowry is required in joining the sisters in the little hospital on Cherry Street. No woman is admitted under twenty-four, but the age limit is extended to admit women up to the age of forty-five. The requirement for perfect health is not demanded, for good work can be done by women less strong, and there is no special requirement in the way of education or cultivation.

"Our work is so hard and particularly unpleasant," Mrs. Lathrop says, "that we cannot ask so much of women who are willing to give themselves to it. We cannot admit any one who is not old enough to be quite certain of her vocation for the work, but the older women can do much good for us. As for the dowry, we live on what is given us, but we have no large house to support, we have no operating room in connection with our hospital, and there are no household arrangements which require money, nothing but the work itself. Our life is better than in the convents, for we have found by experience that we must have substantial food. We have soups and butter and milk, but no luxuries. The atmosphere of the work is debilitating. There is a fine quality of women coming to us."

There were many friends who went to help Mrs. Lathrop at different times in the early part of her work, when she and her workers called themselves the "Servants of Relief." The very first workers were Protestants—charming women, who did valuable work. Some made their homes in the few rooms on one floor of the little house in Scammel Street, and others came to work a few hours each day. One of the workers, who staid six months, was a Christian Scientist. She did not intend to emphasize her belief in her work and did not mention it at the outset. But the doctrine was a real belief with her, and it was not possible for her to hide her slight regard for prayers, doctors, and medicines. A number of Roman Catholic women went for a time to assist in the work, and among other would-be helpers at least three women with unbalanced minds were recommended and sent to help Mrs. Lathrop in her work. They have all since been sent to asylums. In a quiet indoor life there might have been a mutual benefit for mental and physical sufferers, but in the struggle of Mrs. Lathrop's work it was not possible.

SOME HAPPENINGS IN GOOD SOCIETY

Congratulations may be extended this week on the anniversaries of their weddings to

Mr. and Mrs. Edward N. Tailer, (Miss Agnes Suffern,) Dec. 27, 1855.

Mr. and Mrs. William B. Sands, (Miss Mary Gardiner,) Dec. 25, 1886.

Mr. and Mrs. James Benkard, (Miss Fanny G. Horton,) Dec. 27, 1870.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lorillard, (Miss Elizabeth Screven,) Dec. 29, 1880.

Count de Moltke Huitfeldt and the Countess de Moltke-Huitfeldt, (Miss Louisa Bonaparte,) Dec. 29, 1866.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilmot Townsend Cox, (Miss Marie Dunne Bleecker Miller,) Dec. 26, 1896.

Col. Eugene Kelly Austin and Mrs. Austin, (Miss Mabel Grant Hatch,) Dec. 28, 1897.

Dr. William Kinnicut Draper and Mrs. Draper, (Miss Helen Fidelia Hoffman,) Dec. 28, 1898.

Christmas week, which opens to-day, is never a very gay one in the world of society. The influence of the virtual three days' holiday—for Monday will see but little business transacted—which the falling of Christmas on Tuesday brings this year, will be felt to a marked degree, and the wheels of business and society will be slow in beginning to move on Wednesday after their stoppage of seventy-two hours. From the social standpoint New York will have one of the most quiet and uneventful Christmases for many years past. The men and women who influence the doings of the society world of the metropolis will spend Christmas Day and part of the week out of town. In town the principal incidents will be the dinner and dance at James L. Breese's carbon studio to-morrow evening, Christmas Eve; the dance to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Henry O. Havemeyer for the Misses Havemeyer on Wednesday evening, Dec. 26; the dance to be given by Mrs. Charles T. Barney on Friday evening, Dec. 28, for Miss Helen Barney, and the second meeting of Mrs. Church's dancing class at Sherry's on the same evening. Mr. and Mrs. Louis A. Thebaud will give a dance at Stonecrest, their country residence, at Morris Plains, N. J., also on Friday evening, to which a number of the younger set will go out from town.

***

The dance to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Havemeyer (Miss Elder) for their daughters, the Misses Adeline and Electa Havemeyer, is the first large entertainment to be given at the Havemeyer residence, 1 East Sixty-sixth Street. Mr. Havemeyer has for many years been collecting rare paintings and art objects, and this dance will give the first opportunity to many to examine them. The dance is for the younger set, and there will be a cotillion with beautiful favors.

***

Mrs. Barney's dance on Friday night will be a notable affair. It is for her débutante daughter, Miss Helen T. Barney, who is to have one of the largest, if not the largest, and finest balls of this or many other seasons, given her by her uncle, ex-Secretary William C. Whitney, on Jan. 4. Worthington Whitehouse is to lead at both of these cotillions, dancing on both occasions with Miss Barney.

***

Other important private dances announced in these columns during the past week will be those of Mrs. William D. Sloane, on Jan. 21, and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry, on Jan. 28. Other January balls will include those to be given by Mrs. Astor, on the 7th; by Mrs. John Jacob Astor, on the 11th, and by Mrs. Ogden Mills, on the 17th.

***

It is not often that two important weddings occur during Christmas week, but this year there will be two—notably, those of Stuyvesant Fish Morris, Jr., and Miss Elizabeth Wynkoop, which is to be celebrated on Thursday, Dec. 27, in Calvary Church, and that of Charles Frederick Hoffman and Miss Zella Krumbhaar Prest, which will take place at Tuxedo on Saturday, Jan. 29.

***

Miss Zella Krumbhaar Preston, who is to marry Charles Frederick Hoffman on Saturday next in St. Mary's Church, at Tuxedo, will have for her maid of honor her sister, Miss Mary Alice Preston. The two nieces of the bridegroom, the Misses Louise and Eleanor Rodewald, will be flower girls. William M. V. Hoffman will be Mr. Hoffman's best man, and the ushers selected are Creighton Peet, H. Evelyn Pierrepont, Jr., Dongan de Peyster, William McN. Rodewald, Lewis Butler Preston, and Francis E. Ward. A special train will take the guests from New York to the ceremony, and the boat connecting with this train will leave the foot of West Twenty-third Street at 10:55. The return train for the guests will leave Tuxedo at 4 o'clock. Bishop Potter, assisted by the Rev. Eugene A. Hoffman, Dean of the Episcopal Theological Seminary, and an uncle of the bridegroom, and the Rev. George Grenville Merrill, rector of St. Mary's, will officiate. Miss Preston, who is a daughter of the late George Rutledge Preston, will be given away by her brother, George Rutledge Preston. The ceremony will be celebrated at 12:30 o'clock, and will be followed by a wedding breakfast at the new clubhouse in the park.

Miss Elizabeth Hillis Wynkoop, whose marriage to Stuyvesant Fish Morris, Jr., is to be celebrated on Thursday at 3 o'clock in Calvary Church, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-first Street, will have neither maid of honor nor bridesmaids. Mr. Morris's best man is to be his brother, Richard Lewis Morris, and the ushers are to be James Nicholas Gallatin, Thomas Wilkinson Satterthwaite, John Hill Prentice, James Ripley Bartholomew, and Daniel Woodbury Wynkoop, brother of the bride to be. Miss Wynkoop's father, Dr. Gerardus H. Wynkoop, will give her away, and the officiating clergyman will be Dr. J. Lewis Parks. The reception at Dr. Wynkoop's residence, 128 Madison Avenue, which is to follow the ceremony, will be for the families of the bride and bridegroom and relatives only.

The opera on Wednesday and Friday evenings and again yesterday at the matinée had a full representation of society. The changes in the boxholders on each night were interesting to those who observe, for some of the parterre boxes, in particular, this year are so subdivided that it makes the opera attendance entirely different on each night. Tuesday, the opening night, was, naturally, the most brilliant of the three evenings. There was only one vacant box, that of Mrs. Alexander T. Van Nest, in the parterre row on that evening. Last year the one vacant box was that of Henry A. C. Taylor, Mrs. Taylor having died a few days before the opening of the opera season.

The color notes of the costumes thus far worn at the opera are white and pastelle shades of delicate hues. Very few brilliant colors are used, and the few that have been worn made their wearers decidedly conspicuous.

***

On Friday evening some of the best-gowned women were Mrs. Frederic Neilson, who wore a remarkable costume of gray panne velvet trimmed with jet and silver; the Baroness de Sellière, who wore black lace over pearl-colored silk, relieved with touches of pale blue; Miss Louise Ward McAllister, who was in a very low-cut gown of lavender trimmed with flowers of the same color; Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, who wore pink silk trimmed with lace, and Mrs. Francis H. Leggett, who was in black trimmed with rare lace. Among Mrs. Leggett's guests on Friday in the Van Nest box, which she has leased for the season, was the Duke of Newcastle.

***

Among the occupants of boxes at the Opera House on the opening night, whose names have not already been published, were the following: Former Senator Clark of Montana had in Box No. 53 as his guests Dr. and Everett Mallory Culver and Mrs. Culver, Dr. Lewis Rutherfurd Morris and Mrs. Morris, and William A. Clark, Jr., Mrs. Winslow Pierce had as her guests in her box, Mr. and Mrs. Hart Lyman; Mrs. Walter Platt of Baltimore, and Mr. Carey, Mr. and Mrs. E. St. John Hays had as their guests in their box, Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Ladew, Miss Hays, and Henry Dater. With Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Juilliard in their parterre box, No. 2, were Mrs. George E. Dodge, Miss Dodge, F. E. Juilliard, and Mr. Neeser.

***

Mrs. Astor gave a dinner of twenty-nine covers at her residence, 842 Fifth Avenue, last evening. The same service and the same flowers—American Beauty roses—were used as on the previous Saturday night, but the decorations were, if anything, more elaborate than last time. Lander's Orchestra, as before, played during the dinner. The guests were Col. John Jacob Astor and Mrs. Astor, Baron and Baroness de Sellière, Mr. and Mrs. Cass Canfield, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Jr., and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mr. and Mrs. J. Lee Talier, Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Lady Cunard, Mrs. Adolph Ladenburg, Mr. and Mrs. Francis K. Pendleton, Marquise de Talleyrand-Perigord, William K. Vanderbilt, Sr., J. J. Van Alen, Egerton Winthrop, Lispenard Stewart, Alfonso de Navarro, and M. de Rambouillet.

***

At the dinner given last evening by Miss Elizabeth Remsen for Mme. Sembrich the guests included Mr. and Mrs. Jules Montant, Mr. and Mrs. Allston Flagg, Miss Callender, Miss Nathalie Schenck, Frank Paton, Harold Brown, and Robert Boorman. Mme. Sembrich is to be the guest of honor, with Herr Andreas Dippel and Mme. Dippel, at a dinner to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson Seligman at their residence, 11 East Sixty-ninth Street, on Wednesday evening next.

***

The engagement is announced of Lucius Tuckerman Gibbs of this city and Miss Angelica Singleton Duer, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Duer, (Miss Anna Van Buren,) of Hauxhurst, Weehawken.

***

The musicales given by Miss De Forest and Miss Callender at their apartments, which have been such a feature of the past few Winters, will not, to the regret of many music lovers and society in general, take place this season. Miss Callender has just lost her cousin, William Stanhope Callender, who married Miss Teresa Anthon, and it is reported that Miss De Forest will go abroad in January with Mrs. Hooper for an indefinite stay.

***

Miss Grace Atkins Dobson is to give a dramatic recital at the Waldorf on the evening of Saturday, Jan. 5. She will give French-Canadian poems, dramatic cantillations, and a Japanese monologue, "Cherry Blossoms," written for the occasion by W. G. Van Tassel Sutphen. Several well-known women will be the patronesses.

***

Mrs. E. Ellery Anderson will give a dinner on Thursday, Jan. 10, and a luncheon on Wednesday, Jan. 23, at her residence, 11 West Thirty-eighth Street. Mrs. Anderson gave, on Wednesday, a luncheon in honor of her niece, Miss Angela Anderson, who recently arrived from Paris. Among the guests at this luncheon were Mrs. Robert Ralston Crosby, Mrs. Louis Ogden, Mrs. Richard Steers, Mrs. Edmund L. Keyes, Mrs. Ellery O. Anderson, and the Misses Tracy and Stephens.

***

There are to be a number of large dinners this week, notably those to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Philip Rhinelander in honor of Miss Elisa Strong and William V. B. Kip, and Mrs. Francis McNeil Bacon on Thursday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Rhinelander are to give a large family dinner at Sherry's on Christmas Day, and a luncheon in honor of the Countess de Laugier-Villars at their residence, 18 West Forty-eighth Street, on Wednesday, Dec. 26. Mr. and Mrs. Oakley Rhinelander are to give a dinner on Saturday evening in honor of Miss Strong and Mr. Kip. Miss Gurnee is to give a family dinner at her residence to-morrow evening.

***

Two engagements were announced during the week. One of these was that of Mrs. William F. Burden (Miss Daisy McCoy of Troy) and Dr. Andrew S. Clark of Paris. Dr. Clark arrived yesterday from Europe, and with Mrs. Burden was lunching in the Waldorf palm garden yesterday, where the couple received many congratulations. The other engagement announced was that of Mr. Levinev, an Englishman, and Miss Edith Crosby, a daughter of the late Dr. Howard Crosby. Miss Crosby has lived abroad much of the time for the past few years. The wedding will take place very shortly in England, where Miss Crosby is now residing.

***

Among those who arrived yesterday on the Campania, from Liverpool and Queenstown, were Ricardo Diaz Albertini, Marquis Bouthillier-Chavigny, the Hon. George A. Burns and Mrs. Burns, L. Coatsworth, A. S. Cochrane, Capt. F. B. Drage, Gaspard Farrer, Louis C. Hay, Benjamin Horton, Richard Irvin, C. Kaufman, Grafton C. Kennedy, Major J. C. MacDougall, Cecil Arthur Mackintosh, John H. McFadden, F. C. Graham-Menzles, the Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D., Major G. R. Powell, J. E. Quantance, William T. Redfield, E. P. Prentice, Miss Alta Rockefeller, Miss L. M. Spelman, H. Ainsworth Smith, Clifton H. Wheeler, Capt. H. C. Wilson, and W. Harris Roome.

***

Among the passengers who arrived yesterday afternoon on the St. Louis from Southampton and Cherbourg were Sherman Aldrich, Lieut. Commander Asher, C. Baker, United States Navy; Mr. and Mrs. William Barnes, Jr., of Albany, Bertram C. Bixby, Dr. A. J. Benedict, Mr. and Mrs. Jameson Cotting, Lord Clonmel, Mrs. Arthur Cotton of Chicago, Major George C. Crayer, Miss Condit-Smith, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Curran, Richard Golding, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Griscom, Jr., Hugh Hastings, Major Knox, Dr. T. B. Loughlen, Mrs. St. Clair McKelway, Capt. A. M. McGray, Mrs. Harold F. Hadden and Miss Hadden, the Hon. F. W. Peck, Commissioner General to the Paris Exposition, and Mrs. Peck, the Hon. Robert P. Porter, MacDougall Hawkes, Herbert W. Stebbins, the Hon. B. D. Woodward, Mrs. R. E. Pancoast, Miss Pancoast, Dr. F. H. Wessels, Mrs. Ferdinand Wilmerding, Edward F. Rook, Mrs. L. A. Hamersley, G. Wishart, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Simms, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert W. Stebbins, and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel S. Work.

Eugene Kelly, Miss Potter, W. Calquhoun, and Capt. S. P. Walker, Mrs. Walker, and son were booked to sail on the Umbria for Liverpool yesterday.

The performance of the opertta "Old King Sol; or, The Woes and Wiles of King Solomon, the Wives," entitled, "a purely local and amateurish effort," written for the Harmonie Club, the music by Helen E. Hendricks, the words and lyrics by V. Sidney Rothschild, was given at the clubhouse in West Forty-second Street last evening. So great was the curiosity and anticipation among the members of the club to hear the operetta, which were heightened by the reports of those who were present at the public rehearsal on Friday evening, that again as on Friday, the large ballroom, where the production was given, could not accommodate those who wished to attend, and many were obliged to return without hearing the performance. Mrs. Albert Hendricks, the composer, has long been known for her compositions, and has written the music for several popular songs. Her musical setting to Mr. Rothschild's words is clever and attractive. Perhaps the best numbers are the overture, a two-step, and the setting to the song of the "Irresistible Typewriter Girl," in 4-8 tempo, producing the effect of the clicking of the typewriter keys. Particularly good also is the music for the mandolin accompaniment to "Stars of the Summer Night," and to "Dear Love, When in Thine Arms I Lie." The principal characters were taken by Mr. Bernstein, as Old King Sol, Mr. Schneider as Sharskopf, a shepherd boy; Miss Levy of Boston as Zahzzah, a Shulamite, and Mr. Nathan as Lightfoot, the ballé master. Miss Waterman and Miss Van Fraag took the parts of "Princess Nic-co-tine" and "Princess Chichur," the daughters of Solomon. The operetta in music and libretto was paid the tribute of warm applause, and the opinion was expressed that it was worthy of production on the professional stage.

SOCIETY NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene O'Sullivan, who returned from Europe last week, have taken apartments at the Hotel Netherland for the Winter.

The wedding of Mr. Carl J. Ullmann and Miss Jenny Bernheim took place last week and was solemnized at the bride's home by the Rev. Dr. G. Gotthell.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Lewisohn of 9 West Fifty-seventh Street will give a dance to introduce their youngest daughter to-morrow evening.

Mrs. S. G. Bayne of Riverside Drive and One Hundred and Eighth Street will give a dance for young people on Thursday evening, Dec. 27.

The engagement of Moses Stern and Miss Josie May, daughter of Mrs. Lewis May of 21 East Seventy-fourth Street, is announced.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodor Ladenburger will return to New York on the Fuerst Bismarck, after a two months' wedding tour abroad. They will reside at 134 East Seventy-ninth Street.

The Freundschaft Club will have its Christmas performance to-morrow evening, when "La Traviata," with Mme. Sembrich in the title rôle, will be sung. A dance will follow the opera.

The engagement is announced of Louis W. Dinkelspiel and Miss Florine G. Marks of the Hotel Orleans. The young couple will be at home to their friends to-day from 3 until 6 o'clock.

Miss Kate M. Barnard and Mr. Aaron Vanderworker will be married on Wednesday, Jan. 2, at 8 o'clock, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Paterson, 487 State Street, Brooklyn.

The Purim Association announces that its annual charity ball will be held on Thursday, Feb. 14, 1901, at the Metropolitan Opera House, the proceeds of which will be used for the benefit of the United Hebrew Charities.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Savage have issued cards for a New Year's Eve party at their residence, 415 Riverside Drive. Miss Savage and Leslie Loring Savage will receive. The Columbia College Chapter of the Phi Delta Theta National Fraternity will be the guests of the evening. Those present will dance the old year out.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Ives Plumb have closed their country house, Deer Range, Islip, L. I., and are at the Cambridge, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-third Street, for the Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernhard Beinecke announce the engagement of their daughter Alice to Mr. Fritz Weickert of Leipsic, Germany.

The musicale at Miss Nora Maynard Green's studio on Monday evening last was largely attended. The participants acquitted themselves well. The two songs, "La Chanson d'Esmeralda" and "Oh! That We Two Were Maying," were particularly well rendered by Mrs. Wall, and Miss Boesé was heard to advantage in "Teach Me the Charm," "A Summer Love Tale," and "Nymphs and Shepherds."

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Cornwell Shoup of 578 Central Park West have left the city to be present at the wedding of Miss May Beveridge, Mrs. Shoup's sister, to Dr. Miller at Washington, this week, and to spend the holidays with Mrs. Shoup's mother, Mrs. M. W. Beveridge, at Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Lanier Sykes of 175 West Eighty-fifth Street are spending the holidays at Aberdeen, Miss., the home of Mr. Sykes.

The marriage of Eugene G. Kremer and Miss Agnes Oppenheimer, daughter of August Oppenheimer of 8 West Seventy-fifth Street, took place at the bride's home last Tuesday. The ceremony was performed by Prof. Felix Adler. The bride was gowned in white satin. The maid of honor was her sister, Miss Elsie Oppenheimer. Among the guests present were Mr. and Mrs. Edwin L. Meyers, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rothschild, Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Adler, the Messrs. Kaufmann, and the Misses Myers.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris Freedman celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding on Wednesday at their residence, 135 West Eighty-sixth Street. The house was profusely decorated with white roses and greens, and the dinner table was decorated with violet orchids and pinks. Favors of silver, appropriately inscribed, were distributed, while Mr. and Mrs. Freedman were the recipients of many gifts of silverware and jewels. There was music by a Hungarian orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Townsend of 224 West Fifty-second Street will commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding by a dinner given to a few friends at their residence to-day. Mr. Townsend is the creator of "The Townsend Library of the Civil War," which was forty years in preparation, and which has been purchased and presented to Columbia University. He is also the author of "Honors of the Empire State," a work devoted to a detailed description of the part taken by New York in the war of the rebellion, and of "From Columbus to Lincoln: Crises in American History." Mr. Townsend enjoys a vigorous old age, and is at present engaged in completing the final volume of his "library."

At the tea which Mr. Arthur de Ferraris gave at his studio, in the Sherwood Building, the other day Mrs. J. West Roosevelt assisted in receiving. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, George F. Peabody, Spencer Trask, Carl Schurz, Mrs. James Harriman and Miss Harriman, Baroness de Wardener, Mr. and Mrs. James Speyer, Mr. and Mrs. Mills Day, Mrs. William A. Perry, German Consul Gen. Bimz, Bishop Potter, Mark Twain, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Montant, Mrs. Emil L. Boas, Dr. L. Rutherford Morris, Baron and Baroness Hupmann, Mrs. Theodore Hellman, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob H. Schiff, Mr. and Mrs. I. A. Seligman, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Fuller, Mrs. Barton French, and Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Sanderson.

The Columbia Sophomore Dramatic Society gave its first representation last Tuesday evening of Leonidas Westervelt's play, "Professor Whimsical." The play was received with enthusiasm and hearty applause by a large audience. Prof. Simlon Spat was personated by Roland B. Keithley, who was very good in the rôle. Malcolm Curry as Snowdrop, the faithful colored servant, was amusing. Tarquenia Spat (Gerald O'Loughlin) made a dashing-looking traveling tzigana, and Mrs. Ballington Bounce acted the part of a Xanthippe to perfection, with a little of the Mme. Malaprop intermixed, but had a tender spot for her daughter, Cherry Bounce, which rôle was well acted by Dayton Colle. Harold S. Osborne was excellent as the clown.

The Cornell University Musical Clubs will give a concert in the Astoria ballroom Thursday evening, Dec. 27. The concert has been arranged by the New York Alumni Association, and the following list of patronesses is announced: Mrs. Stewart L. Woodford, Mrs. Charles Francis, Mrs. G. W. Schurman, Mrs. J. W. Boothby, Mrs. N. Macy, Mrs. W. C. Kerr, Mrs. Dunning, Mrs. C. C. Sheam, Mrs. J. C. Munroe, Mrs. Jacob Gould Schurman, Mrs. F. V. L. Pruyn, Mrs. Andrews, Mrs. S. H. Stebbins, Mrs. J. C. Edgar, Mrs. C. H. Blair, Mrs. I. C. Place, Mrs. William Brayton, Mrs. T. S. Williams, Mrs. C. Bacon, Mrs. Seth Low, Mrs. W. M. Polk, Mrs. F. S. Dennis, Mrs. T. L. Woodruff, Mrs. H. W. Sackett, Mrs. R. T. Morris, Mrs. H. G. Vail, Mrs. C. H. Knight, Miss Furniss, Miss R. Putnam, and others.

A song recital was given by Miss Katherine Bickford and Mr. Harvey Self, assisted by Orton Bradley at Mr. Bradley and Perry Averill's studios, Central Park West, on Friday afternoon. Among those present were Frank Eaton, Eillson Van Hoose, Edwin Cary, Mrs. Butterfield, Mrs. Joseph Cozzino, Mrs. Meyer, Mrs. Sweetman, Mrs. William Porter, Miss Porter, Mr. and Mrs. Hedden, Miss Davies, Miss Purdy, Mrs. Harrington, Mrs. Pendleton, Mrs. De Spaignet, Mrs. C. W. Baldwin, Mrs. John Hegeman, Mrs. Bnymer, Mrs. F. L. Linton, Mrs. C. F. Baldwin, Mrs. Ansel White, Mrs. Bloodgood, Miss Evelyn Lincoln, Miss Edith Baker, Miss Emil Linton, and Miss Gale. Some of the numbers of the programme were Bemberg's "Nymphs and Fauns," Schumann's "Wiimung," Haydn's "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair," Gilbert's "Bonnie Sweet Bessie," and two old English pieces, "Gwendolen" and "Tobacco."

The Rubinstein Club gave its first private concert in the Astoria ballroom on Thursday evening last, William R. Chapman being musical director. The club was assisted by Signor Massimo Massimi, the tenor, from the Royal Theatre, Covent Garden, London; Signor Armand Lecomte, the baritone, and C. Enrico Mario Scognamillo, the cellist. Emil G. Levy was accompanist. The concert was appreciated by a large audience. The "Sing, Smile, Slumber," by Gounod; "Love's Dream After the Ball," and "The Spanish Gypsy Girl" were delightfully rendered by the orchestra. Both of Signor Massimi's renditions of "Ossian Song" of Massenet and the "Serenade" from "Barbier de Seville" were received with much enthusiasm, as were also the songs interpreted by Signor Armand Lecomte. Signor Scognamillo was particularly happy in his "Homage to Pergolesi," and his selections "Praeludium," "Gavotte," and his own composition, "Barcarolle," were received with much enthusiasm.

At Dodworth's on Thursday evening last the first of the Cinderella Cotillions was danced. These dances have been running for four seasons. Round dancing is the programme until 11, when supper is served, after which the cotillion takes place. The cotillion was led by Henry K. White, Jr. The Board of Governors consists of Edward B. Ripsom, Henry K. White, Jr., Theodore N. Ripsom, A. Montgomery Johnson, Frederick R. White, Harry E. Avery, J. Douglass De Forest, Thomas C. Raine, Reginald H. E. Starr, Paul G. Chapman, and William P. McCord. The second dance of the series will be held Jan. 3, 1901. Among the members are the following: The Misses G. K. Ballard, Olive N. Hitchcock, Blanche Spadone, Ethel Shrady, Marie L. Bingham, Louise Shepard, Dorothy Echerson, Mabel Gardiner, Mabel Welsh, Lillian Welsh, Fannie G. Ely, Edythe H. Reed, Rose Sadlier, Eleanor Carter, Ethel White, and William Chilvers, T. Lockwood Perry, Walter D. Tubbs, Richard Cromwell, Lee M. Bingham, and Renwick Dimond.

LAKEWOOD'S OPENING SEASON.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Dec. 22.—There is every indication that there will be much Christmas merriment here, for the trains are already coming in heavily laden with sojourners who come to enjoy the holiday season and the many sports and pastimes. The hotels and cottages are decorated with mistletoe, holly, and evergreens, and there is an air of good cheer everywhere. Society is busy arranging house parties for the holidays, the largest of which will be given by Mr. and Mrs. George Gould, who will entertain the Duke of Newcastle, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Randolph, and others. The party will begin on the 28th and continue until the 31st, for which time the Goulds have arranged a programme of indoor sports and pastimes at the Georgian Court casino.

John D. Rockefeller has engaged a suite of five rooms at the Laurel-in-the-Pines, where former Secretary and Mrs. Cornelius N. Bliss are staying. An event in the near future is the reception to be given by Mrs. William Leeds next Saturday, in her Madison Avenue cottage, in honor of the début of her daughter, who will be assisted in receiving by Miss Elizabeth Ellsworth of New York, Miss Margaret Hamilton of Saratoga Springs, Miss Mary Stuart of New York, Miss Susie Murray of Englewood, N. J., and Miss Lillian Fraser of New York. The reception will be followed by a small dance. Between three and four hundred cards have been issued.

With their usual liberality, the Goulds have arranged a Christmas entertainment, including a large tree, for all the employes of their Georgian Court estate. It will be given on Christmas Day in the Gould Casino. Mr. and Mrs. T. Morton P. Mills will give a house party during holiday week, entertaining a number of friends from New York City and Oakdale, L. I. Alfred de Cordova, with his wife, and their protégé, Miss Georgina Billings of Montana, have arrived at the Lakewood for the holidays. On Christmas Day the Cordovas will give a coaching party, driving to the historical and deserted village of Allaire.

An attraction during the week has been the excellent skating and ice boating on Lake Carasaljo. Among the throng who were seen skimming over the large area on runners were Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lockwood, Cornelius A. Bliss, Jr., Miss Queenie Hall, Robert A. Bonner, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Davis, George H. Macy, Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Cornwell, Andrew J. Murphy, Miss Rhinelander, George Griswold, Jr., Miss Cook, George T. Woodman, Miss Kernochan, F. A. Walthew, the Misses Coudert, Jay Gould, Miss Jennie Wilson, and Kingdon Gould. Christmas will be full of life and gayety. The links of the Golf Club will be filled with players, who have been arriving in large numbers during the past two days. There will also be considerable golfing at the Country Club, and on the same grounds, in the afternoon, beginning at 2 o'clock, the first of the special events in pigeon shooting for President George J. Gould's trophy, valued at $50, will take place. P. S. P. Randolph, President of the Point Judith Country Club of Narragansett Pier, R. I., has built a three-quarter mile track to be used for exercising his running horses. A couple of trotting and pacing races have been arranged for this track on Christmas Day.

DULL SEASON FOR SOME.

All Lives are not Benefited by the Activity Peculiar to the Holidays.

Amid all the bewildering profusion of holiday goods adorning the windows of nearly every shop in the great shopping districts of the city the average pedestrian struggling along through the brilliantly lined streets, pulsating with the spirit of Christmas, is struck with a feeling almost of pity upon encountering here and there lonely little shops which have nothing to sell for gifts on the glorious morning.

Such places are few and far between, for there are few establishments that cannot find in their stock something that will be found suitable for gifts on that glorious morning, and have furbished up and decorated accordingly. The cigar store has a holiday assortment of wonderfully fashioned smokers' utensils, useful and otherwise, spread out in gorgeous array. The proprietor also has cheerful collections of walking canes which serve as an excuse for artistic arrangement.

The baker has his aggregation of wonderful cakes for the festive occasion; the butcher, permeated with the spirit of the glorious time, has hams and legs of mutton of extraordinary proportions brought out and decorated with fancy colored paper and artificial flowers indicative of good cheer. The grocery man has a vast collection of holly and even mistletoe for sale, and he is kept busy. Even the drug store has forced its usual rather cheerless stock into the background for this happy season, and has brought a beautiful array of perfumery and delightful toilet articles to arrest the Christmast shopper.

But scattered here and there in the brilliantly lighted streets are little shops that have no holiday goods to display, and although throughout the year their business goes on steadily they are almost forgotten during Christmas week. They have no gorgeous holiday stock displayed and they do not need to keep open very late of evenings these days.

"No," said the dentist, when asked about the matter a few days ago, as he contemplated through the window a wonderful Santa Claus scene across the street. "As a rule we do not expect a very lively holiday trade, and Santa Claus does not keep a very large account with us. It is largely a matter of custom, but it is a custom which I fear will not alter very soon. No. I have not gone to much trouble to make a holiday display, as shoppers seem inclined to pass us by during these days.

"True, I have gone to the trouble to brighten up the show case down at the door with some of the latest and showiest patterns of upper and lower sets, together with some fancy designs in crown and bridge work, but that is all done in much for holly and mistletoe and the like. And yet, when you come to think of it, what more useful present for Christmas than a nice new set of teeth of the latest design? The old, old saying, 'It is better to give than to receive' ought to appeal with peculiar force to would-be givers in this case. Here would be a gift both useful and ornamental of the highest degree, and unlike most Christmas gifts, would last for years, and be a constant reminder of the giver. But the average shopper don't seem to take hold of this idea; more's the pity."

A well-known maker and dealer in artificial limbs was closing up his shop early in the evening when approached regarding the holiday trade.

"This is our dull season, strange to say," said the little man ruefully, "and to save life I can't think of any thing in my stock that I can bring out and arrange on brightly tinted cloth amid bunches of holly and such stuff so that it will appeal to the eye of the Christmas shopper. There must be a whole lot of people in this town who are sadly in need of a leg or an arm, and whose lives would be brightened and cheered by an artificial limb of the latest improved pattern. What gift in this glorious time would be more appreciated by these unfortunate people? How many thousands of the maimed and crippled who now go about on the tiresome and annoying crutches would be grateful for one of our double acting, patent steel spring, seasoned cork limbs?

"But, no; the people with their hearts just bursting with love for their fellows never think of this, but go along buying jimcracks that are never heard of after Christmas. I can't understand it. But we have one business consolation—trolley cars always reap a rich harvest in the crowded Christmas streets."

In the undertakers' shops it was said that while no especial preparations were made for the holiday trade, business went on in the same old way.

And this was the saddest holiday story of all.

RESCUED MANY CHILDREN.

Work of the Brooklyn Society Aiming to Prevent Cruelty.

The Brooklyn Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, in its annual report, comments on the fact that the past year has been the most successful in its history. The number of children rescued was 1,266, as compared with 190, in the first year of the society's existence. In the first year, 1880, the cases attended to by the society numbered 367; last year, 2,747.

A new fire-proof building has been erected, at a cost of $51,000, and paid for, except $21,000 mortgage.

Henry R. Jones, the President, reports that no debt has been incurred during the twenty years of the society's existence for the running expenses.

Robert J. Wilkin, the Superintendent, reports that during the life of the society it has received and investigated over 29,000 cases, involving the care and protection of 80,016 children. Over 7,800 children, at its instance, have been removed from improper surroundings and placed in homes or institutions; 3,038 convictions for violations of the laws concerning children have been secured.

The society has an outdoor agency, and by a system of corresponding agents the smaller towns and villages of Long Island are kept in touch with the head office. In The Shelter, 5,476 children were cared for and 31,380 meals furnished in 1900.

The Brooklyn Training School and Home for Girls has been a successful feature.

John F. Anderson, Jr., the Treasurer, reports receipts and expenditures of $17,215.45.

Howard J. Rogers, Director of Education and Social Economy, reports that the International Class and Group Juries of the Paris Exhibition has awarded a gold medal to the exhibit of the society in Class 112, Group 16.

HEIRLOOMS CHANGE HANDS

Old Silver of Noble Families Finds Purchasers Here.

PLEASES AMERICANS' FANCY

True Works of Art Are Some of the Pieces Which Once Graced Ducal Tables.

The thing to do in collecting silver nowadays is not to dive into one's family archives and dig up an ancestor and secure his coat of arms for a mark, but to buy silver with the coat of arms already on it, and that of any distinguished family, it does not make much difference which. In other words, it is considered much more desirable to get a piece of old silver that has been brought across the water and which, within a century or two, has been used by some noble family and still bears the family crest than to have fine modern silver.

One of the family treasures, for instance, that the new Vanderbilt baby will inherit will be a beautiful coffee and tea service in silver, which belonged at one time to the Duchess of Montrose, and has upon it the family coat of arms, the storks and motto, "N'oubliez." It was one of the handsome gifts of the baby's mother at her wedding.

To America numbers of these heirlooms are coming every year, and there is more and more demand for them. There is no snobbishness in this. There is a real beauty in the old silver. It was made in the days when no effort was too great to put into a fine piece. There is a softness in the old silver, a connoisseur says, that can be felt as well as seen. Its owners are selling it because they need the money. Old silver pieces as well as old pictures are helping to strengthen the income of many large estates, and if the Government of Great Britain should place an embargo upon the selling of heirlooms by her subjects, as Italy is doing upon works of arts, it would embarrass the English noblemen quite as much as the action of Italy has the noble families of that country.

One can go into a shop in New York where goods of this kind are sold and study the history of many old and noble families through heirlooms which have been sold by them. To purchase, these things come high. They could be duplicated for one-third or even one-fourth the sum of loss, but the genuine old articles bring good prices because of their rarity. The supply on this side is constantly increasing, but the prices are also increasing, for with the increased market the sellers are becoming aware of the value set upon their goods, and ask proportionately high prices. Prices are much higher than they were thirty or forty years ago, and pieces which could then be bought for $50 will now cost $500.

To show how much value is set upon heirlooms, there is one particular article which may be mentioned, the old Irish potato rings. These have the appearance, as many people know, of napkin rings of mammoth size. They are as large as a big bowl, of heavy silver, solid and fine, and with open workmanship. They were used for potatoes, it is said, a napkin being folded and laid across the ring upon which the potatoes were placed. Nearly every old family in Ireland has or has had one. But if there is need of money there is a sale, a general notification sent out and, as a man who knows says, as much fuss is made as if a piece of Wall Street real estate was sold over here. But all this makes the potato rings valuable, and they are much sought. However, one can be found in New York now for $250, and it dates back to 1750.

There is the same interest in the old silver articles that there is in old furniture and old porcelains. They are characteristic of certain periods. Certain pieces have a certain style of beading in the ornamentation, some have the ball and claw foot that is to be seen in furniture, and were made at the same time. We get all these things in modern silver, but they mean nothing, for in this century we have the designs of all ages.

There is a queer motley that comes to us on this side of the water. An interesting old incense burner which is supposed to have belonged to James I. and which certainly dates back to 1623, as the silversmith's marks tell, is a great treasure and will cost the purchaser $750. There is a fine old comfit with marvelous designs in relief, dating back, the hall marks say, to 1633. This is a marvel of the silversmith's art, a veritable museum piece, and will cost the buyer $1,500. Old brushes are shown in a splendid state of preservation. They are round like paint brushes and with handles so heavy that it must have been a labor to handle them. These handles are all in solid silver. A peculiar thing about them in comparison with the toilet articles of the present day is that they have black bristles. They were too heavy or too precious to use, evidently, for though they are said to have belonged to the Marquis of Exeter in 1690 and came from Burleigh House, they show no signs of wear.

Sheffield plate into which as fine work was put as in the silver is not much less expensive. There are some beautiful specimens. A set of candelabras is in three pieces and has a design of St. George and the dragon upon the base of each piece. Every figure is a little masterpiece. Tea and coffee services, wine coolers and trays, everything that comes in silver comes in the Sheffield plate, but it has not the same interest that is attached to the genuine old sil

EXCERPTS IN PROSE AND VERSE FROM CURRENT LITERATURE.

A Meadow.

There is a meadow in the West,
Green, open to the sun and air;
A thrill of joy, a throbbing breast,
I could not cross it but in prayer.

It glittered like a fleece of gold,
And every blade of grass was bright;
Each drooping head was annealed,
And every blossom crowned with light.

And leaning from their leafy nook
Monadnocks, in the crimson glow,
Would gaze upon the gliding brook
And watch the star of love below.

I drank of that love-haunted stream
Whose water hath no bitter lees,
And walked with God as in a dream
Beneath the dark, melodious trees.

And, thronging through the twilight air,
The dead, the living, e'en as one,
Would gather round me wandering there
Beside the rivulet alone.

They sung of legends dim and old
Ere this mysterious world began,
Of earthquake, storm, and fire they told,
And of the still small voice in man.

They sang the songs of love; they sang
Of broken hearts and wild farewells;
And every note of anguish rang
Like the deep sob of distant bells.

Then floated a triumphant strain
From highest heaven—now soft, now loud—
Sweeter than skylarks after rain
That sing above an April cloud.

And soaring toward the distant gleam,
And singing as they passed from sight;
The rack and rainbow of my dream
Dissolved and faded into light:

Faded and fainter one by one
Their voices reached me from afar;
Till, over the green meadow shone
Only the shepherd's evening star.

Cruikshank's Banknote.

From Good Words.

One day about the year 1818 George Cruikshank was passing Newgate on his way to the Exchange, when, seeing a crowd collected, he went forward to learn what was the matter, and saw that it was the execution of several men and women. He was horrified at the spectacle, and on inquiring, learned that the woman was being hanged for passing counterfeit one-pound notes. He learned also that this punishment was quite a common thing, even though the poor wretches often sinned in ignorance, being the dupes of men who sent them to buy some trifle and return the change to them. Wring with pity and with shame, Cruikshank went home and immediately, under the inspiration of his feeling, sketched a grotesque caricature of a banknote. He calls it a bank restriction note—not to be imitated. He represents on it a place of execution, with the spaces about filled in with halters and manacles, a figure of Britannia devouring her children, and transport ships bearing the lucky or unlucky ones who had escaped death to Van Diemen's land or Australia, while in place of the well-known signature of Abraham Newland is that of "J. Ketch."

He had just finished this, when his publisher Hone entered, and seeing it, begged to have it for publication. So Cruikshank etched it and gave it to Hone, who exhibited it for sale in his window with startling effect. Crowds quickly began to gather, and purchased so eagerly that the issue was soon exhausted.

Cruikshank was kept hard at work making more etchings, the crowds grew so great that the street was blocked, and the Mayor had to send soldiers to clear it. Hone realized over £700 in a few days.

Boer Lines.

From The Fortnightly Review.

The Boers nearly all fought in front line without reserves; each party or commando defended the hills or trenches it chanced to occupy, and would bring a heavy gun and rifle fire to bear upon any position captured; it was frequently more discussed whether a position could be maintained when won than whether it could be taken. A very severe cross fire was always brought to bear from all sides upon the position gained by our troops, and the situation was often a difficult one until the ground won could be intrenched or artillery brought up to answer the hostile gun fire. For this reason we naturally drifted into the habit of attacking late in the afternoon, so that the position could be secured during the night. This system had, however, the disadvantage of enabling the Boers to retreat unmolested under cover of darkness when they had a mind to go back.

No enemy could be more dangerous to attack in front than a large body of Boers well intrenched and with their horses hard by under cover. Excellent shots, well armed, always abundantly supplied with ammunition, they would open fire at 2,000 yards' range, not only from trenches, but from every point of vantage or scrap of cover that could shelter a single man. Many of the best shots among the Boers would go out by the flanks, two rifles and a loader, and in their little rifle pits or sconces one would often find several hundred empty cartridge cases, their harassing fire being a constant annoyance and causing many losses. Good men though the Boers are, they are wanting in the habits of discipline and obedience required for the conduct of an attack; many hang back when it is a question of crossing a fire-swept zone, and after the bravest have been killed, the others melt away and generally refuse to persevere.

There is no doubt that the pony proved as valuable an arm to the Boer as his Mauser, and that the mobility which is the essential characteristic of Boer tactics has enabled him to continue a struggle which would otherwise have long ago come to an end. The use made by the Boers of their mounted men for reinforcing threatened points may be profitably laid to heart, and academicians might do worse than inquire what would have happened at St. Privat had the French Imperial Guard consisted of mounted riflemen, and what use similar troops might not have been to Werder on the Lisaine.

Electrical Power for England.

From The Spectator.

The neighborhood of a great waterfall has become something more than a bait to tourists; it is the means of superseding steam and gas alike. It may be objected that waterfalls on such a scale as these are not to be found in England. Henry Kingsley, indeed, has described a Thames weir in terms which would hardly be exaggerated if applied to the falls of the Rhine. But when it comes to generating electric power we fear that the inferiority of the native product will be demonstrated. Prof. Thompson, however, is not daunted by so simple an obstacle as this. He proposes to make coal minister to its own supersession. England, he says, has her natural source of power in her coalfields. At the mouth of every pit he would set up machinery for generating electricity, to be driven either by steam or gas. Coal will no longer be raised for all the thousand purposes to which it is now adapted; it will be raised to create the power which is to take its place. From these generating centres electric currents would be distributed over whole counties, and by these currents all the mills and factories in the district would be kept at work, and all the trains run. The countless chimneys which now poison the atmosphere round every large town would then be harmless. Here and there, as we gazed from some hill in the neighborhood, we might see a single column of smoke rising into the air, but we should know that this was the trifling price paid for the absence of all smoke besides. Our supply of coal would last practically forever, because, except possibly for exportation to communities backward enough still to use steam, the only effective demand on it would be for the generation of electricity.

Buddhism in China.

Max Mueller in The Nineteenth Century.

The circumstances under which the religion of Buddha was introduced from India to China are matter of history; and unless we mean to doubt everything in Eastern history for which we have not the evidence of actual eye witnesses, the introduction into China of Buddhist teachers by the Emperor Mingti in the year 65 A. D. has a perfect right to claim its place as a historial event. It may be quite true that the fame of Buddhism had reached China at a much earlier time. A Buddhist missionary is mentioned in the Chinese annals as early as 217 B. C., and about the year 120 B. C. a Chinese General, after defeating some barbarous tribes in the north of the Desert of Gobi, is reported to have brought back among his trophies a golden statue of Buddha. But it was not till the year 65 A. D. that the Emperor Mingti gave practical effect to his devotion to Buddha and his doctrines by recognizing his religion as one of the State religions of his large empire. It would seem most extraordinary that the ruler of a large empire in which there existed already two State religions should, without being dissatisfied with his own religion, have suddenly asked the teachers of a foreign religion to settle in his country, and there, under the protection of the Government, to teach their own religion, the doctrine of Buddha. The Chinese idea of religion was evidently very different from their own. Religion was to them giving good advice, improving the manners of the people; and they seem to have thought that for such a purpose they could never have enough teachers and preachers. Legend may no doubt have embellished the events that actually took place. No wonder that visions seen by the Emperor in a dream were introduced; but even such visions would not help us to explain, what certainly seems a most extraordinary though real event in the history of the world, the introduction of the Buddhist religion into China and the rest of Central Asia.

Oxford Statutes.

From The National Review.

In appearance the statutes hold good in their entirety; in reality many of them are never enforced, and probably could not be enforced in this year of grace 1900. This mass of custom, though perhaps it lies a little out of the track of the present subject, must be briefly attended to if we wish to get a clear idea of the enormous influence of unwritten law at Oxford.

According to the statutes the student must wear a "garb of "subfusc" hue. If any one introduces a new fashion in dress the Vice Chancellor and heads of college are to sit in judgment upon it. Cap and gown must always be worn in public. Fines or "lines" are to be the punishment of those who refuse to comply with the Vice Chancellor's orders.

The undergraduate must be reverent toward his seniors—even the Bachelors have a claim on his respect; he must not wander or linger in the town; he must not enter the houses of the townspeople without a reasonable excuse; he must not attend the Town Council meetings, the Sessions, or the Assizes. Taverns, wineshops, and similar places of resort are forbidden joys, while shops where "herba nicotiana (sive tobacco) ordinaire venditur" are anathema maranatha, and may be visited only "ex causâ necessariâ et urgenti per Vice Chancelarium aut proctores approbandâ." The scholars must abstain from games which cause danger to life, hunting, archery, and hawking are forbidden. Undergraduates must not drive in carriages unless they are sickly, and may not keep a horse or servant unless they have written permission to do so.

Almost all these regulations have been modified in a striking manner by unwritten law; the garment of "subfusc" hue is no longer compulsory.

The Decline of Intellect..

Andrew Lang in The Critic.

The human intellect, like "the service," has long been "going to the dogs." Old-fashioned people tell us that "nobody reads anything but newspapers and novels." Many critics in the serial reviews apologize for noticing a work that is not avowedly a work of fiction. Most reviewers have long dropped the hypocrisy of pretending to own any acquaintance with the subjects of historical, antiquarian, anthropological, mythological, and other erudite books. They frankly avow their ignorance, unashamed. Poetry is still "a drug in the market" except where some new bard is welcomed as an exquisite blend of Shakespeare and Racine. "Literary Gossip" is concerned only with the wealth attained by a few manufacturers of fustian. Lately I saw a grown man reading Sully's "Memoirs," in French, too, and, like the ancient mariner, "I blessed him unawares," so unusual was the spectacle. The classics of all languages, as a lady lately declared in print, have become "glorified school books."

Every one admits that this is the condition of our intellectual affairs; that is, as far as literature is concerned. If evidence is desired, we might call into court the author of "How to Write for the Magazines." The style most in vogue," remarks this literary expert, "is what is known as the 'popular' style," a rather "self-evident remark," as the dustman said when the cook told him that he was no gentleman. He who would embrace the popular style "must not indulge in fine work which is above the head of the person who spends his penny on Answers or Pearson's." That person, that capitalist who lays out his penny, may be a dustman or a Duke. But, intellectually, it must be difficult for a writer not to soar above his head. We are even warned "not to write about things that the sixpenny reader of The Strand or The Lady's Realm cannot understand, owing to limited education or capacity."

Twelfth Night Song.

Heaped be the fagots high,
And the half-burned bough
From last year's revelry
Be litten now!
Brimmed be the posset bowl
For every dusty soul:
And while the maskers rule,
Cry "Noël!" cry "Noël!" down all the halls of Yule!

O eager viols, thrill!
Pipe, hautboys, clear and sweet!
Work your impetuous will,
Ye restless feet!
For every lip—a glass!
For every lad—a lass!
And, ere the ardors cool,
Cry "Noël!" cry "Noël!" down all the halls of Yule!

Interest Laws of China.

From The Forum.

The interest laws of China, with which the operations of banking are intimately connected, date from the year 1250 of our era. The enormous rate of interest is curiously defended by several writers. It results, they say, in securing economy, in order that the borrower may repay the loan, in producing greater industry, in deterring persons from borrowing, in reducing the number of renters of land, thus increasing the number of land owners, and in inducing circumspection with regard to new enterprises. It is further stated, by men of business, that this 30 per cent. is only a maximum founded on the probability that the oscillations in the price of silver will never exceed that sum. It must be understood also that the ordinary rate of interest rarely exceeds 20 or 22 per cent., and that money may be had as low as 12 per cent., though the rate sometimes exceeds even 30 per cent.

Sir Redvers Buller.

Sir Wemyss Reid in The Nineteenth Century.

Sir Redvers Buller, more than any other commander, has been the victim of circumstances in this campaign. His strategy has been condemned unsparingly by the omniscient Moltkes of the newspaper offices, and the man in the street has come to regard his name as a synonym for disaster. Did not one of them inquire the other day, in an evening newspaper, if he had achieved a single victory during the war? It was only when the dignified courage and frankness which Buller showed under the painful humiliation of the muzzling of the Spion Kop dispatches was revealed to the world that the public began to feel that, after all, Gen. Buller was every inch a soldier and a hero. His recent speech does not seem to be relished by some of his newspaper critics, but it is a clear vindication not only of his own strategy, but of the Government, which was accused of having compelled him to alter his plans in order to suit the exigencies of party politics. It is safe to predict that no man in the returning army will meet with a warmer welcome than the soldier to whom the relief of Ladysmith was due.

Attractions of Army Life.

From Leslie's Weekly.

The chances are that when "rooky" enlisted he intended nothing more than to serve out his three years' time. In a good many cases this is all he does serve. Yet it is a notable fact that the recruit who becomes the best soldier almost invariably elects to remain with the army for life. In addition to the inducements of good pay and ample provision for life, the enlisted man in our American army has ahead of him a great prize for which to strive. By sticking closely to duty it is fairly easy for him to become a Corporal, and after that a Sergeant. A man holding the grade of either of these non-commissioned officers may, if he convinces his officers that his service is "meritorious," apply for permission to be examined for a commission.

He must pass a stiff mental examination, but a fairly well educated young man can, with the time he finds for study in the army, gradually fit himself for such a test. He must serve in the army two years before he can try for a commission. Then, if he is ordered up for examination and passes, he can become a Second Lieutenant. The meritorious non-commissioned officer has the first chance after all of the current year's graduates from West Point have been given commissions. At present a large number of young men are being appointed annually from the ranks to commissions, and some of the best officers in our army have so risen. And once the enlisted man progresses to a Lieutenancy the whole scale of promotion is open to him. He can rise, if fortune favors him, to the command of the army.

All in all, there are few more satisfactory careers in the country than that which opens up before Jones when he signs his name to the rolls. He is likely to do much better than in civil life. He has always a strong Government at his back, and one that looks well after him. To be sure the discipline is strict, but the man who cannot submit to discipline is worth very little in any walk of life. A large percentage of the higher ranking officers in our army can look back to the days when they wore the private's uniform. The danger of being killed in army service? Statistics show that the chance is not a very great one, and of course the man who values his life above all else would be worse than useless in the army. He is not wanted, and will be sorry that he ever entered the service.

The Dog of the Press.

From The Cornhill.

It is interesting to know that there is one dog who makes his living by driving a printing press. It is only a development of the old turnspit business, but the dog prints a whole edition of 1,000 papers in one hour. The dog is named Gypsy, and is the property of Messrs. Carroll & Bowen, proprietors of The Plymouth (Wisconsin) Review. He is a two-year-old English mastiff, weighs 100 pounds, and does his work by running round in a wooden wheel eight feet in diameter. To the wheel is attached a belt connecting with the presses in the next room, and when the dog has worked off his copy with one press he sets to work on another.

Gifts.

The imperial child to whom the wise men brought
Their gifts, and worshipped in His lowly nest,
Gave no gift back. It was Himself they sought,
And, finding Him, were sated in their quest.
Their gifts, not expectation, but their joy expressed.
Now was the world's long yearning satisfied!
Now was the prize long waited for possessed!
Their gifts meant love, unmarred by lust or pride!
Be it so with ours; our aim, not debts to pay,
Nor any recompense save love to win.
Not any grosser feeling to convey
Than brought the wise men's gifts to Bethlehem's inn.
Those rate we best that no return afford
Save the pure sense of having found our Lord.
—E. S. MARTIN in Harper's Weekly.

Workers in Lace.

From Harper's Bazar.

Few people know that most of the imported laces are made by peasants and the little children of charitable institutions. Lace schools have been founded on the outskirts of the larger cities. Here each child is trained to do one particular stitch, either on parchment or a black dotted paper, where the thread is carried from point to point, the pattern having been carefully traced previously, and when the entire pattern is covered this parchment can be torn away. These laces, when finished, are placed on the market, fabulous prices being paid for them. It has been suggested that with the talent in our own American homes such institutions would be a great success. A school of designing has been talked of where the first rudiments are taught, each person to learn a certain stitch, passing from hand to hand, turning out a perfect piece of work. Many American women already do beautiful lacework, even going from door to door with gems of handiwork, while many times our misguided American "grandes dames" are going about with a bit of cotton lace on their gowns, sure that it is hand made and imported, because So-and-So said it came from abroad.

Men, Women, Dress.

From The Nineteenth Century.

The art of dressing well is one which all women, if they care for the subject at all, wish to possess. Only a few have it naturally, some fail lamentably, and most have to learn it by experience.

She who possesses the true art is the woman who looks her best however plain, at whatever age, and in whatever occupation she may be engaged, but the ideal is not attained unless it be done without wasting time, thought, and money.

During the last few years dress seems to have become an engrossing subject of interest to many people, far more than it used to be, judging by the increase of fashion papers and the numberless descriptions, illustrations, notices, and suggestions that appear even in the most unexpected quarters.

Surely it is a sign that dress is becoming a sort of mania with some people. Every year now we see more and more descriptions such as this: "Mrs. Fascination smiled sweetly, and, in spite of the cold east wind, wore her favorite blue, while Lady Sprightly was seen walking with her usual grace, gowned in pink and wearing a bewitching toque."

Most of this is presumably written by women, and therefore it is to be wondered that they do not add how "Lord Wearwell was seen looking younger than ever in gray tweed, and Mr. Togood, obliging as usual, beamed over a pale green necktie"—why not? It might be just as interesting. But all this kind of nonsense would not be written if there were not eager readers whose minds are dwelling far too much on dress.

This is true of men as well as of women. A husband or brother is apt to make dress appear of vital importance by objecting to trifles in his wife's or sister's attire. He is heard to remonstrate, "Surely you are not going to walk in the park with me with that parasol? It is only fit for the seaside." Whereas perhaps it was a real sunshade very suitable for the poor lady's head and eyes, far more so than the absurd transparent fashionable thing she is forced to take instead to please him.

New York Is Provincial.

A. Maurice Low in The Atlantic.

Perhaps there is no city quite so provincial as New York, due to the fact that the average New Yorker, whether in society or business, has got into the habit of patronizing the inhabitants of any other city. The New York business man complacently feels that the rest of the country is financed by New York and must do as New York tells it; the society man or woman of New York believes that outside of New York, with few exceptions, there is no society worthy of the name, and what society does exist is merely a bad imitation of its New York prototype.

A Fever District—South Africa.

From The Contemporary Review.

The Beira Railway runs through such a fever district, and accidents are so comman an occurrence that the company employs a doctor entirely to look after its employes. He receives, I believe, some £800 a year and allowances—at least, so I am assured. His life is a lonely and hard-worked one. He is continually on the move. One man is only able to look after about 200 miles of the railway. Even along that small area seldom a day passes but he has some one to mend up or physic. Sometimes he has to travel over 100 miles on a nigger-propelled trolley in order to look up one sick case. Yet, at the same time, many die without attention. The fever on the Beira Railway is about the worst kind of fever to be met with anywhere. It never fails to attack the white man sooner or later. It is extremely stealthy in its onslaught, and nothing can be done to ward it off entirely. Windows shut at sunset, so as to prevent the dank, deadly mist which nightly arises from the swamps, can do something. Attention to hygiene, and avoiding the long grass in Springtime and after sunset can do more. Abstention from alcoholic beverages can do most of all—at least, attention to the latter detail very often prevents fatal effects.

When any of the employes of the railway are taken sick, they are either attended by the doctor at his own place or taken down to the hospital at Beira on trucks and on specially chartered steamers. The hospital is a very good one. Any one who is forced to take refuge there bears testimony to the skill and comforts therein procurable. One needs to be constantly vomiting for six days without cessation, at a temperature of 105 or even more, without any perspiration all that time, to realize what it means to have clean linen under one's aching head, eau de cologne on one's forehead, and all the other comforts of civilization. No one who has not lived up at Cheruba, or in the even more muggily hot Fontesvilla, can know what it is to wake up with the sound of sea waves lapping on a strand not far from where the patient's head lies. The cool swish, swish of the water, quinine to be had for the asking, and a blessed deliverance from the ever-tormenting mosquito, are almost suggestive of heaven to a fever-stricken man.

The British Empire.

W. S. Lilly in The Fortnightly Review.

A philosophical writer has insisted strongly, in a well-known work, upon the difference between real and national apprehension. Now I wonder how many people really apprehend the vastness of the British Empire. Let me endeavor to bring it home to my readers by a few plain statements of facts. These islands are but a seventieth part of the territory under the sway of her Most Gracious Majesty—a territory including one-fifth of the habitable globe. The great empires of antiquity sink into insignificance beside it. Rome, with all her ecumenical pretensions, ruled over only one-fourth of that space; the great Darius over only one-fifth. And if we turn to the modern world we find that the dominions of the Queen are one-eighth larger than all the Russias, four times as large as the lands led by the German Kaiser, and sixteen times as large as France. As regards population, antiquity supplies us with no data for comparison; it has left no trustworthy statistics. But while the inhabitants of Russia number 128,931,827, of France 61,479,901, and of Germany 80,372,975, the Queen's subjects, spread over nine millions of square miles, amount to 387,013,954.

Obsolete Tradition.

From The New Lippincott.

"And what," asked the caller in his most ingratiating tones; "what did Santa Claus put in your stocking, my little girl?"

For a moment she looked at him through her diminutive spectacles, then, in a voice of mingled pity and indignation, she said: "We no longer put credence in obsolete tradition—nor was it delicate of you to mention that article of feminine apparel." Gathering up her copy of Ibsen, she hurriedly left the room.

London Sewers.

From Good Words.

There are sewers of all shapes and sizes. Some are so large that you could ride down them on horseback, others so small that you have to stoop to go through them. Some are egg-shaped, some barrel-shaped, others almost square. There are special varieties also. There are blood sewers and boiling sewers, and others under the special patronage of manufacturing chemists, candlemakers, and soap boilers. The blood sewers of the meat markets are the special habitat of the sewer rat, not often met with elsewhere underground. The reputed size and ferocity of these creatures must be liberally discounted. In the course of several tours underground the writer saw only one, and it scuttled away as fast as its legs could carry it. Finally, there are disused sewers, fallen into decay, known among the workmen as "dead sewers." There is plenty of room for variety, for if the sewers of London were placed end to end they would reach from the metropolis to Constantinople, with something to spare.

Lady Beaconsfield.

From "The Story of My Life," Augustus J. C. Hare.

Mrs. Duncan Stewart described Lady Beaconsfield as originally a factory girl. Mr. Lewis first saw her going to her factory beautiful and with bare feet. He educated her and married her, died, and left her very rich, and then she married Disraeli. When asked why she married her second husband she would say, as if it was a feather in her cap, "My dear, he made love to me while my first husband was alive, and therefore I knew that he really loved me." It was at Greenmeadow, a house four miles from Llandaff, that Disraeli served his apprenticeship as secretary to Mr. Lewis, living in the house with him and Mrs. Lewis, in the position of a dependent. When the house overflowed with visitors from London, as was often the case, he was sent out to sleep at the Hollybush, a little public house in the village. Both Greenmeadow and the Hollybush exist still.

The Hedge Schoolmaster.

(Of the Penal Days.)

When the night from Erin's hills shall lift,
'twere shame if we forget
One band of unsung heroes whom Freedom owes a debt
When we brim high cups to brave ones, then their memory let us pledge
Who gathered their ragged classes behind a friendly hedge.

By stealth they met their pupils, far in glen's deep-hidden nook,
And taught them many a lesson was never in English book;
There was more than wordy logic shown to use in wise debate,
Nor was amo yet the only verb they gave to conjugate.

When hunted on the heathery hill and through the shadowy wood,
They climbed the cliff, they dared the quarsh, they stemmed the tumbling flood;
Their blanket was the clammy mist, their bed the wind-swept bent,
And in fitful sleep they dreamt the bay of bloodhounds on their scent.

Their lore was not the brightest, nor their store, maythap, the best,
But they fostered love undying in each young Irish breast;
And through the dread, dread night, and long, that steeped our Island then,
The lamps of hope and fires of faith were fed by these brave men.

The grass waves green above them; soft sleep is theirs for aye;
The hunt is over, and the cold; the hunger passed away.
O hold them high and holy! and their memory proudly pledge,
Who gathered their ragged classes behind a friendly hedge.
—SEUMAS MACMANUS in Donahoe's.

How to Carry a Gun.

From Forest and Stream.

There are only two directions in which a muzzle of a gun can safely be pointed; these are up or down. A shot fired in the air can scarcely injure any one or anything, and one discharged into the ground is equally harmless. Therefore, in all the different positions which the gun assumes, see that it is pointed either up or down. Sometimes a man will be seen who carries his gun reversed, holding it by the muzzle while the fore end rests on the shoulder and the stock projects behind. Happily, this practice is not common, for it is extremely dangerous, and many men have been killed by carrying their guns in this way. If a man stumbles or steps in a hole, or catches his foot on a root and falls, his gun may very likely be thrown forward with the muzzle directly toward his body, and may easily enough be discharged.

Sometimes one may see a boy or even a man who will carry the gun across the back of the neck, with one arm over the stock and the other over the barrels, sometimes with the hand resting on the muzzle. This is certain to give a very uncomfortable feeling to any one who happens to be walking by the side of the person carrying his gun in this fashion and opposite the muzzle end. While the danger of a discharge is perhaps not great, it is unpleasant to be walking along with a gun pointed at your neck or head.

Opera Glass Lenses.

From Chambers's Journal.

A few years ago the lenses of nearly every opera glass sold in England were manufactured abroad. Recently, however, some London firms have devoted themselves to this class of work, but the prices are far in excess of those of the best French and German make, and these, indeed, leave very little to be desired.

There are one or two departments only in optics where we hold our own with the foreigner. In the construction of microscopes, photographic lenses, and astronomical telescopes our own manufacturing opticians are not to be excelled and scarcely equaled. In all these instruments superlative care and nicety of adjustment, together with perfection of finish, are a sine qua non, and here our own manufacturers hold the palm.

It is a remarkable fact that although the value of raw optical glass ground into photographic, telescope, and microscope lenses runs into many thousands of pounds per annum, its manufacture in this country has always remained in the hands of a firm of lighthouse lens manufacturers in Birmingham, who, it is well known, have made a gigantic fortune out of this branch of their business alone.

The Little Old Spinet.

Do you see the little Spinet, standing in the corner there?
Great-grandmother loved to play it, when she was a maiden fair,
Sunbeams thro' the window twinkle, flick'ring on its yellowed keys,
And we almost hear the tinkle of the old-time melodies.

Great-grandmother gowned in silk, with high-heeled slippers—dainty lace,
Sat there—while a smile of pleasure lighted up her fair young face,
From without the rose-scent lingers—drifting on the Summer breeze—
While she plays with fairy fingers all the old-time melodies.

And the little Spinet waits her patiently these long, long years—
Till its mellow voice is broken, harsh, and has the sound of tears—
Yet, it seems the sunbeams straying, flick'ring on its yellowed keys,
And her fairy fingers playing all the old-time melodies!
—MARY SMALL WAGNER in The Optimist.

The Roman Saturnalia.

From The Fortnightly Review.

Feasting and revelry and all the mad pursuit of pleasure are the features that seem to have especially marked this carnival of antiquity, as it went on for seven days in the streets and public squares and houses of ancient Rome, from the 17th to the 23d of December. But no feature of the festival is more remarkable, nothing in it seems to have struck the ancients themselves more than the license granted to slaves at this time. The distinction between the free and the servile classes was temporarily abolished. The slave might rail at his master, intoxicate himself like his betters, sit down at table with them, and not even a word of reproof would be administered to him for conduct which at any other season might be punished with stripes, imprisonment, or death. Nay, more, masters actually changed places with their slaves and waited on them at table; and not till the serf had done eating and drinking was the board cleared and dinner set for his master. So far was this inversion of ranks carried, that each household became for a time a mimic republic, in which the high offices of state were discharged by the slaves, who gave their orders and laid down the law as if they were indeed invested with all the dignity of the Consulship, the praetorship, and the bench. Like the pale reflection of power thus accorded to bondsmen at the Saturnalia was the mock kingship for which freemen cast lots at the same season, the person on whom the lot fell enjoyed the title of King, and issued commands of a playful and ludicrous nature to his temporary subjects. One of them he might order to mix the wine, another to drink, another to sing, another to dance, another to speak in his own dispraise, another to carry a flute-girl on his back round the house.

The Shrinkage of England.

From Good Words.

With regard to the east coast a sorry story has to be told, the County of Yorkshire, for instance, from Bridlington to Spurn Head has been disappearing, it is calculated, at an average rate of six feet a year. It is said that careful observation of a certain twelve-mile stretch shows that the cliffs forty feet high have been eaten away by the waves for 132 feet in forty years. It is, however, at Spurn Head that the greatest ravages have taken place.

In Edward I.'s time the village of Ravenspur, a seaport near Spurn Head, sent more than one member to Parliament; in 1399 and 1471 Henry IV. and Edward IV., respectively, landed there, but very soon after the latter's visit the entire town was swept away by the sea. To-day the village of Kilnsea stands upon the Head; the old site of the village—once a fair place on a hill, with a fine old church, destroyed by the waves in 1826—is now some hundreds of yards below high water mark, and when New Kilnsea joins it, the sea and the Humber will not take long to destroy the entire promontory and make things very unpleasant at Grimsby. The Blue Bell Inn, half way between the sea and the river, bears a stone upon which is inscribed, "Built in the year 1847, 534 yards from the sea." When measured early last Spring the distance was 334 yards.

Ober Ammergau—Bad Manners.

From The Nineteenth Century.

Looking round one Sunday in July upon the huge audience, chiefly composed of Germans and Americans of the lower middle class as they giggled and whispered or stared about them obviously indifferent and genuinely bored, one felt it was a matter for wonder why they were there at all. In spite of the admirable arrangements for the orderly conduct of the play and the comfort of the visitors, the audience were by no means settled in their seats when the gun fired and the chorus walked on to the stage, and an effort was made to obtain silence. Those who had entered the building from the left when their seats were on the right, and vice versa, were still walking about, refusing to believe they could not get to their seats without going out again and re-entering the theatre by the proper door. Others came in late, and this was an unpardonable offense, causing in each case a whole row to rise and block out the view of the tableaus, which were sufficiently fleeting without any such interruption. These disturbances met with the expressions of annoyance which they undoubtedly merited, but angry hisses and exclamations were hardly the evidences of an appropriate spirit in which to watch the calm endurance of suffering which was presently to call forth a dumb and silent sympathy from all earnest witnesses. But from beginning to end a devotional spirit, or even a spirit of reverence, never breathed its softening influence over that crowded house, and when the doors were thrown open in the middle and at the close of the play it constantly happened that there had been was gone immediately, and, like a kettle of boiling water when the lid is removed, the pent-up steam escaped, and laughing, pushing, and talking, the crowd elbowed its way out.

On this particular Sunday referred to the weather was extremely wet and cold, and the shivering audience sat wrapped in rugs and cloaks and still were not warm. It was doubtless this fact which caused them so far to forget what was seemly and reverent as to stamp with their feet between the scenes in spite of individual efforts to silence them; only the scenes of the Last Supper and the Crucifixion were exempted from this display of irreverence.

The Russian "Old Believers."

From The Gentleman's Magazine.

Two hundred and fifty years ago Nikon, a friar of Solovetsk, an island monastery in the White Sea, having quarreled alike with equal and superior, was set adrift in an open boat; he reached the mainland at Kl, a small cape in Onego Bay, wandered southward to Olonets, where he got together a band of followers, proceeded to Moscow, obtained the notice of the throne, got preferment, was soon made Patriarch. He ruled with an iron hand, made many enemies, and when at last he obtained from Mount Santo, in Roumelia, authentic Greek Church service books, and, having had them translated into Slavonic, forced their use upon the Church, with the aid of the Czar Alexis, in the place of those previously in use, the revolt began in earnest. In addition to the altered service book, Nikon introduced a cross with but two beams, a new stamp for the holy wafer, a different way of holding the fingers in pronouncing the blessing, and a new way of spelling the name Jesus, to which the Church was unaccustomed. In each of these changes Nikon and his party really wished to go back to the older and purer forms of Greek ritual, but many resisted the alterations, believing them to be innovations.

Such was the beginning of Raskol; the end is not yet. Those who could not accept these reforms, or return to older forms, took up the name of "Staro-obriadtsi," or Old Believers, holding that theirs was indeed the true old faith of their fathers. For them began, in very truth, a hard time; a time which has left its mark most clearly upon their descendants to-day. Excommunicated and persecuted under Alexis and Peter I., they were driven in thousands from their village homes to seek a refuge where they could, in forest, mountain, or island; a party reaching, in the year 1767, even to Kolgueff Island, where, as might be expected, they perished during the following year from scurvy.

Renumeration for Company Directors.

Sir James Blyth in The Nineteenth Century.

Capital is the great, if not the sole, end kept in view, to build up which the profits are now mainly devoted, while the management is often intrusted to officials with fixed income, whose remuneration forms but a trifling proportion of the profits of the concern, yet who take the place of the brains which were the all in all during its earlier years of expansion or development.

In many of our large commercial undertakings converted into public companies there are almost any number of literary or scientific or legal men, but too few real men of business who will devote that constancy of attention and labor, that persistent plodding, which are so difficult to obtain from any but the real men of business. Others in general only look for a preferential interest on their investment, but are incapable of those large and brilliant ideas which, combined with persistent grappling with details, are, after all, the essence of successful organization in the field, factory, or warehouse.

I have always felt that, instead of a fixed honorarium to Directors and managers, it would be wiser to make their remuneration proportionate to dividend—say, for example, that £5,000 should be put aside for the directorate, providing the dividend on ordinary shares was 5 per cent., £6,000 if 6 per cent., and so on by a sliding-scale process. Had such a system been general during the last decade, it could not have had other than a beneficial influence on the dividends of our great railway and other public companies.

Crecy.

From Chambers's Journal.

The old church and an old market cross in the square near it are both worth inspection. The red bricks of the church walls were as mellow and bright with lichen as the houses of the town; and the chestnut trees by its porch yield a shade which the Crécy gossips no doubt relish in the dog-days. Inside, it has not very much to engross; one expects such great things from French churches that its deficiencies seem more considerable than they are. But on this bright September morning the interior was made lustrous by the presence of a number of nuns in spotless white, solemnly receiving the sacrament. A somewhat profane common person in a clean blue smock took snuff as he contemplated the scene, and remarked to me, "That makes a pretty picture, ma foi!" It was even more than that.

Of the battlefield one sees without difficulty everything that remains to be seen. The old mill by which our Edward III. staid with his reserves while the Black Prince won the day and his spurs has been removed only within the last twelve years. It is a pity it had to go; but one may sympathize also with the French proprietor of it: he must have got rather weary at seeing exultant Britons standing at its base and looking at the wheat fields and acres of beetroot below with pride in their hearts. But the site, of course, is not so readily removable; and any one may from this capital vantage ground understand with what precision the English King could follow the details of the combat which ended in the wreck of the hopes of his brother of France.

Asparagus with Oil.

From The Cornhill.

Fontenelle, who was passionately fond of asparagus with oil, invited to dinner an Abbe friend, who preferred it with butter. Mindful of hospitable obligations, M. Fontenelle had given orders that half the dish should be served one way, half the other. Just before the course came on the Abbé fell down in a fit. Without taking the slightest notice of him Fontenelle rushed straight to the kitchen crying: "All with oil! All with oil!"

"PEACE ON EARTH, GOOD-WILL TOWARDS MEN."

Quite apart from the supernatural sanctions of Christianity is what may be called the Christmas feeling. Of all the solemn and affecting incidents of the Nativity, none is more affecting than the occasion which it made for the proclamation of "Peace on earth, good-will towards men."

Of course, this proclamation was not made then for the first time. And in later times there have not been wanting those who declared that it was made with comparative ineffectuality because it was accompanied by a statement of those supernatural sanctions for it which they rejected. But all such philosophers might be safely and almost satirically challenged to show where otherwise and elsewhere so much has been done to put the proclamation into effect as has been done under the sanctions of Christianity. It is, in truth, a universal human instinct to which the scene of the Nativity appeals. Even those who reject its sanctions accept its lesson. They also have been brought up under the stress of that exhortation to benefaction, the Christian sanctions of which they condemn. What has been done for humanity under any other sanction, or under none beyond that of an unformulated and unregulated human instinct, is very trivial, compared with that which has been a direct consequence of Christian teachings, and in the light of which STEPHEN GIRARD is as much a Christian philanthropist as PETER COOPER.

And, from a purely secular and social point of view, what a great thing it is for the community that there should be one season set apart in which all sorts and conditions of men, and much more of women, should be constrained to practice this social virtue. All the stores have been crowded, during this last week, as they have not been for a year before, and will not be for a year again, with eager shoppers, animated by an object which is by no means so much the object of the shopping throngs of other seasons. All these people are buying "altruistically." They are giving of their substance, in so many cases hardly earned and hardly spared, for the sake or in the hope of giving pleasure to others. In many cases, perhaps in most, the benefactions are directed toward those other selves of which consists the family of a man or a woman; but in very many cases also they proceed from that larger and less direct human benevolence which denotes merely "good-will towards men." It is worth thinking of, how intensely "practical" that Christianity is upon which the shopkeepers of not only New York, but of all the nominally Christian world rely for their best trade of all the year.

Whoever is disposed to grumble at the waste of time and the loss of business involved in the relapse after the holiday trade would do well to think of this. And we may all gratefully reflect that this free annual expenditure for the happiness of others has its best and happiest meaning in the fact that it is "an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace." A day of Christmas shopping is morally and spiritually a good thing for everybody who makes that use of it. The brotherhood of man is more a reality to him than it would be in default of such an experience. The spirit which the Christmas season directly fosters, even among those who do not profess and call themselves Christians, is good for them, good for their neighbors, and good for the communities to which they belong.

THE EFFECT OF THE AMENDMENTS.

Senator LODGE is fair-spoken in his expository statement about the amendments to the canal treaty. He satisfies the unthinking and places under lasting obligation those who like to put a decent face upon an indecent enterprise. We pay a high tribute to his intelligence when we say that TILLMAN could not have prepared such a statement, and to his morality when we add that ELKINS would not have thought it necessary.

"Such," says Mr. LODGE in conclusion, "are the purposes of the three amendments, which in no way derogate from the intention of the United States that the canal shall be a neutral highway for the world's commerce." Derogate is a good word. We definitely abandon, annul, and reverse a policy that has guided us for half a century, the policy which declared that the canal "must be for the world's benefit, a trust for mankind, to be removed from the chance of domination by any single Power, nor become a point of invitation for hostilities or a prize for warlike ambition." But we do not derogate. We draw up a treaty declaring that the canal shall be "free and open, in time of war as in time of peace, to vessels of commerce and of war of all nations, on terms of entire equality"; and that "the canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it," together with other agreements strictly limiting the rights of vessels of belligerents in and near the canal. And then we insert an amendment reserving the right to close, blockade, blow up, destroy, occupy with war ships and armed forces and hold as the military position the whole or any part of the canal as often and as long as may be deemed necessary by us for our own defense. Nevertheless, we do not derogate.

Here is a parallel case: A and B, neighbors, desiring to confirm the relations of amity so happily subsisting between them, and to facilitate business, agree by a written instrument to occupy for common benefit and advantage a certain edifice in which it is agreed that each shall carry on business without molestation or hindrance from the other. B's partner, however, on examining the instrument, suggests that he should consider the contract improvident if B did not reserve the right to turn the hose on A in order to prevent his entering the building whenever in his judgment the interests of his business demanded it, or even to blow up or burn the structure together with its contents. And this could be done without derogating from the fine old mutuality of the compact, or offering matter at which B would have just cause to raise in air an offended nose.

That is what the Davis amendment means. Like unto it is the amendment striking out Article III., by which it was agreed that the convention should be sent around to the other Powers, and their adhesion invited. Senator LODGE says we did not want to give to the other Powers "the right to meddle in American affairs at any point." Inasmuch as by adhering to this treaty they would have solemnly bound themselves not to interfere, one feels like calling on the Senator for a diagram of his reasoning. We might find in it helps to understanding how express renunciation can become an easement.

There is no criticism to be passed upon this method of getting rid of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. If Great Britain accepts the amendments, including that which supersedes the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, that method of getting rid of the treaty, being of mutual consent, will be fair and honorable on both sides. But any statesman who believes that the abrogation of the whole of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty will facilitate the construction of the Nicaragua Canal exposes himself to the risk of a rude disillusionment. Any statesman who holds that by that act we get out of trouble instead of into it shows himself to be credulously hopeful to the verge of recklessness. There are some very useful agreements in that treaty. The Senate insists that they must be thrown away, without proposing that anything shall be put in their place.

THE PROBLEM OF THE COMMITTEE OF FIFTEEN.

The situation with which the Committee of Fifteen will have to deal has already been considerably modified, or, rather, developed, since the time of the committee's appointment. Some of the change that has taken place is undoubtedly due to the creation of the committee and the character of the men placed upon it. In the old phrase it has been "borne in on" Tammany that it is face to face with an organization that may give it much more trouble than it has ever before been called on to encounter. And the shrewdest men in Tammany, both those in the inner circle and those who have felt compelled to co-operate with these, see that there is the possibility of such a sustained and general public sentiment backing this organization as has never before existed in this town.

Undoubtedly when Mr. CROKER, on the eve of his disappearance from the shores of his adopted land, selected the committee of "Purifiers," as they are called by their friends, and clothed them with all the powers of the boss, he expected that they would have only the relatively simple task of standing off the decent people of the city by a show of activity until the excitement should die out, as it had died out in so many previous instances. The excitement has indeed in a measure died out, but the sentiment and conviction of which it was the temporary expression persist and have greatly deepened. This is due in part to the action of the "Purifiers" themselves. When they secured the charges against Capt. HERLIHY and Inspector CROSS and the transfer of Capt. TITUS to HERLIHY'S precinct, and when TITUS proceeded to do in forty-eight hours what the whole Police Department on urgent application had refused to do for two years, public sentiment, instead of being stilled, was aroused. This show of efficiency was universally accepted as proof that all the evils that had been known so long to prevail were directly under the corrupt protection of the police and of the political organization controlling the police. The device of Tammany so far from diverting and dissipating the public feeling against it had actually consolidated and concentrated that feeling.

The later escapade of Chief DEVERY has served a like purpose. It is not easy clearly to fathom its real motives. Spite probably was among them, and the desire to increase the revenue from vice, as charged by HUGH MCLAUGHLIN, also. Apparently the time was ill-chosen, and the leaders of Tammany were not fully consulted, for the work of DEVERY has been undone so far as concerns the Brooklyn Deputy Chief. DEVERY himself has been allowed to go into retirement, and the Acting Chief, CORTRIGHT, has been directed to take steps toward closing a lot of the gambling places supposed to be under the protection of the Syndicate. In part this is due to the influence of the Brooklyn boss and in part to the action of the "Purifiers." Probably it has been thought that a show of conformity with the demands of decency would deaden public interest and tend to deprive the labors of the Committee of Fifteen of the popular support so essential to success. Here again Tammany is reckoning foolishly. The real effect is precisely the opposite of what was expected and desired. The reversal of DEVERY'S impudent action and the partial repression of the favored gambling houses only prove that it is in the power of the police to remedy the outrageous state of things shown to exist and that it was in their power to prevent it if they had wished. Every such attempt to induce the people of New York to renew the lease of Tammany is only another strong inducement to cancel that lease.

It is extremely fortunate that the Committee of Fifteen is so well fitted to deal with the situation thus developing. Apart from the proved energy and good judgment of its members, so far as they are well known, their excellent choice of a Chairman is a ground for confidence. Mr. WILLIAM H. BALDWIN, Jr., combines very rare qualities. He is young; he has had wide experience in successful dealing with men and in directing and inspiring difficult organized work; he has had the invaluable additional experience acquired in Boston in connection with his father in sound work in the poorer sections of a great city; and, above all, he enters on this task with a thorough comprehension of its nature and extent and necessary duration. He is not enlisted for a demonstration or even for one campaign, but, as the term ran during the rebellion, "for the war." He has announced—and we may be sure that he has not done so without deliberation or without full understanding of the obligation he assumes—that the organization of which he has taken the leadership is to be a permanent one. It will try to remedy present evils so far as possible, but it will also try in every way to remove the causes of these evils so far as that may be practicable. Mr. BALDWIN and the gentlemen engaged with him are profoundly convinced that the one essential to any lasting improvement of social and moral conditions in this city is a public opinion that is sufficiently general, intelligent, and active to move every section of the city and every class of its inhabitants. Obviously it is not a brief or easy process to educate and organize and energize such an opinion. But it is an achievement of infinite importance, and those who have undertaken it in a spirit at once so enlightened and unselfish deserve the cordial and steady support of all good citizens.

M. ZOLA TO PRESIDENT LOUBET.

EMILE ZOLA'S letter addressed to the President of the French Republic is characteristic of the writer's fine sense of justice as it is of his eloquent and aggressive rhetoric. But was it worth while? If the passage of the Amnesty bill in any way interfered with the individual rights of the pardoned DREYFUS, limiting or annulling his right of further appeal, there would be abundant excuse for M. ZOLA'S determined opposition. But it does not. It simply forbids the defenders of DREYFUS from seeking punishment for their persecutors in the criminal courts, and it gives immunity to the innumerable public officials, military men, and civilians who committed all sorts of crimes in order to perpetuate the felony of MERCIER and the iniquity of the court-martial of 1894. But will such a measure, which contains not only the element of amnesty but that of suppression, bring peace to France?

M. ZOLA believes that it will not, and that the next move in the case will be one which must humiliate France. "People forget," he says, "that the German Emperor is in possession of the truth, and will be able to throw it in the face of France when the hour comes." People who were astounded with the accuracy of the prophecy contained in his famous letter "J'accuse" of Jan. 13, 1898, cannot now fail to be moved by what the novelist predicts will happen in the near future. They will sympathize with his resentment and that of the noble PICQUART in being grouped with such rascals as GONSE, MERCIER, and DU PATY DE CLAM, and will believe with him that the only way to bring lasting tranquillity to the country is to punish the guilty and rehabilitate the suffering innocent.

But M. ZOLA has failed to read the record of the "Cabinet of Republican Defense" with his usual care in such matters if he supposes for an instant that it is characteristic of the Waldeck-Rousseau Ministry to leave any task undone. His revelation of the opportunity that is placed in the Kaiser's hands to humiliate France proclaims no new discovery. The Government is as well aware of the fact as he himself is that the treasonable documents mentioned in the bordereau, which are in the archives of the German War Office, are in ESTERHAZY'S handwriting, and that the Kaiser could employ them in a way calculated to inflict upon France such a terrible insult before the face of the world that war would be inevitable. But there is not the slightest doubt that the French Government has amply provided against this stupendous contingency.

In just what form DREYFUS will again petition the Supreme Court of Appeal to hear his case we are not at this moment permitted to say, but assuredly it will not be by way of the German War Office thrown open with insulting bravado to the humiliated gaze of France. No act of the executive, the legislative, or the judicial department of the Government could hope to change public opinion, and the endless prosecutions arising out of the famous case, as the Government has stated, were calculated to keep France in a constant condition of turmoil for years to come, without bringing about real justice to the original sufferer. The Amnesty bill has made it possible for DREYFUS again to approach justice without the risk of plunging the country, as was concurrent with his former appeal, into a deplorable state of disorder. M. ZOLA and his fellow-sufferers should have been patient. He is right, however, in asserting that the fifth act of the drama is yet to be played. It will not, nevertheless, be produced with the spectacular effects which he predicts for it.

GRADE CROSSINGS.

The elimination of grade crossings of steam railroads in New York State, under the act of 1897 authorizing appropriations of $100,000 per year to the Board of Railroad Commissioners to be expended for this purpose, is progressing at a rate which warrants the statisticians in promising that the work will be accomplished in about 400 years.

This is an optimistic view of the matter, as a careful calculation would seem to show that at least two more centuries—six in all—will be needed, since the number of dangerous grade crossings is constantly increasing with the growth of towns. There is room for a difference of opinion, perhaps, as to whether the State should bear one-quarter of the cost of such improvements, from which the railroads benefit directly and largely in convenient and economical operation; but having undertaken to do so, it is a wasteful economy to attack the problem with insufficient appropriations. The Board of Railroad Commissioners is strictly limited to the annual expenditure of the amount named, and with this it has been able to co-operate in changing only about one hundred out of some eight thousand grade crossings classified as dangerous. In view of the fact that since 1897 probably more than one hundred grade crossings have become dangerous which were no more so before that date than every such crossing must necessarily be, the rate of progress toward the abolition of the evil is not likely to keep pace with its natural growth.

There is no good reason for legislative trifling with this important improvement. Every year brings its record of "accidents" at grade crossings to emphasize the obvious fact that even gates and flagmen cannot make such crossings safe. We are not quite sure that it devolves upon the State to bear any part of the cost of improvements so distinctly local; but if the example of Massachusetts is to be followed, we would do well to imitate her liberality in appropriating $5,000,000 to be expended at the rate of $500,000 per year for this purpose. The Legislature should deal with this problem on broad lines, or withdraw from any participation in the work and rest content with such mandatory enactments as the Constitution may permit. Its present attitude gives the railroad companies the best possible excuse for neglecting or postponing improvements of this character until in the course of time—using that term in distinction from eternity—the Railroad Commissioners find themselves in a position to co-operate in the work in conjunction with the local authorities.

It would not seem to be a great hardship to the railroads to require them to provide permanent way of such character as shall conform to the changed conditions they have been largely instrumental in bringing about. The growth of population along their lines brings them the most profitable part of their traffic, and they have no reason to complain if they must raise or lower their tracks, or bridge them, to make train running consistent with safety to life and property. It pays a railroad company to avoid accidents at whatever cost; but even if this were not so every public franchise should be so availed of as not to create a public nuisance or a public danger.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Thanks to the Brush will contest, we now have sworn and formal evidence as to how the failures of "Christian Science" are covered up, how the wretched "healers" get their dead victims under ground without attracting the inconvenient curiosity of the law as embodied in the Coroner. They keep in some out-of-the-way corner a once reputable and still licensed doctor who, by reason of advancing age or other waning of the faculties, has wandered off into the "Christian Science" morass, and, wallowing there in pathetic degradation, is willing to sign any death certificate that is presented to him by a "healer" who has been unlucky enough to attempt the cure of somebody with a real and serious malady. Thus is the letter of the law observed, its spirit shamelessly violated, its intention frustrated—all to the infinite danger of the public and the public health. The trick is simple, but it is also abominable, and now that its practice has been put beyond doubt or question, steps should instantly be taken to make it of no utility. If the Legislature will not move of its own accord in the matter, the several medical societies, in concert for their own and the general protection, can easily force it to action. The fact that the "Christian Science" leaders habitually commit this obvious fraud shows exactly how much of sincerity there is in their sickening professions of superior piety and virtue. Some patients they kill, others they allow to die needlessly, but so long as they get their extortionate fees and keep out of jail, they are perfectly content. All means to those ends are good to them, and the mere filing of a deceptive death certificate is a trifle too slight to get a moment's consideration.

—Small politicians always deem it judicious to show an intense dislike for the regular army and everything connected with it, and consequently there is nothing surprising in the fact that several Congressmen have been prompt to accept charges against the West Point cadets as proof and to advise solemnly that, as hazing has not yet been quite suppressed at the Military Academy, the institution ought to be abolished. This amazing suggestion has actually been made on the floor of the House of Representatives more than once within the last few days, and yet the man who offered it must have read the evidence taken by the military board now sitting at West Point and must therefore know that though several of the boys have frankly confessed to various follies they might well have avoided, and to certain misdemeanors for which they deserve and surely will receive punishment, yet absolutely nothing has been revealed to indicate that the academy is not serving the high purpose for which it was created, or to warrant even a suspicion that the cadets are not exceptionally fine specimens of immature humanity. Their harryings of each other need to be taken seriously only by the officers whose duty it is to enforce the regulations of the academy. Those regulations are already of a strictness that would be cruel were the object of the training given other than it is, and to make them much more strict than they are would probably render life at West Point simply unendurable. Absolutely to prevent those boys from any wanderings off the straight and narrow line of recognized propriety would necessitate a surveillance so constant and so minute as to be an outrageous infringement on natural human rights. Cannot the hair-trigger critics in Congress overlook an occasional fist fight, or even the more reprehensible experiments with tabasco sauce, for the sake of a prank so truly delightful as that of forcing a new cadet to learn by heart and frequently repeat, while his companions eyed him up and down, the perfervid narration of his virtues and beauties, published by his home paper at the time of his appointment? That was discipline the effects of which could not have been anything else than good. Is it nothing that these boys hate a lie, that they loathe even the appearance of cowardice, that they are not less fit than eager to follow—no, to carry, the Stars and Stripes wherever duty calls? Abolish the Military Academy, indeed! What for? In order that Congressmen may have more patronage in times of National peril? We can think of no other reason.

—Ignorance of American history and affairs is now shown by the English papers much less frequently than it was a few years ago, but the displays are still numerous enough to warrant an expression of delighted surprise at an editorial article that appears in the last Shipping World of London. We have already told of the efforts made by several of the British journals to prove that SHERIDAN'S acts in Virginia are a precedent for the destruction of private property in South Africa. These efforts excite the fierce contempt of The Shipping World. Burn, it says, in effect, the Boer farmhouses, if that course is necessary for ending the war, but make that necessity, and not the acts of others, the excuse for the burning, particularly when the others did not commit the acts charged against them. Then follows the following passage—truly remarkable, considering the place of its appearance: "Don't assert that GRANT ordered or suffered the application of the torch to the homes of LEE'S soldiers, then fighting around Richmond or filling Northern prison camps; for it is not true. The fertile Valley of Virginia was one of LEE'S richest sources of supplies for his army, while the incursions of expeditions into Maryland and Pennsylvania, and finally to the very suburbs of Washington, were disturbing GRANT'S plans and causing periodical anxiety regarding the safety of the capital; therefore GRANT ordered SHERIDAN to attack EARLY, sweep the valley, burn the granaries and hay stacks and army stores, and destroy the communications with Richmond. The order was executed to the full; we saw the flaming barns and stores and fodder reflected on the chill Autumn sky; there was nothing left for the Army of Northern Virginia. But no home of friend or foe was burned; safeguards were readily supplied by SHERIDAN'S instructions; Richmond, (later,) set on fire by retreating Confederates, (soldier or civilian,) was saved by GRANT'S men. Let not the blame of home burning be in any way linked with the name of SHERIDAN, who is dead." How did a man with this knowledge and this spirit come to be writing for a London trade paper? The relevancy of his remarks to the English shipping interest is not obvious, but the remarks are all right, nevertheless.

—Several days ago the Superintendent of Bellevue Hospital, in denying that there was much, if any, foundation for the now proved charges against the nurses, made an admission that ought to have prepared the public for the present revelations. Bribery of the attendants, he declared, was a thing unknown, if not impossible, but as for the taking of tips from patients, well, that was a different matter, an American habit common almost everywhere, and recognized as permissible, of course, in the alcoholic and insane wards of Bellevue. This was—or ought to have been—a most shocking confession, and Commissioner KELLER should have made it the basis of instant and vigorous action. Tip-taking is not an American custom; it is the very vilest of all our importations. Tip-taking is not common almost everywhere in the United States; it exists only in a few low places where the foreign infection found slavish souls in which to propagate and spread. Nowhere could it possibly do more harm, nowhere could it lead more surely to the gravest abuses, than in a hospital like Bellevue, and any Bellevue official who encouraged or even endured it there either did not know his duty or neglected to perform it. The taking of tips by the attendants necessarily involved the giving of special attention to patients from whom gifts were expected or who had promised to make them. Almost necessarily it involved the neglect of the poorer or less "generous" sufferers, and from the earning of tips to demanding them, and enforcing the demands by something worse than neglect, the steps were short, easy, and inevitable. They were taken at Bellevue, it seems, and long ago. City employés should work for wages, or for salaries, if they like that word better; when they work, or shirk work, for tips, the best—a poor best—of them are contemptible, the worst criminal. The Superintendent of Bellevue should revise his notions of American habits, and do it quickly, lest somebody be moved to suggest to him the need of revising his own Americanism. The sooner he banishes the last vestige of tip-taking from the institution the better and the safer, both for himself and it, for the reputation of the city, for the credit of American civilization.

HAY-PAUNCEFOTE TREATY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May the opinion be offered that in the treatment of the amended Hay-Pauncefote treaty THE TIMES is for once out of joint?

Every argument in the editorial "The Next Steps" is answered by a simple statement of the reasons which prompted the amendments. I am convinced that by the great majority of the readers of THE TIMES even the present amended treaty is accepted with a feeling of regret in that it disturbs, even though slightly and negatively, the ideal of All-American unity and European non-interference. This ideal is not one of jingoism. It springs from the instinct of self-preservation, and from that of altruism to the limit of what is practical at present for the advance of world-democracy.

The original treaty would not have protected the canal from attacks of belligerents to any greater degree than does the amended one. As stated by me in THE TIMES many months ago, the only way to prevent possibility of damage to the canal would be to close the canal to all belligerents.

But to the point. Your editorial is based on the idea that the amendments are primarily due to a purpose to prevent the building of the canal by making the treaty too objectionable for England to accept. I submit, in all friendliness: The amended treaty is an accomplished fact. It will not prevent the building of the canal except in so far as the opposition of Great Britain is encouraged and strengthened. Therefore editorials such as "The Next Steps" in journals such as THE TIMES might well become the true cause of obstruction to the building of the canal. The amended treaty is in reality a compromise of American sentiment. All America, in the interest of commerce, should now present a united front to England for its acceptance. The value of the canal to the commerce of England (secured at the expense of this country) will amply repay her for any slight sacrifice which the acceptance of the amended treaty might cause her.

A Reader's Commendation.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I cannot refrain from expressing to you my high appreciation of the broad, wise, and far-seeing views set forth in the two articles in your issue of Dec. 12 on "Our Trade with Canada" and "A Canal or a Fort." These are statesmanlike views, and cannot fail to commend themselves to every enlightened mind. Would that all our legislators could look at things with such wise and philosophic eyes as that writer who signs himself "American"!

I have long admired THE TIMES for its fairness and fearlessness; but now I admire it also for its wisdom and enlightenment, and regard your counsels as safe, sound, and satisfactory. I do not write this with any view to publicity, but simply to express to you, Mr. Editor, an irrepressible feeling of admiration and esteem (felt probably by thousands of others who don't write to you) for your noble, honorable, and well-conducted journal.

THE RIGHT OF EMINENT DOMAIN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue for Dec. 16 you say editorially: "The Federal Government may not exercise within a State the right of eminent domain, * * * * a right which it exercises within a Territory, with or without the action of the Teritorial government." Are you quite sure of this? I think you will find on investigation that the law is just the opposite.

In the case of United States vs. Jones, 109 United States Reports, 513, the right of the Federal Government to exercise the power of eminent domain within a State was expressly upheld; and has been reaffirmed in many subsequent cases, e. g.: 112 U. S., 645; 114 U. S., 525, 531, 532; 117 U. S., 151, 154; 135 U. S., 641, 656. Moreover, in Luxton vs. North River Bridge Company, 153 U. S., 525, the Supreme Court went further, and held that "Congress, under the power to regulate commerce among the States, may create a corporation to build a bridge across a navigable river between two States, and to take private lands for the purpose, making just compensation." In his opinion, Mr. Justice Gray says (page 529): "Whenever it becomes necessary for the accomplishment of any object within the authority of Congress to exercise the right of eminent domain and take private lands, making just compensation to the owners, Congress may do this, with or without a concurrent act of the State in which the lands lie." In fact, there seems to be no more settled doctrine in our constitutional law than the one denied by you in the editorial referred to.

WEST POINT CADETS CRITICISED.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We Americans are so complacently entrenched in the thought of the stability of our institutions that we are startled and amazed when confronted with the investigation now going on regarding hazing at West Point, given in detail by your valuable journal.

Enough has already come out through evidence to convince any thoughtful citizen of the need of radical reform in the conduct of affairs in this institution which should commend itself to the patient taxpayer as the academy above all others to build characters of the highest type of manhood.

The law of liberty and the spirit of the Constitution demand from us all the defense of the helpless and weak, however distasteful to us or unfitted the battle of life the subject may be. These cadets have shown by their own evidence that their characters are sadly lacking in sterling qualities requisite to make great soldiers.

COMMERCIAL EXPANSION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Apropos of ex-President Harrison's strictures on the policy of the Administration with reference to its splendid scheme of commercial expansion, and the Washington comments it has evoked, it will be well for THE TIMES to pin the attention of its readers to one very vital article in the treaty of Paris the far-reaching results of which long ago forced themselves, with a clarity of reasoning, on every one who has studied its tendencies. The article referred to is the fifteenth.

The Washington correspondent of The New York Herald, in commenting on this portion of the pact between the United States and Spain, has gone only half way in assuming that an adverse decision to the Government in the Porto Rican case would result in a stream of Spanish products into the United States free of duty by the round-about route of the Philippines. If the Supreme Court decides that the Constitution extends to Porto Rico, the moment that Congress begins to legislate for it the inevitable result would also follow in the case of the Philippines, and the admission of Spanish goods and ships on the same terms as those of the United States at Manila would mean that the same treatment must be accorded to them at New York and San Francisco and New Orleans. And if these privileges are accorded to Spain, how about the "most favored nation" provision in existing treaties of the United States? Would it let England and France and Germany in on equal terms? This is purely interrogative, and not assertive. If it would, the protective policy of the United States will no longer be open to criticism, for Washington statesmanship will have abandoned its principle of exclusion and have adopted one of the widest inclusion.

Grover Cleveland's "free trade" propaganda was only a paltry shy at universal industrial brotherhood compared with this magnificent scheme of "commercial expansion!"

Hint to the Incumbrances Bureau.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Last Sunday we were regaled by reading of the doings of the Bureau of Incumbrances at the store of a dealer in trunks in the Astor House, who displayed his wares in a manner prohibited by law, and the eagle eye of the ever-watchful Inspectors of this department caught the same man twice in one week. The zeal of the Bureau of Incumbrances is such that every citizen should applaud its efforts, but at the same time it would be well to inquire why all this zeal is directed seemingly to one spot.

I happened to pass by on the west side of Centre Street last Friday, between Howard and Canal Streets, and what a sight met my gaze! Here was a collection of old iron in the shape of stoves and machinery of every description, rusty and dirty, that would have delighted anybody who was at all interested in antiquities of this sort—especially a dealer in junk. This stuff encumbered all the sidewalk, and was such an eyesore that I could scarce believe my eyes.

Here, then, is a chance for more zeal on the part of the Bureau of Incumbrances. Will it do its duty?

The Boers and Their Cause.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me, a regular reader of your excellent paper, to voice the sentiments of a large number of your readers who have heretofore remained quiet on the subject and to enter my protest against the seeming injustice that you do the Boers and their many sympathizers in not according them the good will and justice that they deserve.

All lovers of justice and of liberty should make the cause of the Boers their cause, and by encouraging them in every way they may be able to hold out until they are granted at least a portion of the independence for which they are struggling so bravely.

The fact that the Boers fight as desperately as they do shows that they have hopes of obtaining the independence that can only be bought with their hearts' blood. Might does not always make right, so hereafter let the Boers have a word of encouragement now and then, let them persist in their struggle until the Divine Master, who exalteth the humble and putteth down the mighty, will grant them what is theirs, independence.

Copper Mines in New Jersey.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your paper of Monday morning you give prominence to a report of the finding of native copper in New Jersey and convey the impression that the recent discoveries at the mine north of Bound Brook are something new and unprecedented in the history of mining in this State. As an actual fact, the occurrence of native copper at this very mine was reported by Prof. H. D. Rogers, then State Geologist, as far back as 1836. In 1868 Prof. George H. Cook in his report on the geology of New Jersey cites various localities where native copper had been found, the largest mass, weighing 128 pounds, (not all native copper,) being found near this mine. Fine specimens were also obtained near New Brunswick, where it is reported to have been mined previous to the American Revolution. In 1881, 1883, and again in 1899 the occurrence of native copper at the mine near Bound Brook was noted by the State Geologist in his annual reports. These facts are sufficient to show that the occurrence of native copper in the rocks of New Jersey has long been known, and the reported finds near Bound Brook are far from being new discoveries.

Street Car Refrigerators.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your article last Thursday about the lack of heat in the Metropolitan Company's cars called attention to a long-standing public grievance. It was too mild. Last Winter I was told that the date for beginning to heat the cars was Dec. 15, and this year, I presume, only the extreme cold of the past week secured for us some heat on Dec. 13. If I recall correctly, the cars were like refrigerators on the 12th. Apparently the company is trying to recover the serious loss of those two days' premature and unwarranted heating of its cars, for this afternoon I could not get the heat turned on even after requesting the conductor to do it.

The observably great decrease in the patronage of the Eighth Avenue line on those cold days was almost as refreshing as the brisk temperature that made the cars almost unendurable. J. F. BERRY.

Fuel Gas at $1.05.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If the consumers of gas will show the same interest in the gas monopoly that the consumers of ice did in the Ice Trust doubtless the same satisfactory result will follow. I have six gas stoves and logs in my home. I do not use them at the present rate of gas. I use my furnace instead for the first time in some years, and I am going to invest in oil stoves. It seems to me if all the customers serve notice on the company that they will not use gas for the purpose of heating at $1.05 a thousand it will bring the company to its senses.

A Welcome Christmas Gift.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In these closing days of gift giving may I be allowed to suggest an inexpensive present which is certain to be more highly valued than remembrances costing far more? I allude to THE NEW YORK TIMES'S SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS AND ART, which with the accompanying regular issue of even date uplifts the beneficiary with its entertaining and enlightening presence fifty-two times between Christmas and Christmas.

It has been my practice in recent years to give literary gifts rather than the transient things which the holiday season so bountifully provides, and while well-selected books have ever been received with grateful appreciation, nothing has called forth such earnest and repeated thanks as have fallen from the pens and lips of those whom I have endowed with your inestimable REVIEW.

For the young, in whom the love of books will be a precious and lasting acquisition, I can conceive of nothing of equal value. If every regular reader of the REVIEW will subscribe for ten copies, as I shall, in the names of those upon whom they most desire to confer lasting benefit, and thus lift your weekly circulation to much more than a million, history would record no grander or more far-reaching beneficence.

IN CITY HALL PARK.

"Noon!" Above the city's clamor,
Vibrant to the heavy hammer
Sounds the bell of old St. Paul's.
Through the streets with traffic roaring
Surge the busy throngs, outpouring
From the many-storied walls.

Men, engrossed in winning treasure,
Scheming work and planning pleasure,
Sweep their unregardant eyes
Where, in noble bronze, forever
Stands the Youth of lost endeavor
With his forehead to the skies.

Phantom of forgotten sorrow,
Martyr for a happier morrow,
Daily, pass your fettered feet
Thousands of the land you cherished;
Think they, ever, how you perished—
In the hurry of the street?

Through the Park, whate'er his mission,
Comes my gray-mustached patrician
Marching briskly toward the West;
Trim, his garb, of black unbroken,
But the Loyal Legion's token
Blossoms brightly on his breast.

Sixty-three he seems, or older;
Yet, though somewhat stiff the shoulder
Where a Rebel bullet hides,
Many younger eyes are duller;
And his cheeks have kept the color
From the flood of youthful tides.

Are his thoughts of fields and trenches,
Of a line that never blenches
From the wild assault of Lee?
Hark! he hears the drum sonorous;
He is marching to the chorus
"From Atlanta to the Sea."

"Halt!" The old campaigner faces,
On the pedestal he traces
Once again the simple tale;
Then, to greet the younger hero,
Gravely touches his sombrero
In salute to Nathan Hale.

THE PEW AND THE PULPIT.

CHURCH PROBLEMS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE NEW YORK TIMES of Dec. 11, 1900, contained a striking editorial under the heading, "The Problem of City Churches." It was based upon the remarks of a speaker in the Chicago Baptist Ministers' Association, who was quoted as follows: "Unless the Church becomes a continuous vaudeville it cannot hold its congregations." The editor seems rather to sympathize with the Chicago minister, and recommends that church services be made as varied and as attractive as possible. The closing suggestion of the article is: "The logical solution of the problem would seem to be to make the churches as attractive as possible, and maintain within them a nucleus of holiness which, always sufficiently in evidence to make its influence felt, need not, and perhaps should not, interfere with anything innocent and proper which will attract those who are needed to fill the pews and help swell the church revenues."

Another view of the situation is presented in the aforementioned editorial. "It is also possible, from the lay point of view, that congregations find the continuous pastoral relation a trifle monotonous. * * * It is asking a good deal of intelligent people to expect them to be profoundly interested in listening to them week after week and year after year, until every phase of their thought, every habit of expression, every inflection, every oratorical trick, and every characteristic mannerism can be anticipated. * * * How attractive would a theatre be to the throngs which visit it if it had but one actor, however clever, and kept one piece on the boards year in and year out, with the same songs and everything as nearly unchanged as possible?"

THE TIMES is a paper recognized to be friendly to church work. Its criticisms are not to be taken as expressed in a bitter spirit. However, the editorial writer comes far short of comprehending the situation. In the first place, the churches which are winning the greatest success in this city are those of long pastorates. One needs but to think of the list of churches where the attendance is large in order to realize this. Dr. Parkhurst, Dr. Burrell, Dr. MacArthur, and others might be mentioned. In the second place, that church which by its methods necessitates short pastorates has been notably declining in recent years. We refer to the Methodist Church. As a third consideration, be it remembered that where large audiences are wont to assemble is not where the services approximate theatricals or the vaudeville. No such thing is to be found in the services of Berean Baptist Church, Philadelphia, where Dr. Conwell preaches to audiences of four thousand people, nor in that of Dr Lorimer, in Boston, where the audience averages about two thousand at Tremont Temple. Name the list of larger audiences in New York and Brooklyn and the same is true: J. Wilbur Chapman's, A. C. Dixon's, N. D. Hillis's, James Burrell's, R. S. MacArthur's, Maltbie D. Babcock's, Dr. Parkhurst's. The difficulty with THE TIMES's article is that facts and experience do not corroborate its claims or recommend its suggestions.

THE TIMES's article truly says: "Congregations may be divided into two general classes, those who are religious and go to church because it is a place of worship and instruction, and those who maintain a church connection because it is socially good form to do so, but find it difficult to become really interested in the services." Upon this basis the suggestions are made to change the present plan as shown in our quotations in the first and second paragraphs under this heading. In other words, this great paper recommends that the irreligious element, with its desires and preferences, shall dominate in the life and services of the Church! Has it come to this? Must the Church conform to the world in order to live? Why should we desire to have present a large audience? What is the real value of large numbers? It is not entertainment, but that men may be led to become genuine followers of Christ! We challenge any man to name a church where its audiences are brought together on THE TIMES's plan where there is maintained spiritual power and where souls are being saved through conversion of men and women to Jesus Christ. The days of Church strength and vitality are those of contest with the world-spirit, not of conformity to it. We recommend, instead of THE TIMES's plan, a message from the pulpit full of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, preached by a man who believes every whit of it and is earnestly trying to live it, and a genuine effort on the part of those in the churches to-day to live the Christ-life in every phase of human activity. This will fill any church and will replenish any treasury. Let us make the church service attractive, sweet, and as happy as may be, but let us never forget that the purpose of our coming together is to win the unsaved to Christ and to build up those already in Him. Failing in this, whatsoever of value attaches to the assembling of a congregation is lost.

CAUSES OF CHURCH APATHY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The religious discussion to which THE TIMES has opened its columns serves, with much collateral matter elsewhere, to demonstrate that, while the churches are apathetic, we are nowise in an irreligious age.

Perhaps the prevalent notion that the Church is the repository and conservator of all the highest religious sense is erroneous; in which case, the seeming contradiction disappears and we get a somewhat broader view of things. Some of the causes that have brought about apathy in the churches are underlying and historic. Conditions are not created in a moment. Apparently "higher criticism" has had much to do with present Church conditions, but its influences have been subtle, and it owes much of its destructive character to a long period of antecedent Biblical exegesis. Back as far as Origen and the schools of Alexandria the ground was prepared for the congenial growth of "higher criticism." There took place the divorcement between Christianity and Judaism, and later on at Rome and Constantinople the nuptials of Christianity and paganism.

Origen and his school, to which, to the present day, belong the great majority of Christian churches and Christian thinking, seeing, or thinking they saw, the impossibility of any literal fulfillment of the prophecies concerning Israel and the forecasts of Christ and the Apostles, stripped the Scriptures of pretty much all their prophetic literalism and substituted therefor a system of Scripture spiritualizations that has left the Bible a prolific source of dogmas and strange conceptions. Except in so far as the literalism of both Old and New Testament served to rear and sustain priestly power and the organized Church, it was, and has continued to be, set aside for the more accommodating system of spiritualizing the plain meaning of everything in Scripture that human reason could not square with its narrow vision.

The Church and pulpit everywhere followed slavishly in the furrow marked out by Origen, until now it is a sure sign of a disordered mind to take the prophets or Christ or the Apostles literally. "Higher criticism," in making everything concerning Israel, antedating David's time, purely mythological, moved along a very logical advance, and the pulpit had no intelligent answer to offer to its destructive criticism. It either accepted openly the conclusions of "higher criticism" or was silent. To Paine and Ingersoll the filing of "infidel" served well enough for a time, but when "higher criticism," in the mouths of ministers and religious editors, took up the cudgels against Moses and the prophets, the pulpit had no epithet with which to silence the recalcitrants, neither had it any intelligent answer. Indeed, so long as there was nothing literal in Moses and the prophets, it mattered little, and to answer the new school of Bible criticism meant an abandonment of the safe, though shifting, grounds upon which it had so long stood for a more exacting arena of debate, wherein something more than mere thrashing around would be demanded. The Bible had become a shell, without any meat of fact in it, and the pulpit a pleasant resort for emotions and mysticisms. Biblical scholarship in any true sense had fled from it. Most men reason simply. If Abraham and Moses were mythologic heroes, and the prophecies creations of subsequent unscrupulous priests of the Babylonian captivity, who sought to palm off accomplished facts as prophecies of the future, it could hardly be expected that the ordinary mind would fail to go direct to the simple conclusion that Christ and the Apostles, whose sole basis is the credibility of Moses and the prophets, were alike myths and deceptions. A lie, once exposed, has little power, though persistently reiterated. People must have some religion, however, and, for want of something better, they still moved along the old ways; they went to church and contributed, and now and then got aroused, after a fashion, by some new emotional contrivance. But generally there came a mighty apathy over the hearts of men.

The ordinary man did not stop to ascertain that "higher criticism" has no historic basis; that it is pure will-o'-the-wisp that its whole system of literary analysis is spurious, and that the results of archæological discoveries in Babylonia and Egypt have utterly discredited its contentions. Ingersoll had the modesty to stop preaching about the "mistakes of Moses" in the face of discovered facts, but the higher critics are sublimely indifferent to such trifling things as facts. It could not be expected that people would wade through the literary mazes of German students and all their strange jumble of Hexateuch and Elohist and Yahirst and priestly codes and illimitable redactors, all of which they themselves have later thrown into the waste basket. It was sufficient for the ordinary man that either his minister seemed to take kindly to it, his religious paper quoted effusively from it, the secular press hailed it enthusiastically, or there was silence. Now Niagara is upon us.

Some people become easily incensed when a Chinaman rises up to compare favorably Confucianism with Christianity. But the Chinaman is right, and Minister Wu has no call to apologize for his remarks. Christ is one thing and Christianity is another. Judaic Christianity of the first century is one thing and Christianity of the later centuries and of to-day is quite another. It may well be that the civilization of Europe is superior to that of the Orient; but that the Christianity of Europe is exalted above the Confucianism, Taoism, and Buddhism of China or Brahmanism of India is a question that at least may be calmly discussed.

The Roman and Greek Churches are quite the two largest divisions of the so-called Christian Church, and both of them are pagan to the core; the ceremonial and dogma pagan root and branch. It is the voice of Jacob, but the hand of Esau. Their vocabulary is Christian, but that is all; and the Protestant Church, while less pagan, is quite as far removed from primitive Judaic Christianity. Its ideas of the future are pagan rather than Rabbinical and Christian, and its connections of the present life, as Rabbi Hirsch rightly intimates, are far from Judaic, and hence not Apostolic and Christian at all.

Perhaps out of all the confusion will finally come a renaissance of Bible literalism. Christianity will again become Judaic. We shall return to the rock from whence we were hewn.

About the only man that I now see who has clear vision, whether right or wrong is not the question, is the Hebrew. There is something in that imperishable faith of his as he bears it down the centuries that makes the heart beat and the imagination rekindle with power and might. It dwarfs these religions of ours. We dogmatize; he goes back to Jerusalem to rebuild her walls and her temples in his undying faith that the promises of Jehovah to Israel are eternal as the stars.

When the Jew shall open his eyes to see Jesus of Nazareth, the Messiah, fulfilling in part the prophets, 1,900 years ago, and yet to be fulfilled in all their completeness by that same Jesus in the Messiah yet to come, we shall get the full view. But then, how far in the future that may yet be no man may say.

PULPIT'S POWER QUESTIONED.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with much interest the several letters of your correspondents in reference to the existing apathy in our churches. Permit me, who has had no circumscribed opportunities of observing what contributes to ministerial acceptableness and efficiency, to say that, in my opinion, the cause of this indifference is to be found in the diminished power of the pulpit to adapt itself to the conditions of the people. I do not believe that it can be traced up, exclusively, to the social, professional, and mercantile environments of the times in which we live.

Though the same Gospel is to be preached, and the matter of sermons is to be substantially the same through all the varying conditions of society, yet the form of presenting this Gospel must be adapted to the thought, the intellect, and the circumstances of the age; and a different method of preaching the Gospel truth must be adopted in the age of advancing knowledge to what was pursued in one of less refinement and cultivation. There must be more originality of thought, more profound analysis, more accurate criticisms, more varied illustration from the fields of nature and the world of science, more efforts to prove the harmony of a sound theology with a sound philosophy.

The great mistake of the modern preacher is in not keeping abreast of the secular thought of the times. The man who does not regard it as essential to know what men are thinking about, as well as what they are doing, will most assuredly preach to empty pews. The successful preacher goes into the marts of commerce, familiarizes himself with the cares, the vexations, the temptations, dangers, and disasters that are encountered there. He may know much of the Divine, but without an acquaintance with the human his message will be barren of results.

To the man who has been fighting the world, the flesh, and the devil for six days a dry theological disquisition, or an erudite essay to prove a theory he never doubted is like giving him a stone when he asked for bread. It is under such effete ministrations that churches are becoming dissatisfied and attenuated.

In such a condition of things we want preachers whose ability and judgment shall command respect, whose manner and daily deportment shall draw the affections, and whose ministrations shall attract by their beauty and be a potential factor in the social, moral, and spiritual uplifting of those committed to their care.

High Hats in Churches Criticised.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am writing to ask you to start a movement for the abolishment of ladies' high hats in churches. It seems to me an anomaly that in houses of worship, where, of all places, one is supposed to be self-sacrificing, unselfish, and humble-minded, ladies should go, Sunday after Sunday, wearing hats from six to thirty inches high, profusely loaded with birds, flowers, and feathers, which utterly destroy or greatly impair the view of the preacher and the service of the bare-headed men who sit behind them. This savage practice has been frowned down and forbidden in theatres; in all the better ones women take off their headgear or leave it at home.

It is much more objectionable in churches, where the floors are generally flat, than in playhouses, where the grades of the seats gives one some chance to look over the hats. I sat an hour in church today "rubber-necking" between and around two structures, and, having surreptitiously measured one, found it twenty-three inches from brim to crest. Surely the ladies only need their attention thus politely drawn to the matter to promptly abolish the trouble. The remedy is so simple: either come hatless to church, or take your hat off, or stay away.

MISSION WORK IN CHINA.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I think it is the Rev. Dr. Robert S. MacArthur of Calvary Baptist Church who says Christians themselves are in a manner to blame for the late persecutions in China. He says: "The highest authorities affirm that the French Government has protected the Catholic hierarchy in overriding the laws and customs of the Chinese people. Protestant missionaries, as a rule, have not been guilty of the offensiveness, oppression, and injustice which have been clearly proved against Catholic missionaries."

Now let us admit this, and also that all Christians are likely to offend in the same way. It does seem to me as an American that we have no legal right to send our missionaries to China, or any other country to try and convert them to our way of thinking. By so doing we preach a gospel antagonistic to their form of government, and this to their minds is little less than treason. How can a man love his country and adopt a religion diametrically opposed to its form of government? If he becomes a convert to Christianity, he will no longer honor or revere his country or his ancestors; and veneration and the teachings of Confucius are the only ethics of the Chinese people.

To my mind, it seems absurd to attempt to convert this ancient race to the doctrines of Jesus. Let them alone, and allow them to walk in the light as they see it, and instead of sending missionaries to convert them, suppose we appropriate the money spent in foreign missions to better the condition of the starving, poor and depraved in our own country. Suppose we try reform at home, in our own cities, towns, and villages; suppose we turn to the erring and wayward and gently lead them to a better life. Let us try our hand in bettering the condition of the very poor in our great cities.

I am not pleading the cause of the Chinese. Punishment should follow them and their misdeeds, but before we cast at them the stone of wrath let us hold the mirror up to nature, put ourselves in their place, and let us ask ourselves how we would like the Heathen Chinee to overrun our country, seek to make converts of our people, and directly, or indirectly, seek to poison our people against our country and its institutions.

It is justice, and not revenge, that should guide us in dealing with this ancient empire, and President McKinley has shown rare ability in his diplomatic relations with this most difficult question.

POLITICS IN TEMPERANCE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

W. B. Conklin has felt constrained to write you condemning your editorial about the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the canteen. Great men will differ. I want to commend the article, only saying you did not cut half deep enough. There is no one organization on earth that has done so much to break down the cause of temperance as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the press, knowing that the intentions of the women have been good, has treated them with too much charity and consideration, probably not wishing to speak out against those whose motives were presumably good, however bad or ill-considered were their acts.

Originally the organization was what its name indicates, a Christian organization, using Christian methods to win individual drunkards back to the path of sobriety, and they were meeting with considerable success. At that time I was glad to contribute of my funds to assist them in the good work. But there was an element in the organization for whose ambition this was too slow and commonplace. They lacked confidence in Christ's methods of reclaiming the wayward, and kept up an agitation to reform the world and establish total abstinence in a day by man-made laws. Christ's laws and Christ's ways were too weak. At a meeting held at Cleveland, Ohio, about twenty years ago this element prevailed, and the laws of man were invoked. A Woman's Political Temperance Union was substituted for the Christian organization, which, however, kept the old name, and has sailed under false colors ever since. Sunday meetings are held in churches, and they open with long prayers; but they belie their professions by repudiating God's laws of love, and appeal to man's law of force.

What has been the result? We defy this organization to name one single saloon it has closed, or one drunkard it has reclaimed, in all these twenty years. Not only that, but other women who have thought that they should do something to assist the cause of temperance have looked abroad to see in what line they might work. They have seen this large and noisy, organization in Christian's name, and joined it by reason of its name, and thus it has nullified all Christian effort to promote temperance. It is not strange to me, therefore, that a decent newspaper like THE TIMES, that believes in law, order, temperance, and sobriety, should speak of this organization somewhat according to its deserts. It is rather strange that it should not have spoken out long since; and having spoken, I shall be disappointed if you do not continue to speak of them according to their influence on the community, and not according to their supposed intentions.

You speak of other organizations according to their deeds, and to the effect their deeds have on the moral and physical world. Why should there be some other rule to apply to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union? Charity to that order is death to all temperance work. Besides, they show no charity. They assume to hold a monopoly on all the temperance sentiment there is in the country. When they set their sign of approval or disapproval on any political measure, all who do not adopt their views are immediately tabooed as servants of the saloon keepers and the devil. They are the keepers of the public conscience, and assume to read you out of decent society, and almost out of your own church, if you do not fall in with every fool whim they may adopt.

The folly of their whims was never more apparent to thoughtful, observant people than in their advocacy of the abolition of the canteen—the private soldiers' amusement hall, library, and gymnasium—because light wines, beer, and luncheon are served to those who want it and will have it. Suppose the canteen is abolished, where will the private soldier go for recreation? To the low groggeries which will again line the roadsides between the military posts and near-by town, where conscienceless men sell liquid damnation and vile women sell themselves. It was in honor of this accomplishment that women applauded and angels wept when the vote was taken in Congress to abolish the canteen. And it was done in the name of an organization that calls itself "Christian" and sets itself up as a censor of Christian opinion about temperance.

One of the bad things in connection with this worship is that these women are but as babes and sucklings in their contests for laws to promote temperance, compared with the adverse side. Their law to abolish the army canteen had scarcely passed the House—I doubt if the certified copy had yet reached the Senate—when Joseph Miller, the Ohio agent, attorney, and lobbyist of the State Saloon Keepers' Association, started by fastest express train for Washington. What do these deluded women think was his mission? Nothing more nor less than to promote the passage through the Senate of the same bill they helped to lobby through the House. This is the fact. I leave the women to draw their own inference. Some person is going to be fooled about results if the canteen is abolished, and it is not going to be Mr. Miller and his clients. They are looking at the matter as a purely practical business proposition. They have weighed its provisions, and concluded it is a good thing for their business. They can sell more liquor and make more money off of it if the women will help them to re-establish the wayside groggery on the ruins of the canteen. This may be eminently satisfactory to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, but, as a temperance man, it is not satisfactory to me, and I blame them for the mischief that will grow out of their meddlesome ignorance.

AN APPEAL FOR PURE BEER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Even out of a pig's ear it may be possible to make something closely resembling a silk purse. We have read of the ingenious Westerner who compounded "commercial oysters" out of corn starch, salt, and gelatine. You may incubate eggs without the aid of the maternal Biddy, although, if she goes on strike, you cannot produce the genuine, original article. But since Father Gambrinus made his first brew nobody has ever yet discovered a method or process for making good, wholesome beer out of anything save good malt, hops, and water.

At the present moment in Great Britain, public interest is about equally divided between the Boer war and the revelations showing that 3,000 persons have been poisoned—more than 100 of them fatally—by cheap, adulterated beer in or near Manchester and Liverpool. This would be an alarming disclosure in any country; it is doubly so in England, for the Englishman regards his beer as a necessity, and he does not beat about the bush when discussing, nor does he apologize for his interest in, his national beverage.

London cable dispatches state that "nobody would be surprised at any time if the epidemic of arsenical poisoning were to reach London, for there are plenty of beers and ale drunk here in which the various corn sugars made with sulphuric acid, glucose, invert sugars, or by whatever name they go, are made to take the place of the innocuous malt and hops." Arsenious acid and arsenic acid in dangerous quantities have been found in many of the beers examined. Consequently a vigorous agitation has begun; the Government's medical inspectors and analysts are at work, and such a high authority as The Lancet calls upon the Government to define beer as a liquid brewed exclusively from hops and malt, and to withdraw the name from the products of any other materials.

When England enacts a law framed on the lines thus suggested, she will merely revive a statute which her Parliament, for some inscrutable reason, repealed in 1842, thereby opening the door to the use of various cheap and hurtful chemicals. Those Manchester brewers who have had to spill 25,000 barrels of beer into the gutters should find it more economical hereafter to make wholesome beer out of tried and approved ingredients.

This aspect of the brewing industry was reviewed by me in a paper read (by invitation) before the State Society of Hop Growers at Rochester, N. Y., as far back as 1883. The phenomenal scarcity and high price of hops in 1882 tempted some brewers to try such substitutes as camomile flowers, quassia extract, nux vomica, cocculus indicus, &c. In behalf of brewers and growers alike, I then suggested and advocated legislation, either State or National, prohibiting the use of any substitutes for malt and hops in brewing. There may be Prohibitionists so fanatical as to contend that all beer ought to be poisonous, but I doubt that there are. At all events, since the Government levies a heavy tax on the makers and vendors of beer, the Government should take care that its own official stamp and sanction are not attached to an adulterated and injurious beverage.

An experience of more than forty years convinces me that the leading American brewers—those who are proud of their products and their reputations—will not stoop to the use of adulterants. Many of the smaller and newer brewers, however, are liable to be tempted, especially while the added war tax tends to diminish their sales and profits.

While hops are a most mercurial and precarious staple, (which I have seen selling as low as 3 cents a pound and as high as $1.30,) according to the abundance or scarcity of the harvest, still, when we know that the hop retains a large percentage of its strength for several years in storage, and that one pound of hops suffices for a barrel of beer, there is manifestly no great hardship entailed on anybody when all brewers are forbidden to use hurtful substitutes for hops.

Germany brews and consumes vast quantities of beer, yet drunkenness is rare in Germany. The law there in relation to brewing is positively Draconian in severity. The Teuton brewer who, tempted by a slightly increased margin of profit, essays to use any substitute for hops and malt in his beer, dooms himself to fine and imprisonment, and his brewery to confiscation. Result: Some German beers are better than others, but all genuine German beers are the pure article.

That the vast majority of our brewers in the United States make pure and wholesome beer is a proposition which nobody will dispute. This they do voluntarily, for our American laws touch only the quantity, not the quality, of the output. There are, however, small or new breweries which possibly, in competition with long-established and popular concerns, are impelled to pare every expense to the bone. When hops suddenly advance in price, doubtless some of these new or small establishments are misled into experimenting with noxious chemicals. No deserving interest will be hurt when either the Federal or the State Government, or both, impose rigorous penalties for such experiments. Our legislation might easily be made effective without being quite as severe as that of Germany.

ANTHRACITE COAL INDUSTRY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The purchase of the Pennsylvania Coal Company and other changes in the companies and firms engaged in the mining and shipping of anthracite coal, spoken of as possibly to follow, call attention to the economic situation in that important industry.

Judged by the standpoint of modern business and trading methods, the manner of conducting the anthracite trade is from force of circumstances crude in the extreme; in fact, it is one of the few great industries in the United States where some measure of operating reform has not been introduced. From a few hundred square miles of territory comprised within the limits of Eastern Pennsylvania, nearly 50,000,000 tons of hard coal are annually mined—a natural monopoly it has been called. Notwithstanding this monopolistic feature, the trend of the times seems slowly against the old profitableness of anthracite mining. Bituminous coal has pressed anthracite hard as a producer of steam; gas and oil compete in certain kinds of cooking and heating, while electricity, through large plants and by means of distributing agencies, may in time become a formidable rival for household use. In railroad management the decline in freight rates was accompanied by economics in transportation not before believed possible, but which so far have balanced the decrease in revenue. In the anthracite trade, such general economies it has not been found possible to introduce; yet the waste is easily seen. Rival railways whose principal traffic is hard coal, run within sight of each other from the coal fields to tidewater, all striving to carry the minimum of tonnage necessary to support their capitalization. One railway will haul its coal eastward over the mountain, while another with mines fifty miles nearer the ocean will transport much of its coal westward over the same mountain, the trains climbing the grades in opposite directions. This is but one illustration of the waste of transportation energy going on all through the anthracite regions. As the few great anthracite companies furnish but little information to each other, the industry as a whole has no business statistics worthy of the name; each is in ignorance of the classification and destination of coal sold by its neighbors, and so, in ignorance of particulars regarding the trade at large which in other great industries are carefully collated, studied, and made the basis of the policy, in consequence there can be no real planning as to the best methods of handling the product of the mines or of increasing its sale. In like manner the process of selling this large output is costly not only as regards the selling expenses, but as to the credits often granted retail dealers. More than all else, the strife for tonnage among the different railways has led the companies to keep open and working certain collieries not by reason of natural disadvantages, are more costly to operate than other mines on other roads, the producing capacity of all the anthracite mines being largely in excess of the present demand. The same strife is the reason for working many collieries on half time instead of fewer mines on full time.

There can be no complete remedy for this state of things until by some form of consolidation each company gives up its independence and shares in the profits of the industry as a whole. No one company would allow another to carry a good part of the coal from the mines to the common competing points, no matter how great the saving, unless the yielding road had a common interest in the revenues of the other. And this difficulty runs through the trade in all its departments. Yet it is not too large an estimate that the companies, if combined, could save in mining and transportation $1 a ton; the saving from the introduction of modern business methods in the general management is no less easy to compute, but would, no doubt, amount to a large sum, the combined possible reduction in cost running into many millions. Nor should it be forgotten that the retail trade in domestic sizes in our large cities is open to the same criticism of economic waste, though not, perhaps, to the same degree. Abundant capital, concentration of interests, large plants capable of handling quantities of coal cheaply and storing the same with a more systematized delivery, would largely reduce the present cost of retailing the domestic sizes.

If we can imagine such a consolidation of the large anthracite companies, and if we dare assume a large saving per ton in consequence, justification for such consideration would demand that the public, the operatives, and the capitalists should share in the new profits. Circumstances as they arise would certainly require some such adjustment. The mine workers, we can now see, will not rest content until they force an increase in the rates paid for mining, and if new profits are seen to be possible, such an increase in wages would be willingly paid. As to a reduction in the prices of coal to consumers, that would be wise and just also, though if we assume an increasing competition in the future, such reduction may be compulsory with or without consolidation. There would still remain a large sum available for interest and dividends on the present basis of values, and for a proper sinking fund, (not now taken into account,) as well as for payments on the increased capitalization which such consolidation would require, since additional money in large amounts would need to be spent before the possible economies could be fully realized.

If such a view of the future, near or distant, in the anthracite industry is not wholly beyond the bounds of realization, then as the plans for unification of interests unfold themselves the public may receive each development with equanimity assured that a common good will in some way be the result. Indeed, the sooner such plans are perfected and the more completely they are carried out, the better for all concerned—consumers, capitalists, and mine operatives alike.

INFANTILE CRIME—THE CASE OF YOUNG STEWART.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The sentence on last Friday by Judge Furman of young Stewart, a boy of fourteen, and clearly a degenerate, to twenty years' imprisonment for manslaughter on his own confession, directs public attention to one of the grossest perversions of justice which has come to light in many a day. This injustice, it is scarcely necessary to say, rests not with the court, but with the law. Certainly, it is strange that the law should recognize no distinction between "a half-developed reasoning animal"—which is a noted Justice's definition of a boy—and a man in the maturity of his intellectual and moral powers. Yet this solecism exists and has resulted in the cruelest perversion of justice.

For example, in one of the Southern States—I think it was Georgia—a few years ago a boy of fifteen was publicly hanged for murder, his chief concern when he was led out to execution being expressed in the inquiry, "Will it hurt?" He seems to have gone to the scaffold with no adequate sense of the enormity of his crime or the nature of his punishment.

Again, five years ago, as it will be recalled, four juvenile bandits, all in their teens, conspired to wreck a fast mail train on the New York Central Railroad, by which two were killed and others wounded. The direct cause of this crime was traced to "dime-novel" reading. The indifference of the criminals evidenced the failure of these young criminals to realize the enormity of their crime.

From Justice Furman's action I judge that he had no discretion in the premises, but was obliged to prescribe the twenty-year imprisonment. If it be so, it would seem that the law should be amended. It certainly does allow discrimination for some felonies; for, several years ago, Justice Sutherland acquiesced in the acquittal of a boy charged with felony, who placed a sandbag on the track of the elevated railway in this city. Like a worthy Judge and good grandfather, he gave the boy a good scolding, which under the circumstances probably did more good to the boy than if he had been sent among older juvenile "delinquents" to acquire a new education in crime. It may not always be advisable to treat boy criminals in Justice Sutherland's merciful way, but it is well to remember that the law has almost always been tender in punishing the offenses of infancy. And here let me say, one of the most celebrated of English barristers—Mr. Hawkins—in his pleas of the Crown, once declared that infants under the age of discretion ought not to be criminally prosecuted at all. Both English and American law allows in some cases this matter of discretion to remain as a question of fact; and this is wise, for everybody knows there are young sexagenarians and decrepit infants, and that precocious instinct often outruns the experience of mature iniquity.

If I am not mistaken, by the English law the capacity of wrongdoing or contracting guilt is not measured by years so much as by the strength of the delinquent's judgment and character, which differs widely in degree in boys of the same age. Certainly, it will not be disputed that one lad of nine may have as great a sense of responsibility as another at fourteen; yet Sir Matthew Hale declared that "it was against nature to suppose an infant under seven years of age capable of felony, but that his capacity might begin at eight! Pike's "History of Crime" mentions a boy of nine who was reprieved after conviction for killing a companion, and one of ten who was hanged for a similar crime. At Abingdon, England, during the last century, a boy of eight was hanged for firing two barns, because it appeared that he was instigated by malice, cunning, and revenge." "But," says the great Blackstone, "in all cases evidence of malice, in order that it may bridge the chasm of doubt created by youth, ought to be strong beyond doubt and clear beyond contradiction."

To return to the case of young Stewart; so far as this young boy is concerned, it may be predicted that prison life will not reform him. Two conclusions seem to be inevitable, (1,) that the law which makes the hanging of a boy of fourteen for murder—and Stewart might have been sent to the electric chair but for the plea of manslaughter accepted by the court—should be changed, and, (2,) that some provision in law should be made to secure the reformation of these boy felons. It also becomes a question of importance, if much of the boy literature which incites to crime might not be put under the ban of the law.

BOOKS WANTED FOR BRONX LIBRARY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Borough of the Bronx, with its population of a quarter of a million, and rapidly growing, has great need of a public library. With the exception of Westchester and Riverdale, which are situated on the edge of the borough, there is not in all this section of our great city north of the Harlem a free public library. The libraries of Manhattan are too remote to be practically available, and they are prevented from establishing branches by the lack of funds.

In these circumstances it has seemed to several citizens who reside in Tremont that a beginning should be made at once. The Bronx Public Library has therefore been founded and will be incorporated. The beginning will be modest, and all services are being cheerfully given from interest in the object. One thousand books have already been received, and are now being catalogued. It is expected that the library will be opened on Jan. 5. These books have all been given to the library. They are of all kinds. There are some books of great value, fresh from the press, and recognized as authorities in the matters with which they deal. But more such are greatly needed. The library should be made strong from the start. An earnest appeal is therefore made to all persons who are interested in the circulation of good literature to contribute books forthwith. The books, if not all new, should be bright, interesting, and wholesome for young and old. Standard works of history, science, art, fiction, and poetry are earnestly desired.

The free public library is an approved agency of popular education, and is one of the most effective of preventive causes in dealing with lawlessness and vice. It is stored mainly with the better thoughts. All gifts may be sent in my care, marked The Bronx Public Library, Washington Avenue, at One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Street, New York City.

PRICES OF SEATS IN THEATRES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your minor editorial department on Dec. 11 you say "the prices of tickets to see good plays well acted are now so high in this town that the poor man, if he goes to a first-class playhouse at all, must sit in the top gallery and peep over the rail." This statement is absolutely true, and the people generally, those of moderate means, are eagerly looking for some one to erect a place of amusement where good plays and good acting may be witnessed at something like the prices which prevailed before the advance of everything during the civil war permitted the jump for seats in theatres from 25 and 50 cents to $1.50.

Glancing over my old files of 1850, I find that the Havana Opera Company, with Ignazio Marini, Lorenzo Sabri, Cesare Badiate, and Signora Tedisco, giving grand operas in Astor Place, in April of that year, for an admission fee of $1 to all parts of the house, and later on, in September of the same year, the same company gave operas at Castle Garden for an admission of 50 cents. Max Maretzek's prices at the Astor Place Opera House for operatic performances were $1.50 for all seats, except when he had special artists, like Signorina Perodi; when he advanced his rates to $2.50.

The Brooklyn Museum advertised the elder Booth as Richard III., the performance to conclude with "The Swiss Cottage," with Miss Julia Turnbull, a capital artist, as Lisette. The admission fee was 25 cents, except parquet, for which 37½ cents was charged for seats.

At Burton's Theatre one could have enjoyed "The Serious Family" and "The Old Dutch Governor," on the same night, with Burton, Brougham, C. W. Clarke, and Mrs. Skerritt in the leading rôles, for 50 cents admission.

At the Broadway Theatre such capital artists as Blake and Wheatley and Mrs. Barrett appeared in "London Assurance," and on the same evening "The Spirit of Gold," with Dyott, Jordan, Chapman, and Miss K. Horn—another fine team—could have been enjoyed, in the boxes or parquet, for 50 cents a seat.

Mitchell's Olympic generally each night ran four pieces, such as "Twelve Months," "Revolt of the Poor House," "The Practical Man," and other amusing comedlettas, with Mitchell, Nickinson, Bland, Walcot, Mrs. Isherwood, and Mary Taylor, for an admission of 50 cents to lower boxes, 25 cents to upper boxes, and 12½ cents in the pit. (the present-day parquet.)

J. W. Wallack, Jr., appeared in "Richard III." at the Bowery, with the drama of "The Flying Dutchman" thrown in, for an admission of 25 cents to the boxes and 12½ cents to the pit. (performances commencing at 7 o'clock.) and John R. Scott on other nights played both in "The Shoemaker of Toulouse" and in "Don Cesar de Bazan," at the same theatre for the same admission fee.

Of course, the theatres and their surroundings are more expensively furnished and the stage settings much more elaborate nowadays, but the talent is certainly no better nor the attractions so great at each entertainment as in the olden time, when the prices of admission were at least one-third the now prevailing rates.

If some such philanthropist as Peter Cooper were to erect and donate for the proper entertainment of the people a theatre in which legitimate drama presented by a first-class stock company could be enjoyed at old-time prices thousands of citizens now forced to look for entertainment at razzle-dazzle performances would vote him a place in the Temple of Fame.

WILLIAM CAULDWELL.

New York, Dec. 12, 1900.

AS TO PLATT'S AID.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you kindly permit me, as one who is taking a deep interest in the purification of our City Government, to point out what appears to me an error in the present tactics of our reform organizations. We have already more than a dozen different bodies, all organized for the overthrow of Tammany Hall, every one of which appears to be inclined to have a preference for playing politics. As far as I have been able to learn most of the well-meaning associations are advancing on the idea that harmony is essential; that it is a condition sine qua non, and that without Platt and the Republican machine there is no possibility of defeating Croker and his hordes. In consequence no action should be taken which will not insure the good-will of the man from Tioga and his followers. The logical consequence of this tendency must be that Platt will either dictate the nominations and the platform, or he will decline to be "harmonious," and I am much afraid that when things proceed on this line Senator Platt will be found, when the proper time comes, outside the breastworks of reform and running a candidate of his own, as in 1897.

Now, I do not desire it understood that I believe success possible without Platt, but I am most assuredly not of the opinion that concerted action with him can be brought about if present tactics are continued to be pursued. If Platt is left a free hand, and if he feels that without his voluntary co-operation failure is unavoidable, he will impose such demands as are impossible of acceptance on the part of the reform forces. But there is such a thing as compelling him to be "harmonious." To understand this, permit me to quote history. Why did Platt not run a candidate in 1894? Certainly Senator Platt, as regards his political methods and morals, was not any better or purer then than he is today, nor was he in 1897, when he defeated the continuance of good government, any more wicked than he was in 1894, only conditions differed. Prior to the nomination of Mayor Strong the awful revelations of the Lexow committee acted as a tremendous educator of the people and started such a reform wave that Platt, nolens volens, had to join, even without being asked, or find himself without any substantial following at the polls. But in 1897 he found a different situation. The reaction against reform ran very high. It was almost as strong as the storm flood for reform had been three years before. "To h— with reform" became the battle cry of Tammany Hall. Many people, especially a large part of the German-Americans, had become disappointed with the administration of Mayor Strong, whether rightly or wrongly is not relevant to my point, but the fact remains. The consequence was that Platt, not finding himself confronted by a strong public sentiment, could play with impunity into the hands of his mate Croker, put up Tracy as his candidate, and defeat Seth Low.

A repetition of this must be avoided. To this end it appears to me the reform organizations must discontinue playing politics and concentrate their energies on a campaign of education, for I am afraid that in the game of politics Platt is a master hand. In my opinion the most necessary thing to do now for the next eight months is a systematic and a thorough education of the people of Greater New York, foreign-born as well as native, and to create such a determined sentiment for the purification of our City Government that Senator Platt will be in the same position as in 1894, that is, compelled to be "harmonious." Then the nomination committees will find as smooth sailing as the Committee of Seventy found in 1894.

PARTY DANGER IN SHIP SUBSIDY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Senate committee has decided to allow the Frye bill to remain in abeyance until after the holidays, thus furnishing an indication that the best element of the Republican Party has become aroused, and from careful investigation has decided that it is not for the best interests of our party. The Committee of Twenty-five selected to frame the Ship Subsidy bill have opened themselves to well-

AT THE THEATRES

Mme. Bernhardt's Recent Performances, with a Word in Advance About Her Acting of the Prince of Denmark.

Obviously it would be ill-advised to say much in advance of the notable dramatic performance we are promised this Christmas week, namely, "La Tragique Histoire d'Hamlet Prince de Danemark," translated out of the English verse and prose of William Shakespeare into modern French prose by MM. Eugene Morand and Marcel Schwob. There have been many female Hamlets on our own stage, but none is very respectfully remembered, and it is no slight to the fame of Sarah Bernhardt, and no premature judgment upon her acting of this Prince, to say that one does not expect it to be much more than an interesting curiosity.

The feeling inspired by the oddest of all the foreign Hamlets lately seen here, however, that of Mme. Bernhardt's fellow-artist, Jean Mounet-Sully, (which met an Anglo-Saxon's inherited views of the way to impersonate the Prince of Denmark at no single point, and was always high-strung, emotional, hysterical, fantastical,) was of wonder at the richness of Shakespeare's genius which could create a work capable of an interpretation so different from that of the poet's countrymen and his Teutonic cousins, and yet so obviously justified by the text if one could take the Mounet-Sully point of view.

The point of view must be borne in mind, too, in trying to appreciate Bernhardt's Hamlet. The tragedy of her native stage is slow and formal, and without a note of relief. Maeterlinck well says of Racine's personages that they dwell remote from humanity on a planet without an atmosphere, and when they cease to talk cease to live. There is a traditional method of acting the French classics to which Mme. Bernhardt and her illustrious confrère religiously adhere. The alexandrines may be "said or sung" like the things in the Prayer Book, but they are never delivered naturally as the spontaneous utterances of the mind and heart, as the competent English-speaking actor delivers Shakespeare's verse. The French tragedian in his tirades always is compelled to "recite."

Fancy the effect upon an artistic mind, trained to such traditions, burdened with the hearse-horse idea of tragedy, of the study of a great work of untrammeled imagination and unfettered genius like "Hamlet," full of the variety, the complexity, the humor, as well as the gravity, the passion and pathos and fantasy of life!

Of course, the French Hamlets are always fantastical, even when they act in metered versions of the play. Bernhardt's is in sensible and coherent prose. A glance through the book reveals no inconsistencies or puerilities. The translators are students who have studied their Shakespeare to some purpose and have something better than a bookish acquaintance with the English language. Of course, much of the majesty and beauty of the verse in "Hamlet" must elude translation. But a prose translation of a masterwork in verse is apt to have less perversion of thought and spirit than one in a foreign form of verse.

With the prose text, too, Mme. Bernhardt's art will not be held in check as in "L'Aiglon" and other poetic dramas. Her Hamlet will have the freedom and the realism (hateful word!) of her Tosca and Théodora. M. Coquelin will appear, briefly, in the last act as "Le Premier Vilain (fossoyeur)," which is French, you know, for "First Gravedigger."

These two famous actors have appeared in the last week in two famous old plays, of the recurrence of which enough was said in the passing notices. The result proved that the art of both is as vigorous and varied as ever. Sarah Bernhardt certainly never acted either Floria Tosca or Marguerite Gautier with more skill and effect. All her skill was needed, too, in both plays, for the accessories in "La Tosca" were never so scant and the familiar drama of shame and tuberculosis was never more carelessly set on the stage.

Coquelin is as Hamlet playing Laertes or the King in both plays. Baron Scarpia is little more than a highly colored copy of Pescara in "The Apostate," a cruel wretch with power who is lustful as well as base. But undoubtedly Coquelin's richly varied acting lends the rôle new life and interest while the simple dignity and rare eloquence of his Père Duval are of great value in the finest scene of Dumas's play.

"Lady Huntworth's Experiment" is an example of as good comedy as any Englishman turns out these days excepting Pinero, and he has not always surpassed it, by any means. There is a specimen of Pinero's craft on view here now, for instance, which is smart and expert enough, but which few of his admirers would care to sit through a second time. Mr. Carton's comedy at Daly's, on the other hand, is well worth a second visit to the theatre. It is original and diverting. Lady Huntworth is a new and pleasant variant of the modern type of woman with a mission. She is lovable, which is rare, as well as audacious and courageous. We like her better than Lady Algy or the burglar woman in "Wheels Within Wheels."

She resembles them both, though, in her defiance of social conventions and her willingness to be thought "bad." Wherefore, a Puritanical person might proclaim her indecent. We know of her as we know of Mrs. Onslow Bulmer, in "Wheels Within Wheels," that she is innocent of the specific act charged against her in the play. But that is all. She is certainly a very knowing lady.

There is not a hint of offense in Miss Spong's acting of the character. This is a charming portrayal and it is associated with excellent acting in every other part in the play.

Humorous allusion to the popular plays of the hour seems to be the principal object of the skits at the music hall of earnest Mr. Fields and tranquil Mr. Weber, rather than actual travesty. Once in a while some bit of clever caricature has been successful there, but I doubt if the crowd that frequents that place of amusement cares to stop to think whether or not any thing done on the stage is a good imitation of something done on some other stage.

The new afterpiece, which is nothing more than a second part for the long current "Fiddle-dee-dee," is bright and taking enough of its utterly informal sort, and will long be popular. E. A. D.

THIS WEEK'S PLAY BILLS.

Christmas week brings a batch of new plays. The Garden Theatre has Mme. Bernhardt and M. Coquelin concluding their five weeks' engagement with "Hamlet"—Mme. Bernhardt in the title rôle and M. Coquelin as the First Gravedigger. The Madison Square Theatre will offer George H. Broadhurst's latest contribution to the stage, a farce entitled "The House That Jack Built." The new musical comedy, in which Miss Marie Dressler will appear Christmas night at Hammerstein's Victoria, is called "Miss Prinnt." The Sire brothers will make another effort at extravaganza at their New York Theatre. They will produce a review which has been titled "The Giddy Throng," by Sydney Rosenfeld and A. Baldwin Sloane. The week's novelty at the German theatre in Irving Place will be the first performance in America to-morrow evening of Walther and Stein's play, "Der Grosse Kaufmann." ("The Wholesale Merchant.") During the afternoons of the week Manager Conried will present Goerner's fairy play called "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs."

This will be the last week of Maude Adams's engagement here in "L'Aiglon." Saturday night's performance will be her seventy-fifth appearance in the Rostand drama. John Drew, who has been presenting "Richard Carvel" at the Empire for over four months, will also take to the road with his attraction after Saturday night's performance. He will be succeeded by the Empire Theatre Company, whose twelfth season in this city will begin on Dec. 31. Henry Arthur Jones's latest play, "Mrs. Dane's Defence," will be the first of their attractions to be presented. Miss Annie Russell and "A Royal Family," which began the season at the Lyceum Theatre away back in September, will enter the holiday weeks with their success not only undiminished but not showing the slightest sign of waning. Miss Russell will continue to impersonate the Princess Alestine for some time to come. This week she will be pretty busy, as she gives nine performances. Three of them will be matinées, which will be given on Christmas Day, Thursday, and Saturday. William H. Crane has thus far held the attention which he gained with the first performance of "David Harum" at the Garrick Theatre, and John Hare will continue with his "Gay Lord Quex" at the Criterion Theatre for three weeks more.

A third week of "Janice Meredith" at Wallack's will further demonstrate the abilities of Mary Mannering as a delineator of a charming character. Notwithstanding the past week is always the worst in the entire season for the theatres, she played to extraordinarily large receipts, and during the latter part of the week to capacity at every performance. "Mistress Nell" will soon have its hundredth performance at the Savoy Theatre. The question of how long "Florodora" will stay at the Casino is not settled yet. It is demonstrated that pretty music and not a particularly clever libretto are sufficient to curry large audiences. During the past week several new songs have been interpolated. Mrs. Leslie Carter will make her farewell appearances this week at the Harlem Opera House in "Zaza" as far as this city is concerned, as the present season is the last she will devote to this play. At the Bijou another successful week has passed for May Irwin in her new play, "Madge Smith, Attorney." Two new features for the ensuing week will be introduced in the way of a new song sung by Roland Carter, and another one for May Irwin.

The holiday fortnight will see the end of "Arizona's" wonderful run at the Herald Square Theatre. Special matinées, of course, will be given on Christmas and New Year's days. The play goes from the Herald Square Theatre direct to Chicago, entering upon a tour of the principal cities of the East and Middle West. Miss Lulu Glaser's engagement at the Manhattan will come to an end next Saturday night, when "Sweet Anne Page" will move over to Brooklyn, there to begin its road season. Miss Glaser will come into New York next season somewhat earlier than it was possible for her to reach here this season. "The Burgomaster" follows at the Manhattan, opening on New Year's Eve. James O'Neill will also terminate his season next Saturday night with "Monte Cristo" at the Academy of Music, and "The Sprightly Romance of Marsac" will finish at the Theatre Republic.

The revivals of plays this week are of some interest. "The Village Postmaster" will be at the Fourteenth Street Theatre. The play will have reached its one thousandth performance to-morrow evening, and in commemoration of the event handsome souvenirs will be distributed. The American Theatre Stock Company will give an elaborate revival of "Faust," and Mr. Donnelly at the Murray Hill Theatre will offer his patrons "Little Lord Fauntleroy." "The County Fair," with Neil Burgess in his original part, will be seen at the Metropolis Theatre, and the sensational melodrama entitled "The Sleeping City" will be performed at the Third Avenue Theatre.

The holiday programme at the Eden Musée offers many attractions to visitors. The interior of the Musée is handsomely decorated and new wax groups have been added. Afternoon and evening concerts are given and the programmes are made up of vocal and instrumental selections. New moving pictures are shown hourly in the Winter Garden, and among them are many mysterious subjects, including Cinderella and the glass slipper. An extra attraction consists of James R. Adams's pantomime company in "Humpty-Dumpty."

THE VAUDEVILLE SHOWS.

The vaudeville bills for Christmas are of a promising kind. At the continuous houses the entertainment is scheduled to continue for thirteen hours of uninterrupted variety show for Christmas Day, and for the remainder of the week the daily performances are nearly ten hours long. A newcomer to Keith's Union Square Theatre is R. G. Knowles, the monologue comedian who returns to his native heath under special engagement to B. F. Keith, after an absence of ten years. He was once the leading comedian of Haverly's Minstrels, and he was Charles the Wrestler to John Drew's Orlando when he was a member of Augustin Daly's company. His "Trifles That Trouble a Traveler" is a laughable entertainment of story, mimicry, and song, and introduces the expert and artistic banjo playing of Mrs. Knowles. Joseph Hart and Carrie De Mar remain a second week, playing "Dr. Chauncey's Visit," in which Mr. Hart has injected a lot of fresh humor and new songs. Tom Nawn and his wife and daughter play "Pat and the Genii," and the remaining part of the bill include Rush Johnstone, the phenomenal bicycler; the Newsky Troupe of sensational Russian dancers, Kitty Mitchell, the Bison City Quartet, Musical Dale, and a group of unusually pleasing small acts.

Jean Marcel's living pictures, James and Rose Finney, natatorial experts, and Staley and Birbeck are the mainstays of the entertainment at Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre. Among the lesser lights are John Kernell, "the Irish Foghorn"; the Three Dumonds; Falke, Semon, Caswell, and Arnold, known as the Olympia Quartet. At Proctor's Twenty-third Street house, the leading specialists are the four Cohans, in the farce entitle "The Governor's Son." Others in the bill are Sisters O'Meers, just from Europe, in a daring high-wire act; Yorke and Adams, Hebrew impersonators; Sager Midgley and Gertie Carlisle, the "kid" farce comedians; Zeno, Carl, and Zeno, aerial throwing act; Ethel Levey, singer; Ed Latell, musical comedian; Mark Sullivan, mimic and monologist. At the Pleasure Palace the notable attractions announced are Billy Clifford and Maud Huth, in "A Chapple's Visit," and Lydia Yeamans Titus, the singing comedienne. The other features are Alice Pierce, the gifted young mimic; John Donohue and Mattie Nichols, in acrobatic songs and dances; Mimic Four, Musical Kleists, Linton and McIntyre, McCale and Daniels, and others. The headliners at Mr. Proctor's One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street house are Sam. Clara, and Kittie Morton, a clever family of singers and dancers; Charley Grapewin and Anna Chance, in the lively farce, "Above the Limit"; three Yoscarys, wonderful acrobats; St. Onge Brothers, bicyclists; Charles Ulrick, barrel foot juggler; Brannan and Collins, Budd Brothers, Frank Walberti, Young America Quintet, and others.

Christmas Day matinées are promised at the music halls, and the announced bills are said to be the best of the season. Not satisfied with a stunning bill of native vaudevillians, a lengthy holiday programme is announced, with the inclusion of Mlle. Kita di Lorenza, a French chanteuse and danseuse, especially engaged for exclusive presentation in America by the Hashim management. The Paris last Summer Mlle. di Lorenza was a big success at her own theatre, the Folies-Parisiennes. Mlle. di Lorenza's engagement at Koster & Bial's is limited to a fortnight. Associated with her in the new bill to be offered for the first time to-morrow are Etta Butler, Dolan and Lenharr, the burlesquers, in "A High-Toned Burglar"; Mr. and Mrs. Hughes in their sketch "A Matrimonial Substitute"; the Holloway Trio, high-wire gymnasts; Jess Dandy, Hebrew monologist; Fred Niblo, joke teller; Nicholls Sisters, black-face comediennes; Stella Lee, Protean danseuse; the musical Colbys, Burton and Brooks singing comedians; Herbert's dogs; O'Neil and Torp, comedians, and others.

The Christmas offering at Hurtig & Seamon's will embrace many prominent in the line of vaudeville. Among the offerings are the Rossow Midgets in their acrobatic and boxing specialty; Blanche Ring, the singer; Edgar Atchison-Ely, in a burlesque presentation of the possibilities of the dress of the future dude; Hall and Staley, Ward and Curran, in a new comedy act, entitled "Josh's Troubles"; Young American Quintet, which will give the new variations of melodies and dances; Todd Judge Family, Lawson and Namon, comedy bag punching and trick bicycling, and little Charlie Rossow in a number of impersonations of well-known characters.

The usual custom will be followed at Huber's Museum this week, when a special holiday bill will be offered. The New Orleans Minstrels have made a decided hit at this house, and are therefore retained for another week. Francisco Lentine, the three-legged boy, will be at the head of the freak department. Other attractions in the curio halls will be the Dexters, mind readers; Giovani's Trained Birds; the Barkers, aerialists; the Hamilton Sisters, Katherine Craig, the long-haired woman; Allen's Punch, and others. In the theatre there will be a double company.

Thatcher's Minstrels at Sing Sing.

George Thatcher, the dean of minstrelsy, whose minstrel company will appear at the Brooklyn Academy of Music Christmas week, has offered the services of himself and his organization to Warden Johnson of Sing Sing Prison for a special performance before the 1,500 convicts on Christmas morning. The company of fifty will participate in this performance, which will begin at 9 A. M.

Miss Gertrude Elliott Married.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—Johnston Forbes-Robertson, the actor-manager, and Miss Gertrude Elliott, sister of Maxine Elliott, (Mrs. Nat C. Goodwin,) were married this afternoon at All Souls' Church, South Hampstead. The wedding was a quiet one. There were no bridesmaids, but the bride was supported by Mrs. Madeline Ryley, the playwright. Norman Forbes was best man.

LIBRARY ON CITY AFFAIRS.

Reform Club Collection the Largest in the World.

Probably few persons are aware that New York City has the best working library upon city affairs and municipal problems in the United States and possibly in the world. This collection has been brought together by the Reform Club Committee on City Affairs, and is located at 52 William Street.

It contains over 4,500 volumes and about 1,500 unbound pamphlets and documents from 300 cities in almost every country of the world. For example, such far-away towns as Corfu, Guayaquil, Antofogasta, Buenos Ayres, Moscow, Yokohama, Teheran, Pietermaritzburg, and Adelaide, are represented either by city documents or special reports prepared by the United States Consuls at the request of the committee. Even San Antonio, which would not supply the United States Department of Labor with data, has just sent in reports. A translation of the Japanese Municipal Corporation act has been furnished by the Yokohama Mail. In a few instances where no reports are printed, manuscript copies of the municipal accounts have been secured, and special investigations made, the results of which are not to be found elsewhere in the world.

For convenience the library is divided into four departments. One contains the general works, treatises, monographs, and pamphlets on municipal subjects, and even those works that contain useful chapters. A second embraces city charters, ordinances, laws, reports, and official documents of all kinds. The set for New York is especially complete, embracing some 700 volumes. A third is devoted to State and National documents upon municipal subjects and those phases of urban life where Federal and City Government come into relation. Files and current issues of magazines and newspapers constitute the fourth, where are to be found periodicals from France, Germany, Austria, Italy, England, Norway, Holland, Canada, and Australia.

Recently a collection of prints and lantern slides has been started, which promises to be a most useful department, especially for lecturers, editors, authors, and reform organizations. Already between 100 and 200 photographs have been secured, many of which have been specially taken for this collection and cannot be duplicated. The number is being added to almost daily.

To expand, perfect, and keep this library up to date a comprehensive system has been instituted. The Department of State has requested its representatives abroad to assist, and, outside of the more important foreign cities, where there are no American Consulates, special agents superintend the work of collection. A thorough canvass is just now being made for the documents of British towns. German cities having been covered in 1899, and flies for twenty or thirty years obtained. In the United States the city officials are giving generous support, and as the Reform Club has members in nearly every city of any size who have taken a great interest in the work, it is evident that the committee will soon secure everything of value upon city affairs.

The number of volumes is rapidly growing, and the present quarters will soon be inadequate. Sooner or later a special building will need to be provided. Neither the new Public Library nor the Boston or Congressional Libraries are making so thorough an attempt to collect and classify works upon city affairs. With the growing magnitude and importance of municipal problems, it is absolutely necessary that some place be provided where everything in the way of works and reports on municipal matters is sure to be found and where there are specialists upon these matters.

The Reform Club Committee has not only collected a fine library, but it has prepared a comprehensive card catalogue, embracing not only book titles, but chapters, sections, and important paragraphs of books, pamphlets, municipal reports, and magazine articles. Thus in a moment one can tell exactly what is to be found in the entire library upon any given subject, and in a given country, or a given city. For instance, one person had occasion to call for information on abattoirs in Freiburg. In thirty seconds a report was in his hands and others on the way. As far as known, no such catalogue is to be found in any other library.

The library has been opened to every one, and the fullest and freest use is desired. All who are interested in municipal topics, who desire data at first hand, or who wish assistance in any direction whatsoever, will find the library most useful and easily accessible. Mr. Milo Roy Maltbie, who is Secretary of the committee and who has made municipal government a study for several years, will gladly assist any one. The committee offices are rapidly becoming the centre for information upon all phases of City Government, and few days pass without numerous requests from European cities as well as from the United States.

THESE TWO LOOKED FOR TROUBLE

Found It in a Bowery Restaurant After Issuing General Challenge.

Everything was quiet yesterday morning in the restaurant of Joseph Dunder, at 141 Bowery, when James McCarthy of 50 East Houston Street and Frank Harrington of 66 Elizabeth Street entered the place. The new arrivals, it appeared, were not in quest of food, but trouble. They offered to fight anybody or everybody in the house, individually or collectively, and in any manner whatsoever.

There seemed to be something so peculiarly tempting about this offer that the proprietor, the three waiters, the cook, and a dozen patrons availed themselves of it instanter.

When McCarthy and Harrington were extricated from the débris later they were first taken to the hospital and thence to the Essex Market Police Court. Their appearance indicated that they had received all that was coming to them. The heads of both men were almost entirely hidden from view by bandages and their clothing and hands were bloody. "You are both sufficiently punished," said the Magistrate. "You are discharged."

The Oratorio Society.

The Oratorio Society will give two performances of Handel's "Messiah," one on Wednesday afternoon and the other on Thursday night at Carnegie Hall. The soloists will be Mrs. Lillian Blauvelt, soprano; Mrs. Morris Black, contralto; H. Evan Williams, tenor, and David Bispham, baritone.

AMONG MUSICIANS

Opening of the Opera Season—Traits of the Singing Heard at the Metropolitan.

The week which has just come to an end was a busy one for those who make it their business to keep track of all that is done in the world of music. There were a round dozen of important entertainments of a public nature, and nearly as many more that could be classed only as private, or semi-private. Most of these semi-private entertainments take place at the Waldorf-Astoria, while a few of them are at Sherry's. Their primary object is to attract patronage through their social pretensions. Usually their musical value is small, though there are exceptions. Of the public entertainments, the opera aroused the largest amount of general interest, though it must be admitted that this was centred in the opening night. The audience on the second evening, when a notably good performance of "Tannhäuser" was given, was small, and that of Friday night, when "Lohengrin" was presented, was not as large as the assembly which gathered to see the gowns, the diamonds, and the social celebrities on the opening night.

The general feeling among habitual opera-goers during the week was that it seemed as if there had been no intermission. Returning to their accustomed places in the auditorium, every one found the same old people singing the same old tunes in the same old way. The season opened with "Romeo et Juliette"—of course it would be that or "Faust"—and then there came a little Wagner, just to give the German singers their first appearances. Looking at the constitution of the company, one can safely predict that there will be a good deal of German opera this Winter, and this naturally gives a secret pleasure to those who cannot or will not forget the rude and arrogant disregard of public taste shown by the stockholders of the house in the ejection of German opera a few years ago. It was said by some of the stockholders at that time that they did not care what the public desired; that it was their opera house, and they purposed to have in it what suited them. German opera did not suit them, and it would have to go.

Go it did, but, like the traitor Catiline, only to return. Here it is back again in all its pristine glory, and these same stockholders have been forced by the demand of the despised public to swallow their dose of Wagner whether they think it is good for them or not. In the first week of the season one French opera, one Italian, and two Wagner works were performed, and this is a fair sample of the sort of thing that will continue. M. Jean de Reszke, the most popular singer of the time, returns after an absence of a year and announces that he will make his reappearance as Lohengrin, which as every one knows he how always sings in German. Well, the stockholders never objected seriously to "Lohengrin." They like the pretty tunes, and the stage pictures are showy, while the manners of the Court of Heinrich I., King of Germany, as illustrated by the Italian chorus, have an antiquarian interest.

It must have been a joy to all who were present on Tuesday night to find that Mme. Melba's silvery voice was still possessed of its limpid purity of tone. Rumors have from time to time floated across the Atlantic that this lovely organ was not in its former state, and there was reason in the opening scenes of Tuesday night's performance to suspect that not more than half the truth had been told. Mme. Melba's singing of the waltz song was neither brilliant in tone nor faultless in execution. But later in the evening most of us recalled that she never did sing that waltz really brilliantly. Her balcony scene was flawless. This is one of her highest flights, and one who loves a perfect emission of a perfect voice, well-balanced phrasing, and a tone quality precisely adapted to the character of the music and the personality of Juliet, can never weary of hearing Mme. Melba in this scene. It must be said for her that her efforts at acting continue to show her realization of the need of something more than mere beauty of voice and tone production, but nature never intended Nellie Melba for a theatrical poet.

It was a further source of pleasure to note that M. Saleza appeared to have recovered entirely from his unfortunate illness of last season. His splendid high tones rang out with the clarion peal of a trumpet, and he sang and acted Romeo with passionate intensity. He is a singer who must always be heard with delight because of the lovely quality of his voice and the sincerity of his work. A word for M. Plançon. In the multitudinous activities of the opera season the singing of the distinguished French bass, now so long familiar to us all, is likely to be passed without much comment. But it should not be overlooked that in all that constitutes elegance of style, in suavity of tone production, in nicety of phrasing, and in diction, this gentleman is a past master of his art. The note of passion is not found in his song, but in vocal technic he is one of the most satisfying members of Mr. Grau's aggregation.

Of the other members of the company heard in the first week there is no need to say more now than that they all seemed to be ready to give their best to this public. Mmes. Nordica and Ternina are two sopranos who will be heard often in the course of the season. Probably because they both sing certain rôles, they will have their companies of partisans. This will do them no especial good nor any serious harm. Each is admirable in her way, and it would be a pity if either of them had to be made a victim of the pernicious American habit of deciding which is the best and then casting all else aside. There is altogether too little discrimination in our public comment. It is regarded as a sort of crime to censure any performance of an established favorite. On the other hand, any person whose work does call for some questioning, no matter for how much praise, must be set one side as not in the first class. This sort of thing is nonsense. Every artist has some moments of weakness, and most of them have shortcomings. In this newspaper, which is devoted to the publication of facts, and not to the airing of vain imaginings, a very earnest attempt is always made to tell the truth, even about the performances of actors and musicians. When their work is good, that is here recorded. When it is not good, that also is a fact; and these columns are the repositories of facts. So far as the opera singers go, the readers of THE TIMES may rest assured that they will frequently be puzzled; for the writer of this department is aware that if he praises Mme. Cavatina or Signor Recitativo one day and dispraises either of them the next, he will create confusion in the minds of those who think that a critic must either like or dislike a performer altogether.

Some harm to public discriminating ability may be done by the extravagant praise of a contralto in the Metropolitan company. The lady is a general favorite. But the voice with which she won her popularity is but a shadow of its former self, except in its lower tones. What the lady has done thus far this season is not singing, but shrieking. There has not been a trace of vocal method nor a taste of art in it. Yet she has received the same praise as she did when she first came here. She is a most estimable woman, has a large family, and works hard to support it. These may be reasons for general sympathy and a toleration of bad singing, but they are not causes for the description of black as white.

***

Those who watch the progress of musical events have been wondering upon what principle the entertainments of Mme. Sembrich are arranged. Before going West she is to give a concert of the sort which she means to give on her travels. It will be an operatic concert, a vastly different affair from her recent song recitals. Most persons would fancy that she would not give this attractive entertainment on an opera night, but the date is Dec. 31. Now, ever since that date was fixed, the inner brotherhood has had its ears pricked up for sounds from the private offices of Maurice Grau, for it is well known that he has not viewed the five-thousand-dollar audiences of Mme. Sembrich with equanimity. Those who knew the habits of the impresario said that he would play his strongest card against that Sembrich concert. And so there is no astonishment at the announcement that on the evening of Dec. 31 M. Jean de Reszke will make his reappearance after an absence of a whole year. And the opera will be "Lohengrin" with a "star" cast.

Mr. De Angelis Returns.

The Broadway Theatre will present as its holiday attraction Jefferson De Angelis and company in a new operatic comedy entitled "A Royal Rogue." The first performance will occur on to-morrow night—Christmas Eve—and the usual Christmas matinée will be given on Tuesday. "A Royal Rogue" is by Charles Klein, music by W. T. Francis, lyrics by Grant Stewart. The scene is laid in Paris during the establishment of the first Napoleonic Empire. Stephanie, the daughter of Baptiste Ballou, a boulevard café proprietor, falls in love with Georges Girondet, the son of a very wealthy widow. This widow is not only rich, but has social aspirations. In order to continue her flirtation with Georges, Stephanie, in a spirit of fun, tells him she is the daughter of the Duc de Chartres, and that her father is hiding in Paris, posing as a restaurant keeper under the name of Ballou. This joke is noised about Paris, and the secret society of Socialistic students, of which Ballou is a member, holds a meeting at the café, and Ballou is chosen to kill the real Duc de Chartres, who is an oppressor of the poor classes. It thus happens that Ballou is deputized to assassinate him. Innocent of the story his daughter has circulated, Ballou enters into the conspiracy to kill the Duc, only to discover when too late that he has the title thrust upon him.

In the meantime, the widow Girondet, with the Royalist party, throws her millions at Ballou's feet, and he gives his café up to the mob of students and grisettes, who take possession of it. Ballou is taken in hiding to the widow's house, and the efforts of the Socialists to discover his whereabouts form the main basis for the complications which ensue. Of course, in the end, it is discovered that Ballou has been the victim of a practical joke on the part of his daughter, and the play ends happily with the marriage of Stephanie and Georges.

New and appropriate scenery has been devised and painted by Frank Dodge; costumes are from designs by Mrs. Caroline Seidle. The orchestra will be under the direction of the composer, W. T. Francis. Mr. De Angelis is said to have a rôle that affords him ample scope for the display of his versatile talents as an entertainer. He has surrounded himself with a company of more than average merit. Miss Josephine Hall has been specially engaged for the Broadway Theatre presentation.

Mme. Sembrich's Concert.

On New Year's Eve, at Carnegie Hall, a grand popular concert will be given, at which Mme. Sembrich will sing for the last time in New York previous to the beginning of the opera tour, and it will also serve to mark the American début of several members of the opera company which will support her. Together with Mme. Sembrich on the programme, Signor Lara, Signor Bensaude, Signor Rossi, and Signor Dado will appear, and a full orchestra, under the conductorship of Signor Bevignani, will assist. Signor Lara is the leading tenor of the company, Signor Bensaude the baritone, Signor Dado the bass, and Signor Rossi the basso buffo. Signor Bensaude is remembered as having been the leading baritone of the Damrosch Opera Company two seasons ago, while Signor Dado has not been heard in America except with the last company that Col. Mapleson brought to this country during their very short season. Signor Lara and Signor Rossi are entirely new to this country. Signor Lara sang with Mme. Sembrich in Berlin and achieved great success. A most interesting programme has been prepared. After the concert the company leaves for Baltimore, where the tour, under the direction of Mr. C. L. Graff, will begin.

A Chance for Composers.

The Manuscript Music Society of Philadelphia offers a prize of $100 for an instrumental composition, not larger than a quintet nor smaller than a trio. Each composition must be inscribed with a nom de plume or motto. The name of the composer must not appear on the composition. But an accompanying envelope must contain the true name and address of the composer, and must be inscribed on the outside with the nom de plume or motto. The work submitted must be absolutely new, not having been published nor publicly performed.

The judges will be three musicians of National repute, not resident in Philadelphia. The successful composition will be performed at the first public concert of the society after the declaration of the prize. All rights in the successful composition are to remain the property of the composer. All compositions must, by April 1, 1901, be in the hands of the Secretary, Philip H. Goepp, 1,524 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

A Christmas Concern.

The subscribers to the Symphony Concerts for Young People are promised a great pleasure on Saturday afternoon next, when the second concert of the series will be given in Carnegie Hall. This is to be a Christmas concert, and the programme chosen by Mr. Frank Damrosch expresses all the solemn, tender joyousness of the season. The old German song, "Holy Night," will be sung by Mr. Leland Langley and a chorus of 300. Mrs. De Voss will sing the recitative, "There Were Shepherds." The programme:

March of the Kings, from "Christus"....Liszt
Old German Christmas song—
"Silent Night, Holy Night"
Pastoral Scène, from "The Messiah"...Handel
Pastoral Symphony.
Recitative, "There Were Shepherds," Chorus, "Glory to God."
Hallelujah Chorus.

THE WEEK AT THE OPERA.

The announcements for the coming week at the Metropolitan Opera House are as follows: Monday night, "Die Walküre," Mme. Ternina as Brünnhilde, Mme. Gadski as Sieglinde, making her first appearance as a regular member of this company; Mr. Van Dyck as Siegmund, Mr. Bertram as Wotan, and Mr. Robert Blass, who will be heard for the first time here as Hunding. Wednesday night, first performance at the Metropolitan of Puccini's "La Bohème," Mme. Melba, Miss Scheff, M. Saleza, M. Gilibert, M. Journet, and Signor Campanari. Friday, "Fidelio," Mme. Ternina, Miss Scheff, Mr. Dippel, Mr. Bertram, and Mr. Blass. Saturday afternoon, "La Bohème," and Saturday night, "Romeo et Juliette," Miss Adams, M. Saleza, M. Plançon, and M. Journet. The first Sunday night concert will take place to-night, Mme. Nordica, Miss Strong, Miss Bridewell, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Messrs. Cremonini, Campanari, Gilibert, and Plançon will appear, and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" will be sung.

NOTES OF MUSICAL DOINGS.

Miss Avice Boxall, the English harpist, is to give a harp recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Friday afternoon, Jan. 25, at 3:30.

The sale of seats for the two farewell appearances of Mr. and Mrs. Georg Henschel on the concert stage in this city will open on Monday morning next at Schuberth's music store, 23 Union Square. These recitals will positively be the only appearance of Mr. and Mrs. Henschel in this city this season.

On Jan. 7, in Carnegie Hall, the annual concert for the Workingman's School and District Nursing Department will be given under the direction of Mr. Henry Wolfsohn. A miscellaneous programme will be given by the following distinguished artists: Mr. and Mrs. George Henschel, their first appearance in this city this season; Ernst von Dohnanyi, pianist, and Fritz Kreisler, violinist.

CIRCUS TRIUMPHS ABROAD

"The Greatest Show on Earth" Welcomed by Foreigners.

AWE OF GERMAN SMALL BOYS

"Tody" Hamilton Becomes a Linguist —Posters and Street Pageant Swell the Receipts.

If there are any disagreeable features connected with the conduct of a big American circus on foreign shores, nothing to indicate that fact could be gleaned from James A. Bailey of the Barnum & Bailey "Greatest Show on Earth." Mr. Bailey arrived in the city on Monday, after a decidedly rough passage across on the Umbria. Even that had not soured him, apparently, or, perhaps, the dinner he had just eaten and the cigar he was smoking provided causes for his optimism.

"It's been mightly smooth sailing over there," he said; "that is, allowing for the figure of speech, a railroad train of sixty cars being our means of carrying the show from place to place. England received us in a brotherly way. Our language was theirs and the simple wording of the circus poster—of course everybody here is familiar with its simple statements of fact—was perfectly intelligible to the Britishers.

"Their reception of the show was about what we looked for. It was in Germany that we rather expected a different attitude toward us might develop. We didn't feel quite so sure of our ground there."

Mr. Bailey paused and pulled hard on his cigar. The smoke curled up and he shifted to a more comfortable position.

"But they surprised us," he said. "They gave us the benefit of the doubt, evidently, and were willing to accept us on faith. That's where we had them. If we had made a lot of promises and not kept them we would have soon been in a fix. But, as it was, after we had played in a few towns, we found that when we went to succeeding ones we were already known. We opened in Hamburg on April 15, and from then to Nov. 10, when we closed the Summer season in Passau, we gave two shows a day right along.

THE GERMANS MYSTIFIED.

"That was the great mystery to the Germans. To see the big tents go up, and come down, the order, and the system, made them open their eyes.

"'Das ist Amerikanisch,' they said.

"One of the things we had to get used to in Germany," continued Mr. Bailey, "was their strictness regarding sanitation. They are insistent on that point, and they inspected the tents, the dressing rooms, and the surroundings with the utmost care. But their ideas are sensible on that subject, and after we got to know just what they wanted we were careful to follow out their instructions. They insist on more exits, too, than we were accustomed to, so we provided for that.

"The attitude of the small German boy toward a circus is very different from that of the American small boy. Over here the boy may admire the circus, and he usually does, but that does not induce any deep reverence on his part for the management. The American boy is willing, if necessary, to carry water for the elephant in order to get admission to the show. But even an elephant's capacity for water is limited. So that means of getting in is confined to a comparatively small number. Well, the American small boy watches his opportunity, and when he thinks no one is looking he's under the tent in a jiffy. Its ten to one that he will be caught before he gets to the seats, but he thinks the game worth the candle.

"In Germany all we had to do was to drive a few stakes, rope in the space, and that formed a dead line that no one would think of crossing. The boys might edge up as far as the ropes, but that marked the extreme limit of their enterprise.

"In most cases our tents are pitched on the open squares or parks, which we frequently have to rent from the Government. In Vienna, where the show is stationed for the Winter, it occupies an enormous building known as the Rotunda. You could put Madison Square Garden in it, all but the towers. We arranged to seat 14,000 persons, although it would have been possible to have a greater number.

"When we first went into Germany we were curious to see how a show would go in which all kinds of people had to rub shoulders. You know, in the theatres and other places of amusement the lines are closely drawn. The rich, the middle classes, and the poor each have their particular location. It was easy enough to arrange that as far as the ring performance was concerned. But in the menagerie it was different. Everybody had to get together to see the animals and everybody did. It came a little strange to them at first. But when the little girl in silks saw the little girl in calico giving peanuts to the elephants she wanted to join in the fun. And she did. And thus a truly democratic spirit was for the first time introduced into Germany."

NO JUMBO AMONG THEM.

"Do you carry many elephants with the show?"

"Eighteen," answered Mr. Bailey, "and some splendid specimens—the biggest is Fritz."

"Does he compare with Jumbo?"

Mr. Bailey shook his head and grew really serious for a moment.

"No," he answered, "he doesn't come near to Jumbo. I don't suppose there ever will be another like him. Poor old Jumbo."

Then Mr. Bailey told something of the number of people and animals carried by the show.

"We have 804 persons on the pay rolls," he said. "We carry 400 horses, 36 ponies, and 14 camels and dromedaries. The monkey family is represented in all of its branches and of course there is no animal known to captivity that is not included in the menagerie.

"The tour through Germany has been a source of joy to one class of our performers—the clowns. Of course the gyrations of the acrob

GOLF ON SOUTHERN LINKS

Florida Clubs Busy Arranging for Big Tournaments.

BERMUDA GRASS FOR GREENS

Professional Match at Belleair in January for $250—Chicago Golfers to Tour Pacific Coast.

At this season of the year the fancy of the golfer naturally turns to the South. The beginning of activity on the Lakewood and Atlantic City links is the first indication that the season on Northern links has practically ceased. As the season advances many golfers, like the birds, flock further southward, and by the middle of January all of the popular links in Florida will be opened for play. Florida, as a golf headquarters, is going to be a more popular resort for the game this Winter than ever before. The long chain of clubs on both the East and West Coasts will be in the full blast of activity shortly after the beginning of the new year, and the series of tournaments will then begin, which will be continued without interruption for nearly three months.

On the East Coast of Florida the five clubs which will hold big events are the St. Augustine, Ormond, Palm Beach, Miami, and Nassau, in the Bahamas. Alexander Findlay, as formerly, will be the professional in chief. There will be some changes in the different club professionals. Arthur H. Fenn, however, will continue in charge of the Palm Beach links, and he will have as assistant Robert Stroumer of Boston, one of the more recent arrivals to this country. George Low of the Dyker Meadow Club of Brooklyn will be stationed at Miami, and Dave Hunter of Baltusrol will be the new incumbent at St. Augustine.

The usual run of handicap events will be held, and toward the end of the season the series of open tournaments, extending from club to club, will be given, terminating with the Florida East Coast championship at St. Augustine. This honor was won last year by C. B. Cory, one of Boston's crack amateurs and a well-known authority on natural history subjects. Robert C. Watson, Jr., is one of our prominent local amateurs who will spend part of the Winter at St. Augustine, and he is sure to make another bid for the Florida championship, which he lost in the semi-final round last year. He won several of the big tournaments, however, and came home with more silver prizes than any other competitor.

EVENTS ON THE WEST COAST.

The elaborate programme which has been arranged by the Florida West Coast Association augers a lively season in that part of the State, washed by the Gulf of Mexico. John Duncan Dunn, who was recently appointed head professional of the five clubs on the West Coast, returned to the city last week from a preliminary visit to his golfing preserves, and he reports that great progress has been made in the improvements to all the courses. The links in his chain of clubs include those at Tampa Bay, Belleair, Winter Park, Kissimmee, and Ocala. They will all open about Jan. 15, and weekly competitions for both men and women will begin at once.

"The full programme of events and dates will be announced early in the year," said Mr. Dunn yesterday, "but besides the minor events there will be a closing series of open tournaments, each lasting three or four days, and extending from club to club, closing with the championship of the West coast at Belleair early in March. The first big tournament of the year will be an open professional match on the Belleair links toward the end of January. A purse of $250 has been offered for first prize. The contest will be thirty-six holes and the event will be finished in one day. Team matches between the different clubs will also be started early in the season, and the first match in the series will be played at Belleair between the home club and Tampa."

Golfers will find a vast improvement in the greens of the Florida links this year. On the West Coast all except the course at Winter Park will fairly revel in turf greens. This will be a decided novelty, and many a golfer will open wide his eyes when he discovers rich grass growing over the former bare spaces upon which his putting had to be done a year or two ago. Kissimmee had turf greens last season, and it was the only one on the West Coast that was so favored. Since that time Bermuda grass has been planted on the Tampa, Ocala, and Belleair greens, and, according to John Dunn, they are in admirable condition.

ADVANTAGES OF BERMUDA GRASS.

Bermuda grass is a vinelike plant, and each shoot has to be planted by hand. It grows close to the ground, spreading out rapidly, and after being carefully rolled gives a smooth, rich surface, which, so golfers say who have used it, makes an excellent green for putting. Particular care has been given to the Belleair greens, for that course has been made the best in the West Coast series. It is an entirely new course, about 2,700 yards in circuit for the 9 holes, with a fair bogy of 35 strokes, according to Dunn. Lawrence Auchterlonie, the Chicago professional, will have charge of that course, and he will begin his duties early next month. All of the professionals will arrive in Florida about the same time, and John Dunn himself will go down for good on Jan. 10.

Florida and other Southern resorts, however, will not be the only localities where Winter golf will flourish with unusual ardor. The Pacific Coast, which came to the front quite prominently last year as a golf centre, will repeat the experiment this season. David Bell, who would now be the open champion of the United States had not Vardon and Taylor entered that event, securing first and second places respectively, and Willie Smith, who was the open champion last year, have mapped out an elaborate California tour. They are both Chicago professionals, being employed at the Midlothian Country Club, and stand in the first rank of resident professional golfers.

Their far Western tour will undoubtedly be financially profitable, for the professionals who visited California last year returned much richer in pocket. The clubs which have engaged Bell and Smith for exhibition matches and instruction are, with the dates, Coronado, Jan. 1-9; Los Angeles, Jan. 10-17; Santa Monica and Santa Barbara, Jan. 17-26; Redlands, Jan. 31-Feb. 5; Del Monte, Feb. 7-28; Oakland, March 1-2; Burlingname, March 3-4; San Francisco, Presidio links, March 5-6; Los Angeles, March 8-15; Coronado, March 16-31. The Californians wanted to get Vardon, but they were unwilling to stand the price when they learned what the foreigner demanded for his exhibitions, so Bell and Smith will have the Pacific Coast entirely to themselves.

Golf Notes of Interest.

Judging from the golf reports from Lakewood, golfers are no better off in respect to the links than their more northern brethren by forty or fifty miles in the neighborhood of New York. More snow evidently fell there on Friday than in this locality, for it is reported that on that account several of the women who intended to compete in the handicap at the Lakewood Country Club withdrew. Snow on Christmas or New Year's would make the Lakewood golfers very disconsolate.

In addition to the usual Saturday handicaps given during the Winter by the Country Club at Lakewood, similar events, in accordance with its past custom, have been announced by the Lakewood Golf Club. A large number of visiting golfers will be present at each course on New Year's Day.

The Yountakah Country Club of Nutley has decided not only to keep its course open all Winter, but to keep the regular greens open as well. There have been conflicting opinions as to the advisability of this method, and those who claim that the greens will not be in such good condition next Spring are awaiting the result with considerable interest as a justification of their opinions.

A new English professional will soon arrive in this country, Davis Brown, who has just been engaged by the Fox Hills Golf Club of Staten Island. He is expected to report for duty next month. It was on the recommendation of Harry Vardon that the Fox Hills Club engaged him. Another opportunity is here presented for the opponents of alien contract labor to make a stir on the definite engaging of a foreign professional. It is seldom admitted that any of the foreign professionals are ever engaged until after their arrival. Some of the Chicago trades unions tried to make trouble for Lawrence Auchterlonie over a year ago, when he arrived to take charge of the Glenview links, but it only resulted in an interesting tempest in a tea-pot.

Sidney Maddock, a well-known Crescent Athletic Club golfer, will soon join the Florida colony of golfers. He leaves in a few days for Palm Beach, where he has a pineapple plantation, but the cultivation of pineapples will not interfere with his participation in the big tournaments of the Florida West Coast Golf Association.

Friends of Willie Dunn, one of the first Scotch professionals to come to America, will be sorry to learn that he is in the Stamford Hospital, Conn., recovering from a serious operation. Dunn has laid out many excellent club links, his latest being the private course for Howard Gould on the latter's new country home near Port Jefferson, L. I.

BULLDOGS IN A NOVEL SHOW.

Rivalry Among Fanciers Led to an Unusual Competitive Exhibition.

A dog show of unique character that had all the merits of a public exhibition and competition with none of the drawbacks, delighted a choice few partisans and breeders of bulldogs in the hotel at Fifth Avenue and Eighteenth Street on Thursday afternoon, and is still being talked of by the fanciers of that particular variety of pedigreed animal. The peculiar circumstances that led to the show being held prevented public announcement of the competition, but a large number of admirers of the bulldog received notice of the event and managed to be on hand to witness the judging of two classes, in competitions that originally were meant to be private matches, but as affairs progressed, became open contests.

The odd show had its beginning in the boast of a member of the Bulldog Club of America early last week that he owned bull puppies that would show better than any of their age on the Continent. The declaration brought prompt challenges from another club member who also is owner of choice young dogs. A match was made, which grew into a sweepstakes, as other breeders heard of the intended competition and expressed the wish to show dogs of their own. By agreement among the exhibitors, two classes were made, one for bull puppies, eight months old or older, and the other for puppies less than eight months old. Aside from this classification, the rules of bench show competition prevailed, and the exhibition took place on the afternoon appointed, with both classes fairly well filled, and an excellent representation of the Bulldog Club of America in attendance, that organization also furnishing the judges. First prizes in both classes were won for John H. Mathews, President of the club, whose puppy, Junk, by Colenso-Odds and Enda, was awarded the blue ribbon in the class for dogs under eight months, while his Bobs for Short, by Diable-Odds and Ends, was victor in the older class. Mrs. John Malloch's Pompon, by Bombard-Whitey, was second to Junk, and E. K. Austin's Chowder, of the same litter as Junk, was third. A. B. McCreary's Clifton Toddy, by Diablo-Clifton Dryad, was second in the senior class. The show was only the beginning of a rivalry that will be continued at the annual bench show of the Westminster Kennel Club, in Madison Square Garden, which will be held from Feb. 19 to Feb. 22. Though the decisions of the judges were not questioned, the exhibitors each assert that in the nearly two months before the Garden show, there will be development, especially in the juniors of the impromptu show, which will require a complete rearrangement of honor places.

The Westminster Kennel Club last week moved into New York in preparation for the coming show, and James Mortimer, Superintendent and Secretary of the bench show, now is in possession of the club's office, in the Townsend Building, Twenty-fifth Street and Broadway. The premium list for the exhibition will be published about the end of the week. The new officers of the club are George De Forest Grant, President; Robert C. Cornell, Vice President; S. K. De Forest, Secretary; Francis O. De Luze, Treasurer, and members of the Bench Show Committee, S. K. De Forest, Chairman; Walter Ferguson, Jr., and Lincoln G. McCormack.

LAWRENCE MILLS FAIL.

The Globe and Prospect Worsted Companies Make an Assignment.

LAWRENCE, Mass., Dec. 22.—The Globe worsted mills and the Prospect worsted mills of this city made an assignment today.

The assignees for both corporations are Thomas Bevington and H. K. Webster. The amount of the indebtedness is said to be slightly in excess of $200,000. Several of the local banks are involved.

The cause of the failures is said to be insufficient business, due to the competition of these mills, which are banded together in the worsted combine. The Treasurer of the Globe mills is A. R. Robinson and Samuel Robinson is President of the Prospect Company. The latter concern is capitalized at $150,000 and has given employment to about 250 persons. The capitalization of the Globe mills amounts to $75,000, and the number employed is 150.

Samuel Robinson is a Director of the Lawrence National Bank, and A. H. Robinson serves in a similar capacity in the management of the Pacific National. The officials of these institutions, however, have no fear that they will be seriously affected. It is estimated that the banks hold about $100,000 of the paper of both mills, but it is said no single institution holds more than $30,000.

The output of the mills is principally worsted yarns, and until within a few years both plants have been considered the most successful private concerns in Lawrence.

ITALIAN ASKS PROTECTION.

Consul at Denver Fears Trouble for His Compatriots.

DENVER, Dec. 22.—Dr. Joseph Cuneo, Italian Consul, made an appeal to Gov. Thomas for protection to his countrymen involved in a threatened race war at Florence. His request was that pressure be brought on the Fremont County authorities to exercise all precautions at their command to prevent an outbreak, and, if necessary, to call out the militia. The Consul also wired the Italian Ambassador at Washington to appeal to President McKinley for Federal aid, should the State authorities be unable to cope with the situation.

The threatened trouble is the result of importation of a number of Italians to work in a smelter for the treatment of gold ore. The Mill and Smeltermen's Union objected, but no serious action has been taken, though threats are said to have been made. Edward Seed, an employé of the smelter, was killed yesterday, apparently by accident, by one of the Italians. This incident has increased the bitter feeling, and a race war has been predicted.

DISFRANCHISE ALL UNFIT

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is a matter of prime importance to our country which appears to be in order at this time. It is the elevation of the rank and weight of the voter.

For some years past I have observed the people in whose minds great reforms begin, the class of thinking and conscientious men who study out the right, make it familiar, and carry on their invincible propaganda through the slow years that at last bring round the moment of righteous attainment. I have seen that those people were thinking on this subject. That they may continue to think, that they may reach a common conclusion, that they may work together to cause our millions to agree with them and secure our National salvation, is the object of this letter.

The Constitution provides that in each State Electors for members of the House of Representatives shall have the qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. (Constitution, Article XIV., Section 2.)

The third clause of this section contained this privilege to the slave States of having three-fifths of the negroes represented in Congress. This clause was changed by the Fourteenth Amendment, in effect as follows: Representation shall be apportioned in each State according to the number of its people, but when the right of male citizens to vote shall be denied in any State, its Representatives in Congress shall be reduced proportionally.

There is a question of reapportionment now before the Nation, and many persons think that the South should lose members in the House because it has violated the spirit of this amendment. It is not denied that the negro's ballot has been taken away by late laws in several States, and that others are about to do the same. These laws were constructed with intent to disfranchise the black man and may have been so well thought out that the courts will hold them good. But whether they be upheld or not, their effect is certainly to reduce the number of Electors, and in common fairness the reduced

TO STOCKHOLDERS OF THE Metropolitan Street Railway Company:

Seven million dollars par value of the unissued authorized capital stock of this corporation is offered for subscription to the stockholders at the price of $180 for each share of the par value of $100 upon the following conditions:

1. Each stockholder of record upon the books of the corporation at the close of business on December 26, 1900, may subscribe for such number of shares of stock as will be equal to seven forty-fifths (7-45) of his holdings or any less part thereof.

2. Subscriptions must be in writing, and must be delivered to the Secretary of the corporation at the office of the Company, 621 Broadway, New York, before 3 P. M., on January 15, 1901, and subscribers must specify in their subscriptions their name and the full amount of stock standing in their name upon the books of the corporation.

3. Payments at the rate of $80 per share in cash or by check must accompany each subscription, and the balance, at the rate of $100 per share, must be paid on or before January 30, 1901, whereupon stock certificates will be issued, except that for fractional parts of a share non-dividend-bearing scrip will be issued, for which, when presented to the Secretary in amounts representing entire shares, stock certificates will be substituted.

4. Default in making the final payment will, at the option of the Company, forfeit the subscribers' rights, both in regard to the stock subscribed for and in regard to the sum paid at the time of subscription.

By order of the Board.

To Abolish Missouri River Commission.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The River and Harbor bill, as it will be reported from the House Committee soon after the reconvening of Congress, will carry a provision abolishing the Missouri River Commission. The provision already has been agreed upon and only waits the formulation of the bill to find a place in it. The decision to discontinue the Commission is said to have been unanimous on the part of the committee, and it is the result of statements made to the committee by members of the House whose districts touch the Missouri on either side. They generally expressed the opinion that the navigation of the stream is so limited as to render the Commission useless.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

It is a merry Christmas, indeed, that Wall Street celebrates. The record is unique. The financial world takes its holiday without any cloud whatsoever threatening. Disturbances and even disaster in variety had been predicted, but only blitheness, confidence, and consequent buoyancy appear in this Christmas exhibit. So it has been ever since the November vote for honest finance. For two months there has been what phrasemakers call a "boom"—and hosts of philosophers have been making daily forecasts of collapse, proclaiming that the pace was too fast, that conservatism was being put aside, that a reaction with bad shake-ups must result. Committed to such apprehensions have been, in large majority, the room traders of the Stock Exchange, the "talent" of Wall Street; and the market has, day after day, had to stand forceful and adroit adverse manipulation. But gloomy prophecies refused to come true, and attacks fell flat—manipulative opposition to the market's buoyancy course being futile—comparison of quotations in October, when political anxieties could be found, and prices at Christmas, with prosperity assertive, presenting a record in market value appreciation that in all Wall Street's history has never been surpassed.

Two classes of people have been the great winners in Wall Street's extraordinary revival—the most important financiers and the general public. The lesser traders of the Stock Exchange have relatively profited little. They "bucked" the market as soon as it displayed strength following election; they proceeded on the theory that precedent was safe to follow, and that, as there never had hitherto been a sharp rally on good election news without a quick reaction, generally leading to material declines, there could now be expected nothing like a sustained movement. Not the professional speculators of Wall Street merely were of this opinion, but the view was taken by the same element abroad. The latter plunged by issuing calls upon American stocks practically "at the market," good for sixty days and more, charging but a small percentage for the risk they took. For $200 and less it was possible to buy a call upon 100 shares of almost any conspicuous American stock, the option privilege to call the stock at the ante-election price extending beyond New Year's. A long list of these stocks has since advanced 20 points or more, and London and Berlin differences in favor of New York on this account amount to many millions of dollars. Wall Street gossip has it that James R. Keene, John W. Gates, James J. Hill, J. P. Morgan, William C. Whitney, Thomas F. Ryan, and the Messrs. Rockefeller were investors in these foreign options. Upon Northern Pacific alone London has been credited with having sold calls beyond 500,000 shares, the price of the stock at the time the call was issued being under $50 a share, between 30 and 40 points below the present price. Upon a single hundred shares of option stock, costing about $200, there is now net profit beyond $300. Upon Erie, St. Paul, Pennsylvania, New York Central, Denver and Rio Grande—practically upon the entire American list quoted abroad—calls were sold in vast volume. The Northern Pacific instance is but illustrative, though the advance there, with the amount of outstanding calls, is considerably above the average of other stocks. One millionaire operator in London, conspicuous in the group of South African gold magnates, is credited with facing losses of over $5,000,000 on Northern Pacific and Erie calls alone, most of which he sold before election to New Yorkers.

Meantime London expressions of financial opinion have continued to take very gloomy views of the American business outlook, foreign pessimism having proved expensive enough, perhaps, to be entitled to the luxury of quoting itself.

Here there is no lack of confidence in business conditions, either as they exist now or as they promise to develop—as is certified in the character of the leadership which the American security market now has, just as it has had ever since the National election proclaimed National good times.

What the general outside public has done in the security market appeared in purchases of substantial volume in September and October, while weakness prevailed, and in persistence in carrying such holdings over election day. And then (instead of liquidating, following "conservative" counsels in taking profits) the public only bought more largely, more confidently. And from that time to this there has been scant sign of wavering anywhere along the public line. Profits mount tremendously. Yet it seems to be the almost uniform testimony of Wall Street commission brokers that the outside element has not been disposed to overtrade, to overload. They have not been pyramiding on thin margins. Had it been otherwise the adroitness of manipulation might have helped the bears to victory on more than one occasion. What the public has largely acted upon has been the undisguised fact that they could depend upon the leadership of stalwarts like Mr. Morgan, Mr. Vanderbilt, and Mr. Rockefeller. And no evidence to this effect has been more convincing than the money market ease prevailing in the face of factors which over and over again in times past have been adversely influential. The public has felt assured of fair play from leaders big enough to command not merely stock value fluctuations, but money market tendencies as well.

Enthusiasm upon the part of the public has been much inspired by disclosures of plans in many prominent corporation quarters of the policy to which Mr. Morgan, Mr. Vanderbilt, Mr. Cassatt, and their colleagues are committed—the policy of concentrating control, eliminating disturbing and hurtful competition, the establishment of stable rates, the enforcement of economic administration. What Wall Street calls "the coal deal" has been particularly influential in this regard.

And an influence hardly less tonic is exercised by exhibits of readiness upon the part of many conflicting interests finally to get together, to stop warfare, to combine for mutual prosper

38, to-day; Parrot 1½, at 49½; Baltic held at 31½, Copper Range at 32½, and Trimountain at 29½. Massachusetts Electric rose ¾ to-day, to 26¾; American Telephone at 155, New England Gas and Coke at 13, and 58 at 93⅞, no less than $83,000 of them changing hands.

The two hours' business to-day was larger than any five-hour day this week. Of the total of 67,100 shares traded in to-day, Sugar furnished 16,700 shares, and transactions in Cocoa were heavy, 13,552 shares changing hands, nearly one-half the business being in these stocks. Agricultural Chemical preferred rose 1 to 81; preferred, ¾, to 27¾, but closing at 27½. Père Marquette was up 1½ at 85. Stock Yards, 1, at 143.

At the local Clearing House to-day money was in good supply at 3½ per cent., and banks that have recently made loans as high as 4 per cent. were marking that same down. New York funds sold at 5, 8, and 10 cents premium.

Call money is still held very firm at from 5 to 6 per cent., with occasionally concessions made to favored customers of a rate a shade better than the first-named figures. Time money on mixed collateral is quoted at 5 per cent. for four to six months. On very choice collateral 4½ per cent. might be quoted.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 22.—The excitement in New York did not arouse the Philadelphia market from its lethargic state, but, on the contrary, only aggravated the languor by diverting attention from the strictly local securities. All the larger commission houses were busy, but their business was all in the New York market. What little animation was shown emanated from trading in Alkali, Marsden, United Gas Improvement, Lehigh Valley, and Reading first preferred. Withal the market possessed a strong pulse and advances of a fractional range were made in nearly all the active shares.

The heaviest trading was in Alkali, one house selling over 14,000 shares, the supply emanating from the same source that has been furnishing the stock for the last two weeks. The execution of to-day's orders cleared up the selling for the account in question. There were advances of a point in American Railways, ⅝ in Marsden, ¼ in Cambria Steel and Lehigh Valley, with less important gains in Union Traction, Philadelphia Electric, and the Readings.

The close was firm at the following bid and asked prices:

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Trading in the outside market yesterday was extremely light, except in a very few issues. Nevertheless, some substantial advances were recorded, and the fact that large gains were made on very small purchases of stock seemed to indicate that the market is really strong, notwithstanding the relative dull ess which has prevailed for the past few days. As throughout the week, there was a fair amount of trading in several bank stocks, and most of these showed notable strength. The steel stocks, which for several days had been quite active, remained strong, but did not supply much of the day's business.

***

DISTILLING OF AMERICA was the feature of the industrials. Probably less than 500 shares of the preferred stock changed hands, yet on this small amount of trading the price rose as high as 29½, at which price the stock closed with a net gain of 2 points for the day. No stock sold above 28¾, and the final advance was unaccompanied by sales. The common stock was not as strong, and it advanced much less than the preferred. It sold as high as 6¼ and closed at 6⅛ bid, a fractional net gain.

***

UNITED RAILWAYS OF ST. LOUIS preferred sold to the extent of 300 shares at 66½, and later was offered at that figure, with the best bid at 65¾. This showed a net loss of 1¼ points. The bonds were steadier than the stock, but were very dull. St. Louis Transit shared the weakness of United Railways preferred, and was offered at 18½, with the best bid at 17. No sales were reported.

***

TEXAS AND PACIFIC COAL developed considerable strength, being bid up from 75 to 87½. No stock was encountered on the rise and none was offered at the close.

***

BANK OF COMMERCE sold up to 330 and closed at 328 bid, a substantial advance over yesterday's prices.

***

NATIONAL CITY BANK declined on fairly active trading to 540. It closed at 535 bid, with stock offered at 545.

***

HANOVER NATIONAL BANK showed much strength, and on light transactions sold up to 520. At the end of the day it was 515 bid, with no stock offered.

***

Closing quotations yesterday, compared with those of the previous day, were as follows:

STOCK MARKET RECORDS

Registered Transactions for the Week 7,959,427 Shares.

Phenomenal Business Culminates with Dealing in Upward of 1,000,000 Shares in Two Hours.

The two hours' business on the New York Stock Exchange yesterday exceeded all records in the matter of actually recorded transactions. From 10 to 12 o'clock no fewer than 1,006,179 shares were traded in, an amount that would be considered, even in the present active market, as a very fair full day's total, while during the dullness of last Summer it would have been looked upon as a creditable week's record.

The enormous business of yesterday fittingly brought to a close the most phenomenal week's trading in the history of Wall Street. Recorded transactions foot up close to the 8,000,000-share mark, or, to be exact, 7,959,427 shares, a daily average of more than 1,326,500 shares. This is on a basis of 300,000 an hour, or 50,000 every minute, that the Exchange was open for business.

The daily totals that went to make up this aggregate are herewith given:

	Listed Shares.	Unlisted Shares.	Total Shares.
Monday	1,203,886	283,796	1,487,686
Tuesday	1,022,640	232,276	1,255,916
Wednesday	1,142,861	280,139	1,423,000
Thursday	1,242,101	227,268	1,469,369
Friday	1,017,877	229,010	1,246,887
Saturday	784,250	221,929	1,006,179
Total	6,181,682	1,474,745	7,959,427

All of the important properties were dealt in on an enormous scale during the week. Here are some of the totals:

	Shares.		Shares.
Erie	704,212	Michigan Central	405,642
North Pacific	640,388	Union Pacific	345,963
Southern Pac.	590,275	Readings	266,180
Sugar common	465,987	St. Paul	272,579
Southern Pacific	456,165	Missouri Pacific	215,680
Baltimore & Ohio	409,641

Considerably more than the whole common share capital.

Many of the less prominent shares were also phenomenally active and some of them scored sharp advances. American Coal, on small sales, rose 15 points; American Express jumped 13; United States Express, 6; Peoria and Eastern, 5½; Hocking and Des Moines preferred, 5. Sugar led the active shares, with a gain of 14⅞, Erie second preferred advanced 9⅞; Northern Pacific, 9; Brooklyn Rapid Transit, 8¾; Erie first preferred, 7¾; Wisconsin Central preferred, 7½; Missouri Pacific, 7; Erie, 6; Manhattan, 5½; St. Paul, 5; Atchison, 3¾, and Southern Railway, 3½.

There were 256 distinct issues traded in during the week, and of these 107 made a gain of 1 point or more, while only 21 recorded losses of that amount. In nearly all the other 78 properties small gains were made.

Next to yesterday's total the heaviest Saturday's business was on Nov. 10, when 821,000 shares were traded in. Previous to the week just ended, the record was 7,397,526 shares, the total of the week of Jan. 28, 1899, when the great industrial boom reached its height. In the week of Nov. 17 last the dealings amounted to 6,682,056, while in that of Nov. 24, 6,810,012 shares were traded in.

THE PRICE OF IRON ORE.

Lake Superior Bessemer Ore Association Likely to Fix It for 1901 at About $5 a Ton.

Special to The New York Times.

DULUTH, Minn., Dec. 22.—Steelmaking concerns all over the northern part of the producing districts of the United States are just now figuring with a good deal of interest the probable prices to be fixed for 1901 by the Lake Superior Bessemer Ore Association. This association meets late in January, and prior to that time the prices fixed by it more than a year ago are nominally in force. These are based on $5.50 for the supposititious standard ore, which is an ore running 64 per cent. iron. Based on this, a standard is set for non-Bessemers of the Lake Superior country, which in the past year has been $4.05 a ton, and also on Mesaba Bessemers. The association controls the price of ores, and sometimes sets a mark for the shipment of mines in the lake region, thus closely defining the mining business of the Lake Superior country.

There is doubt now as to what the 1901 price may be, and guesses go all the way from $5.75 to $4.50 a ton. Information here in advance of the action of the association puts the probable price at not far from $5 a ton higher than any of the estimates so far made. It is probable that very little standard old range Bessemer will be sold at less than this. This will make the cost of ore entering into a ton of steel about $10. Such a price will be to the advantage of the great concerns that own their own mines, and will drive others into the mining business, for all $5 a ton there is a handsome profit to the mines. The only company controlling practically all their ore supplies are the Carnegie and Federal and National Steel.

The entrance of steel making companies into mining has been on so large a scale that the mines producing standard ores and sold on the open and unrestricted market are limited to a very few companies, by small concerns, mostly of the Gogebic range. There is not one independent mine on the Vermillion range, and the Mesaba is not in the association while the Menominee range is almost all non-Bessemer ore.

The exact price to be placed on Bessemers for the year will be determined more or less on the action of the great producing-consuming interests, and it is to their interest to have the price at a high point, for the higher the ore costs, the more they will make, being buyers of no ore or of a relatively small amount.

The price of steel in American will, of course, be gauged very largely on what figure is set for ore.

At $5 a ton the mines will make a greater profit than last year at $5.50, for the freight to market, which the price includes, will be at least 50 cents a ton less than a year ago, and all sliding scale royalties will be lower. The probability is that freight will be nearer 60 cents off than 50. There has been a great profit for the mines the present year.

Russia Buys Welsh Coal.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 22.—The Southwest Russia railroads have bought 7,000,000 pood of Cardiff coal at 23 copecks per pood, equal to about $6.40 a ton, and 1,000,000 of Silesian, at 13 copecks per pood. An English agent has engaged 15,000,000 pood of Russian iron ores for export.

ORE CARRYING RATES REDUCED.

Minnesota Commission to Serve Orders on Two Roads.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 22.—Orders have been issued by the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission to be served on the Duluth, Messabe and Northern and on the Duluth and Iron Range, compelling a reduction in ore carrying rates as follows:

The rate of the Messabe Road, which has been 80 cents per ton, is reduced to 60 cents; the rates in effect on the Duluth and Iron Range Road, 80, 90, and 100 cents, are reduced, respectively, to 60, 70, and 80 cents.

As ordered by the commission, the rates contemplate a reduction in the net earnings of the Messabe Road of about $1,000,000, which, on the basis of last year's surplus, would leave a net income of $451,089. If the same per cent. of reduction is caused in the net income on the Duluth and Iron Range, their net earnings will range in the neighborhood of $360,000.

The commission believes that these net incomes represent a fair return on the capital invested, and upon that basis they contend their action is not unjust. It is not known what course the roads contemplate, since there is no traffic in iron ore during the Winter months.

Company Gives Mortgage for $3,500,000.

SUSQUEHANNA, Penn., Dec. 22.—The largest mortgage ever recorded in Susquehanna County is now in the office of the Register and Recorder, in Montrose. It is given by the Elk Hill Coal and Iron Company to the Norton Trust Company, trustee for coal lands in Lackawanna, Susquehanna, and Wayne Counties. The mortgage is dated Dec. 1, 1900, and is for the sum of $3,500,000. The Government was enriched $1,750, the amount required for the revenue stamps.

'RASTUS.

The Story of a Pet Robin.

By Leander S. Keyser.

A severe storm was the primary cause of the unusual career—unusual for a robin—which 'Rastus was destined to lead. Naturally his life should have been spent in the free outdoors, but fate—or whatever it is that determines the fortunes of birds—had decreed otherwise. The storm came toward evening, and caused the human inhabitants of the town not a little solicitude; but happily it passed without carrying out its threats of destruction, and then the night settled down into one of ordinary calm.

Indeed, at dusk the weather was so pleasant that a certain woman was able to attend the midweek prayer meeting of her church. On her way to the service she saw a young, half-fledged robin hopping before her on the sidewalk, and chirping for the parents and mates from which he had been so ruthlessly separated. It was evident that the storm had blown him from the roof-tree—if a bird's domicile can be called by that term—and there was no telling how far he had been carried by the tumultuous winds. A little feathered waif, indeed, exposed to all kinds of dangers from prowling cats and wanton boys, and all unprepared to provide his daily rations. So the kind-hearted woman decided that it would be an act of mercy to take him in charge. Lifting him gently in her hand, she wrapped him in her handkerchief and carried him to the meeting, and thus it happened, in the course of avian events, that the little foundling's introduction to human society was strongly flavored with religion, for which reason he should have become a tractable and pious bird.

After the service the bird was borne home, where he became the special ward and companion of another lady of the house, one of the teachers of the city schools, an intelligent woman, who has a penchant for feathered creatures. From now on he became a real favorite, receiving every attention that loving hands could bestow. Quite tame and unsuspicious, he would sit on his mistress's hand, open his mouth and chirp and gulp down the pellets of food that were offered him. He was not imprisoned in a cage, but was given the keys of the house, so to speak, and made himself very much at home, flitting from one object to another, chirping for his dinner when hungry, which was the greater part of the time, and frequently indulging in his favorite pastime of perching on the heads and shoulders of the people who came near him.

As time passed he developed character as well as flesh and bones and feathers. He was a somewhat staid and dignified bird, but so nervous and excitable as some individuals of his kind. Each bird has idiosyncrasies. No two birds even of the same species are precisely alike in temperament. Of course, this gives almost infinite variety in the bird realm and prevents avian society from growing humdrum. One thing, however, nettled the young robin as soon as he was old enough to notice the behavior of the people around him—he would not stand teasing. Even if some one scraped a foot about on the floor it would irritate the bird almost beyond endurance, causing him to fluff up his feathers, spread his wings in a threatening manner, and viciously snap his mandibles at the supposed offender. It would appear that the religious training he received at the prayer service did not excise all the natural depravity from his nature, in which respect he seemed to be a great deal like most of his human relatives.

Still, in the main he was a docile pet, and good-natured withal. Perched on his mistress' shoulder, he would accompany her to the Post Office, a distance of at least five blocks, and back, apparently enjoying his ride, and showing no signs of fear. Of course, this was while he was still too young to be suspicious of mankind in general. Perhaps it may be of some interest to know how he came to be christened 'Rastus. His guardian's youthful son, who had been away from home for several weeks and had never seen the bird, came into the room one day, when Master Robin straightway flew to the boy's arm, and sat there chirping for food. The lad promptly called out, in the well-known slang phrase, "Hi, there, 'Rastus!" and from that time the name of 'Rastus was fastened upon the pet.

Interesting as her fondling was, the lady found him somewhat of a burden, especially as she desired to go away from home for a time, and had no one in whose care she could leave him. So she telephoned to me, asking whether I would accept him as a gift. My reply was a decided affirmative, for so valuable a prize was not to be lightly cast aside. Perched on her shoulder or hand, she carried the little darling all the way from the north to the south side of the town, a distance of not less than eighteen blocks, and he made no effort whatever to escape, although by this time he knew quite well how to use his wings. His "little journey in the world" took him through the busiest business part of the town.

He was placed in a large cage with a brass threshold of about the same age, and at once exhibited his irritable nature by snapping sharply with his mandibles at his new-made acquaintance, which showed fear of him and became quite nervous. It was interesting to note how staid the robin was, sitting quietly on his perch and looking about wisely, as if he were trying to reason out the cause of the change in his surroundings, while, in sharp contrast, the thrasher flitted about in an excited way. But restless made the thrasher's life miserable with the repeated snapping of his beak and his threatening gestures, and so he was transferred to a cage of his own. In large part he still had to be fed by hand, opening his yellow-lined mouth for the dainties presented to him. By and by, however, he refused to take his food in this juvenile way, but picked it up in the manner of adult birds, learning the fine art by degrees and through his own unfolding intelligence.

Even before he had learned to dine in the most approved bird fashion, he began to twitter a sweet little tune, with his mandibles closed, the sound coming from his swelling throat. All Summer long he was one of my brightest pets, occupying his cage in the rose on my front porch. While not lavish of his melody, he sometimes delighted me with a solo in a loud, cheery tone that bore some likeness to the robin's well-known outdoor carol.

Have you ever seen a bird taking a sunbath? 'Rastus was very fond of a bath of this kind, as were all his feathered comrades of the porch. When his cage was set in the bright sunshine of the morning he would fluff up all the plumes of his body, spread out his wings and tail to their furthest limit, until each feather and quill stood out separately, and then bend his body in the most grotesque way at the proper angle to get the best effect from the luminous deluge. He and his comrades made a laughable and pleasing picture when posing in this odd posture.

Nothing pleased 'Rastus more than to be given the freedom of my study. He was especially fond of nosing around on my writing table and scattering my pencils and penholders to right and left. He would jab a pencil with his bill, and if it would fly from him he would follow it in a gingerly way, but if it glanced toward him, as sometimes happened, he would leap up and scamper off in the most ludicrous style, only to return to the charge the next moment. It also pleased him to toss articles over the edge of the desk and listen to the sound as they struck the floor. How knowing he would cant his head and look up at me, as much as to say: "Wasn't that a cute trick? Don't you think me a smart bird?" Another of his favorite amusements was to perch on the top of my typewriter and ride back and forth on the carriage while I operated the machine.

It was comical to see him try to stand on the smooth, rounded end of the rocker of one of my chairs. The surface was so smooth that he could not keep his footing upon it. How he scrambled and fluttered and how angrily he scolded as he made the futile effort! When I pursued him about the room he would try to hide under the chair seats, perching on the rungs and rockers.

In September, the weather being very pleasant, I decided to give him his freedom in the great outdoors. He mounted into the trees of the yard or to the banisters of the roof porch and chuckled and sang in a real transport. When he grew hungry or thirsty he would return to the cage and satisfy his wants, and then start off on another tour of investigation and fun. Days passed and he came and went at will. Sometimes he would not be seen for a whole day, but in the evening would come to the windowsill and knock with his beak on the pane as a signal to be granted admittance. Of course, his request was always heeded. In the morning, as soon as he had breakfasted, he was anxious to get out of doors.

But one evening he failed to return. Several days passed, bringing no 'Rastus, and so we sorrowfully concluded that he had fallen a prey to an owl or a cat. After a few weeks, however, we learned that he was in the possession of one of our neighbors living in the next block. He had come to the house for several days, the woman told me, had taken worms from her hand, had perched on the balustrade, the window sill, and even on her hand and lap, had flown into the house through the open window, and hopped about on the floor, and had in many ways made himself so familiar that the woman's heart was completely won, and so she got a cage and took him in charge. She is so charmed with her pet that nothing would induce her to part with him. If she leaves him out in the room and then sits down to eat an apple, he will fly to her hand and contest for the choicest part of the fruit.

He has become quite a musician. Not having had tutors of his own species, his musical productions are not precisely like the "Cheerily, cheerily, cheer-up" of the robins in their wild state. He pipes very loudly, imitating certain simple runs whistled for him by his mistress. Her husband plays the clarinet, and the family are sure that 'Rastus produces some of the strains of that instrument. At times he whistles so loudly that, when the windows are open, he can be distinctly heard by the neighbors across the street, even as far as the barn in the rear yard. His mistress whistled "Bob-White!" to him, and 'Rastus clearly mimics both the tone and the syllabling.

A favorite diet is hackberries, which his friends frequently give him. In this connection we have made an interesting discovery relative to robin habits. 'Rastus will swallow the hackberries whole, and, then, after a short time, will utter a kind of chirping sneeze, jerk his head quickly, and fling the stones of the fruit from his throat, with the skin and pulp entirely scaled off. His craw evidently makes use of the available parts of the berries and then ejects the indigestible portions according to some wisely devised law of robin nature. That seems to be a discovery worth making and recording.

Among many other interesting tricks, the ruddy-breasted pet takes special delight in rolling a rubber ball around on the floor by dabbing it with his beak, and when it chances to bowl toward him, he skips out of the way with a merry cry, which is very much like a laugh.

WILL STAY IN PHILADELPHIA.

United Gas Improvement Company Is Not Coming Here.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 22.—In refutation of the rumor which comes here from New York, to the effect that the offices of the United Gas Improvement Company will be removed to that city, W. W. Gibbs, who organized the company and is now a member of the Board of Directors and the Executive Committee thereof, said to-day:

"The United Gas Improvement Company will not move its headquarters to New York next year or at any other time. The permanent headquarters of the company at Broad and Arch Streets represent a very recent investment of $1,250,000, and it is not at all likely that they will be abandoned for years to come, if ever. New York offers no especial inducement to the company that I know of."

Thomas Dolan, President of the company, said: "Don't move us over to New York before the paint is dry in our new offices here. The United Gas Improvement Company will retain its headquarters in this city as long as I have anything to do with its management."

LEGAL NOTES.

DANGERS FROM ELECTRICITY.—On the night of the 2d of September, 1898, while Giovanni Caglione was sitting with a friend in front of his small fruit store, 855 Ninth Avenue, he saw, on turning his head, that the awning in front of 857 was on fire. He uttered an exclamation, sprang up, ran to the store, and attempted to blow out the fire. As he did so he threw out his right hand and at once fell dead, having been killed by a current of electricity passing through his body. In Marie Caglione's suit as administratrix against the Mount Morris Electric Light Company, for damages for the death, a judgment on a verdict rendered in her favor has been affirmed by the Appellate Division. Justice Rumsey, giving the unanimous opinion, said the evidence warranted the finding that the current had been transmitted through wires placed by the company at this place, where it had, up to January, 1898, maintained an arc light, upon its circuit, to the iron framework of the awning, and thence to the iron front of the store, and as Caglione put out his hand he probably touched the store front and was killed. The company was bound to know, the Court said, that a current of so great a force as its necessities required it to use was, if it escaped, dangerous to human life. It was bound to use all the care which the handling of so dangerous an element would require, especially where the dangerous element was carried along the streets.

ACCIDENT FROM GRIPMAN'S NEGLIGENCE.—Carrie F. Cobb, while crossing Broadway, near Grand Street, under escort of a policeman, was struck by a down-town car of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company and injured. She was just about to step off the outside rail of the west track, as she claimed in her suit against the company, when her progress was impeded by a wagon which came between her and the sidewalk, and she was unable to get off the rail until she was struck. The evidence given for the company tended to show that the gripman had slowed up in response to a signal of the policeman, and that Miss Cobb and the policeman had stepped off the track, when the gripman, supposing they were out of the way, allowed the car to go ahead. A wagon at this time drove on the track so close to the car that the gripman was unable to check its speed, and the plaintiff was struck. The Appellate Division has affirmed judgment on a verdict given in favor of the defendant. Justice Rumsey, giving the opinion, says that upon the evidence the jury might have found that the policeman had gone entirely over the tracks and was clear of the rails, while Miss Cobb was still upon them. In reference to the Court's refusal to charge that the gripman "was not bound to anticipate that the policeman, having once crossed the track, would step off the tracks and then step back into a place of danger," Justice Rumsey says: "The fact that the policeman had stepped back upon them is not decisive upon the negligence of the defendant toward the plaintiff, unless the p... also had stepped off and then back again. No matter where the policeman was, the gripman was not justified in starting his car ahead unless the plaintiff had also reached such a place outside the rails as the jury might assume to be a place of safety."

RIGHT TO ABROGATE CONTRACT BY INSURANCE COMPANY.—Henry P. Townsley was appointed on the 1st of October, 1896, by the Bankers' Life Insurance Company of the City of New York its general manager, under its constitution and by-laws, with the title of General Manager of Agencies. The contract with the company provided that, with the approval of the Board of Managers, he should have "entire control of the agency affairs of the company, with power of appointment and removal, provided that the compensation of all agents is included in the compensation herein allowed to the General Manager." Mr. Townsley was to receive as compensation, including his expenses and disbursements, except for printing, a commission of 85 per cent. on all first-year premiums, and, in addition, a renewal commission of $1 on each $1,000 of insurance renewed. He was to have placed upon the books of the company certain amounts of new insurance each year. The contract was to continue "during the faithful performance of his duties," for ten years, unless sooner terminated by mutual consent." The following December Mr. Townsley, with Jonathan Kelshaw, one of the company's managers, conceived the idea of turning out the executive officers of the company and electing others. The company was transacting business under the co-operative or assessment plan, the members being those with whom the company had made contracts of insurance. A circular was sent out by Townsley, without the knowledge of the company's officers, to these members, with proxies, by which Kelshaw was appointed to represent the members and to vote for them at the company's meeting. On March 27, 1897, the company's Board of Managers declared the contract with Townsley abrogated and annulled. He then sued the company for damages. A verdict rendered in his favor on the trial was yesterday reversed by the Appellate Division in this city, in an opinion by Justice Ingraham. The Court holds, unanimously, that the plaintiff, as an officer or employe of the company, owed a duty to its members to be honest and faithful in relation to them, and that it was a distinct violation of that duty when he, acting as such employe, obtained from policy holders these proxies by the representations he made, when, in fact, he intended to and did use these proxies for the purpose of changing the officers of the company and electing others in their places. On the plaintiff's own version, the Court holds he was guilty of a breach of the duty that he owed to his employers, which justified them in dismissing him. In conclusion, Justice Ingraham says: "But if there can be any doubt upon this question, it seems to me entirely clear that the defendant was entitled to have the jury instructed as requested, and that the questions submitted to them should have been whether the plaintiff issued this circular to the policy holders and obtained proxies from them, intending to produce the impression that the proxies if returned were to be used to re-elect the present officers of the company, when, in fact, it was the intention of the plaintiff to use them, and he did so use them, to defeat the officers and elect others in their places; and if the jury so found, it was their duty to find for the defendant. But, as before stated, upon my view of the testimony, there was no dispute but that such was the intention of the plaintiff and such the result of his action."

Lamps, China and Bric-a-Brac.

Great Reductions of Many Rich Treasures.

In the Basement.

Many little lots, the last of large lots, have been marked at ½ price. Here, also, some very late arrivals—imported goods—that should have been here several months ago, have just been unpacked and marked at special prices. Limited quantities, of course, but some of the biggest bargains—all the ones and twos of a kind, and just right for presents, too. These are brisk selling times and many of the articles will be sold out very early, so we refrain from particularizing to avoid the risk of disappointing you. You will find them among the bric-a-brac, fancy china cups and saucers, plates and the like, onyx cabinets, handsomely decorated lamps, metal lamps, jardinieres, Bohemian glass flower vases, rose bowls—and—and—well, come and see—the china store is a beautiful sight, anyway.

BOERS TAKE BRITSTOWN

Also Cut the Railway South of De Aar Junction.

REINFORCEMENTS FOR DE WET

Dutch in Cape Colony Say Whole District of Victoria West Will Join the Raiders.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—Lord Kitchener's dispatches, breathing a confidence hardly justified by their contents, are almost the only available news from the seat of hostilities in South Africa; but telegrams from Capt Town depict the situation in anything but roseate views.

Without believing the assertion of the Transvaal Agency in Brussels that 6,000 Boers have invaded Cape Colony, it is quite evident that the invasion was a serious and well-planned affair. In connection with this a correspondent sends an extremely interesting letter, dated Bethulie, Dec. 1, describing Gen De Wet and his doings.

"De Wet has never been taken seriously enough," says the correspondent. "It is of little use to pursue him, as he fights a rear guard action, and gains twenty miles while he is being fought. He is a born military genius, whose wonderful powers have kept up this phenomenal resistance.

"Once he falls, the whole thing could be crushed in a fortnight. He has every single commando under his supervision. All his patrols and columns march and countermarch on his order. The forces under his command have been reduced by his strength of will to a properly organized army, moving at his word. The sooner the British rid themselves of the idea that De Wet's forces are a mere rabble, wandering aimlessly, the sooner they will grasp the need of the determined effort which is necessary to capture him."

The Cape Colony Cabinet had an important sitting yesterday (Sunday). It appears that the Boers have destroyed a railway bridge 90 feet long about twelve miles south of De Aar, and that the Cape mails have not arrived at Bloemfontein for three days.

Further anxiety has been caused in Cape Town by the discovery that, during the last two months public bodies in out of the way places have requisitioned supplies of dynamite. The Colonial Government is now endeavoring to recover possession of these explosives, and is removing all stores of arms and ammunition from suspected depots.

Other advices from Cape Town represent the Dutch element in Cape Colony as greatly elated over the southward progress of the Boers, and as boasting that the whole district of Victoria West will join the raiders.

It is suspected in Cape Town that the force travelling from Zoutpan's Drift is not a body of Boers, but one of Colonials, hastening to join the invaders.

The Pietermaritzburg correspondent of The Daily Mail says:

"The Boers are active between Johannesburg and Pretoria, exchanging shots with the British outposts; and it is reported that parties of Boers are hovering around Johannesburg."

KITCHENER'S DISPATCHES.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The War Office has received the following dispatch from Lord Kitchener, dated Pretoria, Dec. 23:

"So far as it is possible for me to form an opinion from the reports of officers on the spot, I think the Boer movement into Cape Colony has been checked. Of the two forces that entered the colony, the eastern is still north of the Zoutpansberg Range, while the one that entered west appears to have been turned in the direction of Britstown and Prieska.

"Our troops are getting around both bodies, and a special column is also being organized which will be dispatched immediately when I know where its services are most wanted.

"The Boers have not received much assistance in Cape Colony, so far as my information goes. We have armed some of the colonists, who are assisting our forces. Railway and telegraph communication has been much interrupted by the very bad weather.

"De Wet is in the neighborhood of Senekal. Gen. French, in conjunction with Gen. Clements, attacked a force under Beyers south of the Magalies Berg. The Boers broke away in a southwesterly direction toward Fontchefstrom, and were followed by Gen. Gordon with a column of French's force.

"Yesterday evening about 5 o'clock Clements's force was engaged south of Oliphant's Nek, but I do not yet know the result."

A later dispatch from Lord Kitchener, dated Pretoria, Dec. 22, says:

"The western column of Boers occupied Britstown and cut the railway south of De Aar Junction. The enemy is being followed up.

"Gen. French has been in contact for two days with the commandoes of Beyers and Delarey south of the Magalies Berg. He is pursuing them. The enemy have lost considerably and Commandant Kreuse and others have been captured.

"Gen. Colville engaged two separate commandoes Dec. 21 near Viakfontein, with slight losses, the enemy retiring."

HORSES FOR BRITISH ARMY.

50,000 More Will Be Purchased Here Because of Renewal of Hostilities in South Africa.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 23.—Capt. Heygate of the British Army is purchasing 50,000 cavalry horses and mules for the British Army in South Africa. He came here more than a year ago to buy horses and mules, but was ordered home a short time ago. But the unexpected renewal of hostilities has made the purchase of more horses and mules necessary. As fast as the animals are inspected and bought they will be sent to New Orleans and shipped to Cape Town, Durban, and New London, on British transports, some of which are now on their way to the United States. One shipload of the animals will be taken to South Africa by Lieut. David Moberly, leaving New Orleans early in January. Lieut. Moberly said:

"By the time the horses and mules are landed in South Africa they cost the British Government $360 a head. That is a large price for an animal which will be fit for service only six weeks. Most of the animals die because of the change in climate. They must cross the equator in going to South Africa, and the torrid heat of the tropics kills them rapidly. The average death rate on shipboard is thirty-two to the 1,000. Forty days after a horse is purchased in Kansas City it is landed in South Africa.

"So great is the demand for horses at the front that it is impossible to give them the needed rest after landing before putting them into service. Consequently they go to the front in a weakened condition, and not getting a sufficient amount of food, they soon die.

"Since the beginning of the Boer war England has purchased over 100,000 head of horses and mules in the United States. It required sixty-five ships to carry them from New Orleans to South Africa. Government transports will be kept very busy from now on carrying the horses which England will need in South Africa, and which have been ordered purchased in the United States. Baden-Powell now has 25,000 mounted police, and it is proposed to mount 50,000 of the imperial infantry.

"England has discovered that her soldiers must be mounted to be able to cope with the Boer, who gets over the country with alarming rapidity."

Canadian Troops at Home.

HALIFAX, N. S., Dec. 23.—The steamer Lake Champlain, having on board Col. Otter and 350 Canadian troops returning from South Africa, arrived this morning from Liverpool and disembarked here. They started this afternoon on a special train for Montreal and Toronto.

TAXES A PULPIT TOPIC.

Dr. Scoville Argues that the Imposition of Personal Taxes Is Often Unjust.

VINELAND, N. J., Dec. 23.—There was a big congregation this evening in the First Congregational Church to hear a sermon by the Rev. Dr. Samuel Scoville upon the personal tax question. The minister took the ground that in many instances the imposition of personal taxes was unjust.

The sermon was prompted by the efforts to tax a resident upon some bonds held by him. Mr. Scoville held that these bonds were taken by the holder at a low rate of interest because they were supposed to be and should be non-assessable. The taking of the bonds at a low rate of interest was induced by the supposition that they were not taxable. The bonds being public ones, the buyer would in reality be paying two assessments upon them if they were taxed as personal property. If they were taxable the buyer would demand that the public pay a higher rate of interest on them. If a taxable bond brought 4 per cent. and public improvement bonds were sold at a reduction of 1 per cent., it was because the latter were not taxable. If the holder paid the tax he would be paying again. Mr. Scoville advocated resistance through the courts to what he claimed was unfair taxation.

He also took the ground that railroad bonds were not taxable as personal property. His line of argument was that the State and the municipalities now tax the railroads for everything. They tax the real estate and the running equipment and everything of value. A share of railroad stock represented the State's share of the real and personal property of the railroad. The share itself had no intrinsic value beyond the trifle it was worth as paper. To tax the certificate that a man held an interest in the railroad was to tax the property over again. The whole system of taxation on personalities as now administered, he declared to be unjust and in most cases a second assessment.

$375 FOR HUGS AND KISSES.

Iowa Court Assesses Farmer for Forcibly Embracing a Girl.

Special to The New York Times.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Dec. 23.—Miss Mae Brenner's judgment of $375 damages against R. W. Boeger for forcibly hugging and kissing her at Leon, Iowa, was affirmed by the Supreme Court yesterday, in an opinion in which the court declares that there was no reason why she should not receive this amount, as the hugging and kissing was done forcibly and against her will.

One of the reasons given by Boeger's lawyers why judgment should not be affirmed was that the young woman led Boeger to think that the kisses would not be unacceptable. The Court, however, held that as she resisted the actions of Boeger, anything that might have been indicated otherwise was not to be considered. The decision caused great amusement in the court.

Miss Brenner is a popular girl in Decatur County, and Boeger is a prosperous young farmer.

BURNZ MAY COLLAPSE.

Murderer Wept in Jail and Sees Visions of His Victim in His Cell.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Dec. 23.—Edgar Channing Burnz, the alleged degenerate and so-called cigarette fiend, may collapse before his trial for the murder of Herbert B. Fellows is resumed next Wednesday. While he was singing in the county jail at White Plains to-day, he broke down and wept like a child.

Burnz is constantly writing letters to Mrs. Katherine Hurtin, his alleged sweetheart, who fainted on the witness stand on last Friday afternoon. Jailer Johnson said to-night that Burnz has also received many letters from her since his arrest. Each week he has been in the habit of writing to Thomas Jackson and Charlie Wood, two of his former companions in the jail, who were recently sentenced to Sing Sing Prison for twenty years for assaulting and robbing a companion on Long Island Sound. He asked about their prison life, and they wrote back and told him it was a "tough deal" to be in that institution. These answers appeared to affect him seriously.

The fact that Burnz also corresponded with a cousin in San Francisco and a young woman in Fall River, Mass., has led the authorities to believe that no insane prisoner would carry on such a voluminous correspondence. District Attorney Andrews intends to make this an additional point in the prosecution of the prisoner. Another bit of evidence will be the testimony of Deputy Sheriff Moore, who says he found two knives and a razor hidden in Burnz's cell.

The prisoner is disturbed nightly with visions of the murdered man, and cries out in his sleep that the cell is haunted, so his guards say.

FALSELY ACCUSED OF THEFT.

Montana Girl Arrested as a Shoplifter in Minneapolis.

Special to The New York Times.

MILES CITY, Mont., Dec. 23.—Dispatches from Minneapolis state that Miss Bells Howard of Miles City was arrested there several days ago on a charge of shoplifting. She was tried in the City Court and acquitted. The police heralded the arrest through the Minneapolis press as an important capture, and stigmatized Miss Howard as a professional shoplifter.

The incident grew out of the accidental discovery of a piece of cheap lace that had become mixed with her purchases, which had been quite heavy. The police searched her room and discovered about $500 worth of effects, which she proved she had bought and paid for. She was submitted to every humiliation, even suffering detention over night in the police station.

Miss Howard is the daughter of a wealthy ranchman on the Rosebud, and went to Minneapolis for the purpose of having her wedding trousseau made, as she is soon to become the wife of Capt. Neate, a well-to-do Englishman who has recently located in Carbon County.

PENSION ATTORNEYS' POOL

Fraudulent Business Organized for Raid on Treasury.

Commissioner Evans Begins a Vigorous Warfare on Pools—One of Them Found in Charleston, S. C.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Pension Commissioner Evans has inaugurated a new and more vigorous warfare on the pension attorneys. The business of obtaining fraudulent pensions has entered on a new phase, an organization into trusts or pools.

Heretofore the pension attorneys who engaged in this sort of business have practiced as individuals. The commercial principle of centralization has now reached their trade, and in many cities, especially in the South, the various pension attorneys have sought and attained economy in production and the other advantages of commercial combination by forming pools. In at least one city they went further than pools, and formed a trust.

The advantages attained by such combinations are many and various. The pension attorneys who compose them avoid competition, husband their energies, save money, and are able to reach the desired results more certainly and with much less danger of detection. The trust, for example, retained a number of negroes at small salaries to act as bogus claimants. In this case the item of wages was much lessened, for the claimants were in the employ of no single attorney, but of the whole combination, which was able to get along with fewer employes than would have been the case if they were practicing their profession individually.

The next step was to search the local cemeteries and examine the gravestones, noting the names of deceased soldiers, with such other information as the headstones might give about their ages, the names of their widows, and similar items. A great saving of time and labor was effected by having this done by one or two employes of the trust. The next step was to look up the soldiers thus catalogued and find whether or not a claim for a pension had ever been filed in their names or in the names of their widows.

If a claim had been filed, the case was dropped. If not, a female member of the staff of negroes was made to personate the widow of the dead soldier and apply for a pension with arrears. The male members of the staff personated living soldiers. Of course, these employes made little out of the transaction. The bulk of the proceeds was pocketed by the attorneys, and in the "widow" cases the pickings were rich.

Most of the soldiers had been dead a long time, and the arrearages in each case were likely to mount into the thousands. It is the arrearage provision which makes the deepest indentations in Uncle Sam's pocketbook. There can be no impression among most people who discuss pension frauds that it is only a matter of $8 a month, dating from the application for the pension. The attorneys would live from hand to mouth if this were the case. Where they make their money is in heavy arrearages, dating back thirty years or so, payable in a lump when the application is granted. They are on the look-out for ignorant clients, preferably negroes, who cannot read or write.

"These women," said one official of the Pension Bureau to-day, "seldom get anything like a respectable percentage of the amount of the arrearage. When an ignorant old colored woman from the backwoods gets an arrearage of $4,000 her share of it is likely to be about $75, if the pension attorney is generous. She doesn't know anything about what she has signed. She sees a check, but cannot read it, and does not know what the amount of it is."

In Nashville, Tenn., the Pension Commissioner has broken up a big pool, and sent about twenty-five of its members to prison. Another combine has been discovered in Charleston, S. C., and the Commissioner is now at work on that. The trust or pool idea is spreading everywhere, and detection is becoming more and more difficult.

The bill to create a Board of Pension Appeals has not yet come up in Congress. This bill is the creation of George H. Patrick, a pension attorney of this city, who is said to be a candidate for a place on the board. It is to be composed of Grand Army men and civilians, who are to pass on rejected claims. There is already a Board of Pension Appeals in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, but this board generally sustains Commissioner Evans's decisions. The new board is to supersede it.

The important legislation now on the calendar and the prospect of warm work over some of the principal bills is likely to keep this bill in the background during the short session, although its advocates will work it in if there is any chance. If there is not, it will be held over for the long session. It was introduced in the Senate by Mr. Turner of Washington, and in the House by Mr. Miers of Indiana.

Secretary Hitchcock also has had a bill drawn for pension appeals, but it is not favored by the pension attorneys. It proposes to refer a certain number of pension cases yearly to the Supreme Court for decision. This bill will slumber with the other until there is a chance for pension legislation, and then the advocates of the two bills will fight it out.

VANDERBILT-FRENCH WEDDING.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt to Send All Her Horses to Newport.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 23.—The intention of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt to entertain a large number of guests at the Breakers for the wedding of her son, Alfred G. Vanderbilt, to Miss Elsie French, grows more apparent every day.

Thirty horses which have been wintering at the Vanderbilt farm in Portsmouth are to be brought into Newport stables this week, while all of her horses and carriages from New York, besides those of her son, are to be shipped here for the use of her guests, who will number quite 100.

To-morrow the bids for opening the Breakers will be opened, and the work there will be awarded. Nearly 200 storm doors and windows are to be removed.

Mrs. Vanderbilt will remain here for nearly three weeks.

It is understood that Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt will have their villa opened for the wedding.

Canada's Premier at Atlantic City.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Dec. 23.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Canada's Premier, accompanied by his wife and private secretary, are visitors at Haddon Hall, coming here from New York. Sir Wilfrid states that he is here for his health and recreation.

Confederate Veterans' Reunion.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 23.—Gen. John B. Gordon, commanding the United Confederate Veterans, has issued a general order appointing May 28 and two days following as the time for the next annual reunion of the veterans.

BOSTON, Dec. 23.—When Mayor-elect John F. Hurley of Salem was running for office he stated that if successful he would give his salary as Mayor to the poor of the city, and he has not retracted the statement. It is said that he is the donor of many loads of coal and wood, to say nothing of groceries, which are being left at the houses of the unsuspecting poor, and that his private gifts of this sort are annually of great value.

FILIPINOS ROUTED IN BATTLE.

Sixty Cavalrymen Attack Large Body of Insurgents, Kill Forty-five and Wound Many.

MANILA, Dec. 23.—Advices brought today by steamer from Southern Luzon say that a Lieutenant and sixty men of the Ninth United States Cavalry attacked a large body of insurgents last Wednesday near Guinobatan, Province of Albay. After the battle forty-five dead insurgents were counted, together with many wounded.

The only American casualty was the wounding of a Sergeant, who was cornered by several rebels and struck in the leg by a bolo. The rebel loss was the heaviest recorded in recent encounters.

The cutting of the wires has delayed the official report of the engagement.

NEW PARTY IN MANILA.

Paterno, ex-Insurgent Leader, One of the Organizers.

MANILA, Dec. 22.—The recently organized Autonomy Party was launched to-day at a meeting attended by virtually all the loyal Filipino leaders in Manila. The declaration of principles was read, and, after some discussion, adopted by a vote of 123, less than half a dozen declining to vote. All signed an indorsement of the platform, including Señor Paterno, one of the most influential of the former insurgent leaders, whose real attitude toward American authority had been much questioned.

The principal discussion was with reference to the organization of the government of the party. A council of twenty-five members was elected, together with an Executive Committee.

Executive Committee, including Señor Cayetano Avellano, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court; Frank H. Bourne, Señor Amriosia Flores, a former insurgent General; Señor Florentino Torres, Attorney General for the Philippines; Señor José Near, Prosecuting Attorney, and Señor Tomas Del Rosario. The smallest number of votes received by any candidate was eighty.

ARREST IN CUDAHY CASE.

Police Capture "Dark" Man and Let Him Go—Now Looking for a "Light" Man.

OMAHA, Neb., Dec. 23.—The mysterious "dark" man in the Cudahy kidnapping case was arrested this afternoon by the police from the description given by Miss Maude Munshaw, who lives near the house in which Eddie Cudahy was held for ransom by his abductors. His name is Ed Johnson. He is a laborer in the Cudahy packing plant, and resides at Twenty-sixth and Walnut Streets.

He admitted having gone out to the Grover Street house three times for the purpose of renting the building, which he found already let to the "light" man and his accomplices. Johnson was easily able to prove to the satisfaction of the police and Mr. Cudahy, who was called in, that he had nothing to do with the case, and was allowed to return to his wife and family.

Johnson was confronted by Eddie Cudahy, his supposed victim. After carefully scrutinizing him the boy said: "That is not the man. He is not tall enough by an inch and a half and he's not broad enough. He's too small in every way."

Chief of Police Donahue is well pleased with the progress his men are making, saying that the arrest of Johnsun narrows the case down by eliminating one of the extraneous features and centres the chief interest about the "light" man who rented the house from Mrs. Schneiderwind.

This individual is described by three persons besides the kidnapped boy, namely, B. K. Munshaw, James Schneiderwind, and Frank Glynn. He is the man who called up the Cudahy mansion from Glynn's livery stable to give notice of the letters being in the front yard. The police are satisfied that they know him, and if he is the person they think he is, he will probably be in custody within the next ten days. If guilty he cannot remain at large long, they say.

E. A. Cudahy, Sr., still entertains the theory that if Pat Crowe was not one of the men who kidnapped his son he will lose no time in advising him of this fact. Mr. Cudahy has befriended Crowe many times in the past.

"Why," said the packer, "Pat Crowe knows perfectly well that if he had come to me a week ago and asked me for $25 he would have got it. He has often expressed a sense of gratitude for what I have done for him, and I can hardly believe he would turn against me in this way."

FIRE IN A SUMMER HOME.

S. W. Brown's Country House Near Greenwich a Total Loss.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Dec. 23.—An automobile was brought into service early this morning to bring an alarm of fire from Bellehaven to Greenwich village, a distance of three miles. It belonged to Charles T. Wells of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club, and was driven by his son Charles. The fire was in the Summer residence of S. W. Brown of West Twenty-first Street, New York. Extensive alterations were being made to it yesterday, but there was no fire in the building, except one the mechanics built to cook their dinner.

At 4 o'clock this morning the coachman who slept in the barn was aroused by the crackling of flames. An alarm was sent in, but the system was out of order then. Mr. Wells got up steam in his automobile and started for the station, where the department was notified by telephone. It arrived too late, however, to do anything but prevent the flames from spreading to adjoining residences. The loss is placed at $25,000.

TO CREMATE A CAT.

The Late Frances Willard's Pet Will Be Incinerated.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—Frances Willard's pet cat, Toots, a white Angora, full of years, is near to death. Reclining among soft silken cushions at Mrs. Norton's aristocratic cat infirmary in Michigan Avenue, the aged feline calmly awaits the end, and when it comes he will have the swellest funeral ever accorded to a cat in this city.

When Toots is stretched upon his bier, a small real lace handkerchief will cover his face, his body will be wrapped in white silk, and placed upon a slab, which will be shoved into the big furnace that supplies heat to the Norton establishment. Each of Toots's human friends will sprinkle a little myrrh or frankincense over the body, and while it is being consumed the incense will counteract any odor which might be emitted through the furnace chimney and prove objectionable to Mrs. Norton's neighbors.

Mrs. Norton's institution is a refuge for cats of every degree, and it is said the homeless feline minus an eye or its tail receives the same tender attentions lavished upon the patrician pussies whose way is paid by wealthy society women.

PENNSYLVANIA ROAD PLANS.

Property Bought in Trenton that an S Curve May Be Abolished.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 23.—The Pennsylvania Railroad Company, through a local real estate firm here, has purchased about thirty properties in the southern portion of Trenton, adjacent to the railroad tracks, and negotiations are pending for the acquisition of about the same number of additional properties.

None of the railroad officials here will discuss the object of the purchases, but it is understood that the purpose is to straighten the tracks in South Trenton and build a new bridge across the Delaware River. This would take out an "S" curve, and reduce the distance between New York and Philadelphia about a quarter of a mile, and do away with the present necessity of fast trains slowing up at this spot.

FIRE VICTIMS TURNED OUT OF A HOSPITAL

Walk in Agony and Scantily Clad Till Neighbors Take Them In.

NO ROOM, THE EXCUSE GIVEN

Thrilling Rescues from a House in Newark—Girl Imprisoned in Blazing Room, Saved by Father's Efforts.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 23.—A man and boy scantily clad and suffering from terrible burns and injuries received in the burning of their home were turned out of the City Hospital early this morning because of a quarrel between the hospital authorities and the police. The sufferers were Charles Loeffler, fifty-seven years old, and his son Joseph, aged nineteen years. In intense agony they walked back to the ruins of their home, 73 Rutgers Street, ten blocks away, and were finally taken in and cared for by neighbors. The only excuse given by the hospital people is that the place was full, and there was no room.

When the Loefflers were taken to the institution they wore little but undergarments, all their other clothing having been destroyed in the fire. The boy was barefooted, and would have walked out in that condition but for a nurse, who took pity on him and gave him a pair of felt arcties.

The fire started at 3:15 o'clock, and four other persons were injured while it was in progress. All the Loeffler family were asleep at the time. They were Charles Loeffler and his wife, their sons, Joseph, aged nineteen, and David, aged eighteen; their daughter Minnie, thirteen years old, and Gertrude Conrad, a young friend of the Loeffler girl, who was spending the night at the house.

Loeffler and his younger son were the last members of the family to retire, and they left a lighted kerosene lamp on a table in the kitchen, and a fire in the kitchen range. It is supposed that the stove became overheated and caused the lamp to explode. The house was a story-and-a-half frame structure, and the flames spread rapidly.

The first member of the family to discover the fire was the father, who was awakened by a choking sensation, and found the room full of smoke. He aroused the others, and ran down stairs, followed by Joseph, and together they fought desperately to overcome the blaze. Young Loeffler became exhausted by his efforts and the smoke, and crawled up stairs, where he fell on the bed, with his head buried in the bed clothing. In the meantime Mrs. Loeffler, David Loeffler, and Miss Conrad had managed to escape into the street, partially clothed, and with their hands and faces blistered and their hair and eyebrows singed.

Minnie Loeffler's room was on the first floor, opening off the kitchen. She was awakened by the smoke, and her father's shouts, but when she tried to get out was driven back by a burst of flames, which set fire to the matting and furniture in the room, shutting off her only path of escape, the wooden shutters of the single window in the chamber being nailed fast for protection against burglars. With her naked hands the mother tore at the shutters from the yard, but was unable to open them. Loeffler made several efforts to get into the girl's room, and finally dashed straight through the flames. His light garments were on fire, his hair and beard singed off, and his face, hands, and body fearfully blistered in the act.

The fire was gaining headway every moment, and by this time he had groped for and found the helpless girl in the smoke-filled room the whole apartment was blazing, and escape by the way he had entered was impossible. Shielding the girl as well as possible with his own body, Loeffler dashed himself against the shutters several times, until they finally gave way, and the two fell unconscious across the window sill, with the flames bursting through the opening about them. By almost superhuman efforts Mrs. Loeffler succeeded in dragging her husband and daughter through the window, and to a place of safety in the yard, and then she began a search for her oldest son, Joseph, who was lying unconscious in the bedroom up stairs.

Meanwhile the neighborhood had been aroused, and Policemen Benz and Carr of the Fourth Precinct had sent in an alarm. John Boyle, who lives at 75 Rutgers Street, climbed upon the roof of his house and smashed a window in young Loeffler's room, and he and Policeman Benz succeeded in dragging the young man out and into the next house, over the roof.

Ambulances were sent for from the Fourth Precinct Police Station and the City Hospital, and Charles and Joseph Loeffler were taken to the City Hospital. The surgeon in charge, John Preisel, told the police that the sufferers' wounds would be dressed, but that they could not be kept at the hospital, as all the beds were full, and asked that the police ambulance wait to take them away, declaring, according to Police Sergeant Durkin, that if the ambulance went away the men would be turned into the street. The ambulance, nevertheless, drove off, and after the burns of the patients had been swathed in cotton, they were taken to the door and told to go home.

Dr. Frank Baker, Superintendent at the City Hospital, said to day that the attendants did not know the Loefflers had been burned out when they were sent home, or they would have been kept until morning. He censured the police for not taking the men to another hospital when told there was no room in that one.

Nothing of value, and barely enough clothing to cover them, was saved by the Loefflers. There was no insurance on their house or belongings, and the family, every member of which is more or less injured or burned, is being cared for by friends and neighbors, who are intensely indignant at the action of the hospital people. The daughter is suffering from a relapse of an old attack of St. Vitus's dance, as a result of excitement and her burns.

CHASE BURGLARS ON HANDCAR.

Posse Drives Them Into Barn and Captures Them After a Fight.

Special to The New York Times.

LANCASTER, Wis., Dec. 23.—Four burglars blew open the safe of the P. T. Stevens Bank at Montfort with nitro-glycerine at 2 o'clock this morning. Mr. Doran, whose residence is near the bank, heard the explosions. He sprang from his bed, opened the window, and cried "Fire" a number of times. Mr. Doran's alarm frightened the burglars, who extinguished the lights and ran to the railroad station, where they had a handcar ready. They fled to the east, pursued by seven Montfort men on another handcar.

The burglars' handcar was found three miles west of Ridgway, where the robbers had thrown it down a bank and fled on foot. Continuing the pursuit, the posse found the men in the loft of a barn a mile further on. The Montfort men opened fire on the burglars from below, and fifteen shots were fired. One of the burglars was shot in the leg. They were finally overpowered and brought here this evening. No money was secured.

Carnegie Gives $20,000 to Negro School.

BOSTON, Dec. 23.—Just before Booker T. Washington left Boston, where he has been raising funds for the permanent endowment of the Tuskegee school, he received a letter from Andrew Carnegie to the effect that the latter had decided to give $20,000 for the erection of a library building for Tuskegee institute. The building will be erected entirely by student labor.

BOLIVIA PLEADS FOR AID.

Asks the United States to Settle Dispute with Chile—Request Has Been Denied.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Bolivia has made a formal request that the United States use its influence to settle the trouble between Bolivia and Chile. The request has been denied.

The full scope of the request cannot be definitely learned, but it went further than a mere request for the good offices of this country. It is stated that Bolivia practically asked the United States to take her side in the dispute. The question involved is the long-standing one of the Provinces of Tacna and Arica, which Chile continues to hold by temporary occupation, although the title to them is vested in Bolivia.

The request seems to indicate either that Bolivia has not secured the support of the various South American countries which have been reported as allied with her, or that the combination is not strong enough to oppose Chile. It was made, apparently, on the ground that Bolivia is in real danger from Chile.

There have been many indications lately of the imminence of a general South American war, in which the claim of Chile to be the dominant power of the continent will be tested. The request of Bolivia was made in view of the seriousness of the general situation, rather than on the comparatively unimportant question of the restoration of the provinces, a question which has been pending for several years.

The United States declined the request on the ground that it has no wish to interfere between the South American States in quarrels that concern only themselves. If it were asked to arbitrate the case it would be different, but to comply with Bolivia's request would be to meddle in matters that do not concern the United States.

TURKISH IRADE NOT ISSUED.

Germany Protests Against Payment to Crampa Until Krupp Is Paid.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 23.—The expected imperial irade, authorizing the signature of the contract for the construction of a cruiser for the Ottoman Navy by the Cramp Shipbuilding Company, together with the initial deposit of £100,000, has not yet been issued.

It appears that the German Embassy has protested to the Porte against the payment to the Cramps before the amount owing to Herr Krupp for naval guns has been paid.

COMMENT ON CANAL TREATY.

London Times Says the President Has Shifted a Dangerous Responsibility on Great Britain.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—The Times, in an editorial on President McKinley's decision to submit the Hay-Pauncefote canal treaty to Great Britain, reproaches him with "shifting a dangerous responsibility on the British Government," and says:

"The President must bear the responsibility for any friction that may ensue. The amended treaty is a bargain to which we cannot agree and to which no reasonable American who takes the trouble to reflect upon our side of the question can expect us to agree.

"When Senator Lodge announced that Americans expect Europe to 'keep out' of America, he forgets that England is a great North American power, and means to remain such a power.

"If the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is not adopted in a form acceptable to us, we shall stand quietly upon our indubitable rights under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, rights which cannot be affected by any action the American Senate may choose to take."

STATE TO USE BRIBE MONEY.

Montana May Give the $30,000 Which Figured in the Clark Case to Exposition Commission.

Special to The New York Times.

HELENA, Mon., Dec. 23.—The thirty thousand-dollar bills that played such a conspicuous part in the sensational legislative session of two years ago and which are still in the State Treasurer's vault, may be put to use by the Legislature this Winter.

Members of the Montana Pan-American Commission believe that the money could be made available for an exhibit of Montana's resources at the Buffalo Exposition next Summer. Commissioner Wolffsohn, who has been in Montana operating the Governing Board of the exposition, has asked for an appropriation of $50,000, and the commission in its report to the Legislature will call attention to the unused and unclaimed $30,000 in possession of the State Treasurer and suggest that the money be paid into the State treasury, and that an appropriation of $20,000 additional be made to defray the expenses of an exhibit from Montana.

It is quite certain that some disposition will be made of the $30,000 by the next Legislature, and members of the Pan-American Commission believe that the money could not be put to a better use than to appropriate it to assist in making the proposed exhibit. Unclaimed money in the State Treasury is virtually the property of the State, and as there is no likelihood that any one will ever claim the money, the State can, with perfect safety, it is argued, use it for the purpose named.

BIG SUIT AGAINST CLARK.

Anaconda Mining Company Claims $1,075,000 for Ore Taken.

Special to The New York Times.

HELENA, Mont., Dec. 23.—Suit for $1,075,000 has been brought in the United States Court in Butte by the Anaconda Mining Company against W. A. Clark and the Colusa-Parrot Mining and Smelting Company. The suit is based on damages alleged to have been sustained by the Anaconda Company by reason of trespass committed by the defendant on the ore bodies which were involved in the noted case tried in the United States Court a year ago, and which was decided in favor of the Anaconda Company by Judge Knowles.

The case involved only the ownership of the vein designated as the blue vein, and no claim was made at that time for damages on account of the ore taken. The suit now brought for damages is based on ore taken not only from the blue vein, but also from the main Anaconda vein, designated as the red vein, which runs through both end lines of the Anaconda claim and dips south into the Colusa-Parrot ground.

GARDINER WILL NOT CONTEST REMOVAL

District Attorney Will Surrender His Office to Mr. Philbin on Request.

GOV. ROOSEVELT CRITICISED

Democrats Say Col. Gardiner's Removal Was Prearranged—Mr. Philbin's Explanation of His Ready-to-Print Biography.

District Attorney Asa Bird Gardiner, who was removed Saturday by Gov. Roosevelt, has decided not to enter into a legal contest to retain his place. Col. Gardiner was in the city yesterday, but avoided newspaper men. He was at the Democratic Club most of the day, and attended a conference of his assistants to determine their course of action. Col. Gardiner's decision to give up his office without a fight was made known by his chief assistant John F. McIntyre, who said:

"Col. Gardiner will surrender his office whenever Mr. Philbin, his successor, appears to demand it. He will spend to-morrow in getting the affairs of the office in shape for his successor."

A meeting of the Assistants and Deputy Assistants of the District Attorney's office was held yesterday afternoon at the Democratic Club to prepare a statement of all the cases now pending and who had them in charge.

This is intended for the information of the new District Attorney, Eugene A. Philbin. John F. McIntyre, head Assistant, was asked if any resignations from the District Attorney's office were contemplated. He said:

WILL NOT RESIGN.

"I would not countenance such action, and I believe all my colleagues take the same view. However unjust we may consider Gov. Roosevelt's removal of Col. Gardiner, we owe a duty to the public. The work of the District Attorney's office is not work which can be mastered in a day. There are twenty-four Assistants and Deputy Assistants in the District Attorney's office.

"Inasmuch as this work requires special training, you can readily understand what a serious condition of affairs would ensue if all the counsel familiar with the practice of the office were to step down and out. Such action would put New York City at the mercy of every thief and crook within the city's borders."

The statement of the business of the District Attorney's office which has been prepared for Mr. Philbin shows that the business of the office is well up to date. There are now only about 300 untried cases as against 2,200 when Col. Gardiner inherited from his predecessor. Among the 300, however, are a number of very important cases to be tried. These are the Kennedy case, the Molineux case, if the Court of Appeals grants a new trial; the Grahams Polly case, the Zagemas case, and the Hall murder case.

There has been some talk about Mr. Philbin's making a clean sweep of the office. He can't do that because all of the employes except the Assistant District Attorneys, the deputy assistants, and a few confidential men, are under the civil service. The assistants are John F. McIntyre, James W. Osborne, James D. McClelland, Stephen S. Blake, James J. Walsh, Robert Townsend, Charles E. Le Barbier, Henry W. Unger. The deputy assistants are James Lindsay Gordon, Moses Herrman, Forbes J. Hennessy, John F. Cowan, Gerald Hull Gray, Charles E. F. McCann, Thomas F. Byrne, Daniel O'Reilly, Maurice D. Bienenthal, Cornelius F. Collins, Robertson Honey, Keyran J. O'Connor, Michael J. Sullivan, John Schwarzkopf, and James Dickson Carr.

Assistant District Attorney Unger is the longest in the service, having been connected with the office for nearly fifteen years. Messrs. Osborne, McIntyre, and Townsend have each had ten years' service in the office.

MR. PHILBIN'S PLANS.

Mr. Philbin was at his resid without delay, and would take charge of the District Attorney's office as soon as he receives the official notification of his appointment. He expects to receive the notification to-day. Mr. Philbin will appoint as his private secretary Mr. Stockbridge, who was private secretary to Justice Beekman.

A DEAL SAYS TAMMANY.

Tammany men are convinced that Col. Gardiner's removal and Mr. Philbin's appointment were a political deal. The fact that Mr. Philbin had a typewritten biography of himself ready to hand out before the announcement of his appointment came from Albany was considered conclusive evidence of his having been notified before Col. Gardiner's trial had been concluded that he would be appointed Col. Gardiner's successor. Mr. Philbin's statement that he had prepared the biography because he had reason to expect he would be appointed Supreme Court Justice to succeed the late Justice Beekman was ridiculed by the Tammany men.

"Gov. Roosevelt was accused of sitting in judgment on a case which he had prejudged before it began. One prominent member of the Democratic Club said he had positive information that Mr. Philbin knew on Friday that he was to be made District Attorney, and that the sketch of himself which Mr Philbin gave out was prepared on that day. Mrs. Philbin's admission that John D. Crimmins had sent word to Mr. Philbin Friday to prepare a sketch of his life was pointed out as proof that Mr. Crimmins had received intimation from Gov. Roosevelt on that day, if not previously, that Mr. Philbin was to be named for District Attorney. The interview given by Senator Platt Saturday, in which he stated that it had been settled that John Proctor Clarke was to be appointed Supreme Court Justice was thought to completely dispose of the probability that there could have been any misapprehension on Mr. Philbin's part as to the appointment he was to receive.

"It was a cut and dried deal," said a prominent member of the Democratic Club who did not wish to be quoted under his name because he was in a position from which he could be removed by Gov. Roosevelt. "We knew perfectly well what was coming. It was the most indecent thing I ever saw. Using a man in the high position of Governor to do a thing like that, and stamps him for what he is. If you have any doubt as to the outrageousness of his act read his opinion. Look what is his finding based? On the charges? Not at all. Gov. Roosevelt bases his action in removing Col. Gardiner upon the fact that Col. Gardiner gave to two newspaper men expressions of opinion that were displeasing to Gov. Roosevelt, and, in his opinion, inconsistent with the proprieties which Col. Gardiner as District Attorney should have regarded. In the charges to which Col. Gardiner was called upon to make answer the objectionable interviews were not included. There was not even a suggestion that they were deemed a cause of action against him. And yet his removal is chiefly based upon those interviews. When these interviews were being debated upon at the hearing, Gov. Roosevelt exclaimed:

"'I do not believe he deny them.'

"The response of Assistant District Attorney McIlvaine to this inquiry was straight and to the point.

"'Governor,' he said, 'for two days the papers have been publishing interviews with you in which you have been quoted as saying that the answer of Col. Gardiner was all such as that you intended to remove him. Will you deny those interviews?' The Governor's answer was that he would not be catechized.

"Gov. Roosevelt's decision means that as long as he is Governor there is to be no such thing as free speech on the part of any officer over whom he exercises any control. A newspaper man went to Col. Gardiner and asked him what he thought of Chief Devery's indictment. Col. Gardiner told him he thought it was an outrage. That statement was printed, and because it was printed Col. Gardiner is removed."

Friends of Col. Gardiner were asserting yesterday that Gov. Roosevelt was actuated by personal spite in removing the District Attorney because he had left a dinner given by the Royal Legion, to avoid hearing the Governor's speech.

Senator Thomas C. Platt said: "The organization was not consulted with regard to the charges against Col. Gardiner. It had been understood, however, that if he was ousted an independent Democrat would be named to succeed him.

"I have been informed that Mr. Philbin will go at the lawbreakers. If he does so he will receive the support of the Republican organization and of all good people."

With regard to the appointment of John Proctor Clarke as Justice of the Supreme Court to succeed the late Henry R. Beekman, Mr. Platt remarked:

"I suppose Gov. Roosevelt thought he owed a debt to Mr. Clarke, and he has discharged it."

HIT BY BULLET FIRED BY CAR.

Projectile from Cartridge Placed on Track Struck Kaplin's Head and Passed Through His Hat.

A Second Avenue electric car at Thirty-ninth Street passed over a Kragg-Jorgensen bullet cartridge last night. The cartridge exploded, and the ball struck Bernard Kaplin of 51 Monroe Street in the side of the head, and then passed through his hat, causing a scalp wound. He was taken home.

The car was filled with passengers, and considerable excitement was caused by the explosion, the motorman stopping the car and the passengers hurrying out.

Kaplin, who had dropped to the ground, was picked up, and Dr. John Quinlan, who has an office on Thirty-ninth Street, near the avenue, dressed the injury, which he said, was not serious. He added, however, that Kaplin had had a marvelous escape.

The police discovered the shell. It is supposed a child found the cartridge and placed it on the rail.

NO GAMBLING IN BROOKLYN.

Deputy Chief P. H. McLaughlin's Raid Causes All Places to Close.

The raid on a Rockwell Place gaming establishment in Brooklyn on Saturday night, which was planned by President Bernard J. York of the Police Board, convinced the gamblers that Deputy Chief P. H. McLaughlin, backed by President York, would make it difficult for them to carry on business in the borough. The gathering places of local gamblers appeared to be all closed yesterday.

Deputy Chief McLaughlin was at Headquarters and had frequent conferences with members of his staff. He had a long talk in the afternoon with Inspector John Brennan, who conducted the raid on Saturday night, but neither would admit that further raids were being planned. Mr. McLaughlin said, however, that he was determined that if the precinct commanders failed to suppress it, he would continue to send men out from Headquarters to do the work. He had nothing to say about Capt. Eason, the commander of the precinct, without whose knowledge, it is said, the raid was made. Capt. Eason was on duty at Headquarters yesterday. He declined to talk about the raid.

William Dubois, the alleged proprietor of the house, was held in $1,000 bail for examination on Wednesday. The twelve men arrested in the place were held as witnesses.

Fall River Line Steamer Disabled.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Dec. 23.—The steamer Puritan of the Fall River Line arrived here this afternoon with a broken shaft. The break was discovered yesterday in New York, but as it was not a bad one it was decided that she should make her regular trip to this city. After the passengers and freight had been discharged she proceeded to Newport, where repairs will be made, and it is unlikely that she will resume her place upon the line before next Spring. The steamer Priscilla will take the Puritan's place.

Father Purbrick Will Resign.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Advices have just reached Georgetown University here which indicate the appointment of a successor to the Very Rev. Edward Purbrick, S. J., Provincial of the Jesuit Order in the eastern province, shortly after the holidays. Father Purbrick is now visiting Italy, where the Superior General of the order resides. He wishes to resign, owing to sickness and advanced age, but will not do so until the formal appointment of his successor. The Very Rev. Thomas J. Gannon of the See of Boston is now acting head of the Jesuits in this jurisdiction, with residence in New York City.

Boston Bank Cashier Critically Ill.

LAWRENCE, Mass., Dec. 23.—The condition of Cashier W. H. Jaquith of the Pacific National Bank, who was stricken with apoplexy yesterday, was reported as unchanged this evening. He is critically ill. Mr. Jaquith has been failing for some time, and to the bank people it is only a coincidence that the illness should culminate at the time of the Robinson Mill assignment. The Pacific Bank holds no more than $30,000 of the mill paper, has a capital of $150,000, and good reserve, and its assets are not seriously impaired.

CONDITIONS IN PHILIPPINES.

Reports Made by Officers Who Administer the Various Bureaus and Departments.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—The War Department has made public a series of reports made to Gen. MacArthur by the subordinate officers constituting the heads of the various bureaus and departments which have administered the civil affairs of the Philippine Islands during the last year. These are closely but sufficiently summarized in the report of Lieut. Col. Crowder, Thirty-ninth Infantry, Secretary to the Military Governor.

Under the head of the Treasury Department, it is said that the problem of securing a stable currency has never approached a definite solution in the Philippines, though it had not pressed for immediate settlement until very recently, when United States and Mexican dollars were for a few days evenly exchanged. This was terminated by a provisional order whereby the Government arranged to reimburse the banks for any losses they might sustain through paying out Mexican silver for United States currency from disbursing officers and trade. Doubt is expressed, however, as to the desirability of continuing this arrangement.

The customs service is discussed at some length in the report, and it is stated that there does not seem to be any present necessity for an increase in the number of ports of entry. Attention is directed to the marked increase in the customs receipts under American management. This is explained in part by the fact that formerly a large part of the imports came from Spain and paid no duties. Also, the American system of collection is said to tend to honest collections. The new tariff adopted for the islands is set out in detail. In almost every case specific duties are fixed, following the established system in the Islands, which it was believed to be dangerous to change to the ad valorem system.

The extension of the United States immigration laws to the Island without substantial change to meet the local conditions is said to have proven of doubtful expediency, and especially so with regard to the contract labor law. It is essential, says the report, for the mercantile interests to secure employes from abroad under contract, else business will suffer. These laborers do not come into competition with the native residents. More than 25,000 Chinese entered and left the Islands last year. Only one-ninth of the land in the archipelago has been brought under cultivation, and there is no land tax.

Regarding the Judicial Department, it early was found to be necessary to provide a system which would be divested of those harsh and oppressive features so much in conflict with American standards. It was impossible for lack of time to supply an entirely new system, so some changes regarded as indispensible were made by a general order. It appears that the operations of the law as thus qualified, have been satisfactory in securing to defendants in criminal cases the fundamental rights of Anglo-Saxon criminal law. The writ of habeas corpus has been frequently invoked, and under its speedy operation nearly 100 prisoners, the heritage of the Spanish regime, have been liberated from unwarranted detention.

Col. Crowder thoroughly indorses the recommendation of Lieut. Burritt, in charge of the mining bureau, looking to a thorough change in the mining laws. He says that these are extremely cumbersome, and that once they are brought up to American standards the mineral condition of the country soon will be enormously improved. As experienced prospectors and competent mining engineers now in the islands stand ready to undertake the work of exploitation.

Col. Crowder closes with a summary of the report of Gen. J. F. Smith, Military Governor of Negros, showing that this island, which has had under the entire period of American control a substantially autonomous form of government, has progressed in marked and favorable contrast with the other islands. The attitude of the people is highly favorable toward the United States, and the largely autonomous government which they now enjoy seems to be their fitting reward, and the people are naturally desirous that it should be continued. But it will be impossible to discriminate in favor of Negros, the report says, in the scheme of government to be ultimately adopted, so that complications are expected not easy of adjustment.

MURDERER NEAR DEATH.

MacDonald, Who Killed Auditor Morris in Washington, in a Precarious Condition.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Samuel MacDonald, the Treasury clerk who shot and killed Frank H. Morris, Auditor for the War Department, yesterday, and then wounded himself, was in a precarious condition at the Emergency Hospital to-night, and his death is expected momentarily. MacDonald has been entirely conscious since his removal to the hospital. His condition this morning seemed more favorable, but to-night it took a turn for the worse and he began to sink. He has constantly reiterated the hope that he would die, declaring he did not care to live.

All day long there was a continuous stream of visitors to see the wounded man, but the latter was particularly anxious that none of his friends should talk to the newspapers about what he told them, and he even took the precaution to tear up their visiting cards so that their identity might not be learned. MacDonald has a large number of friends in this city, and the opinion was expressed generally that his mind was in an unsettled state at the time of the shooting.

An autopsy was performed on the body of Mr. Morris to-day and developed the fact that three of the five bullets fired had struck him. The body will be taken from here to-morrow to Cleveland, where the interment will be made in Lake View Cemetery.

D. A. Grosvenor, Deputy Auditor for the War Department, and the next in line of rank to the late Mr. Morris, was discharged on Saturday. Mr. Grosvenor received his discharge papers half an hour after the killing of Mr. Morris. They were conveyed to him from the office of Secretary Gage, the discharge taking effect at once. Capt. Cebaugh of the Treasury watch took charge of the affairs at the Winder Building shortly after the shooting on Saturday, with instructions to report to W. W. Brown, Auditor for the Navy Department and the predecessor of Mr. Morris, who has been reinstated in his old position as Auditor for the War Department.

POLICE SUSPECT MURDER.

Body of a Man Found in Connecticut Road House Yard.

NAUGATUCK, Conn., Dec. 23.—The finding of the body of a man with one side of his skull crushed early this morning in the yard in front of the Cotton Hollow roadhouse, a well-known resort a mile and a half south of this town, develops a mystery which the police say has every appearance of murder. Martin, the proprietor of the house, stated that the man came to his place alone early Saturday evening and was assigned to a room on the third floor, retiring at once.

At 4 o'clock Martin says he was awakened by a noise in the upper story, followed by a crash in the front yard, and upon investigating discovered the body.

An examination of the house reveals the fact that the sash of the window from which, according to Martin's story, the unknown man must have jumped, when open leaves a space that is scarcely broader than a man's body, and very far from large enough to enable one to fall out without considerable effort in so doing. In addition to this, the fact that the glass in both sashes is shattered and the shingles ripped from the window ledge outside, indicates that either there must have been a struggle or else the suicide went about his destruction in a most determined manner. The body of the man lay some ten or twelve feet from the house, having cleared entirely a six-foot piazza directly under the window.

Late to-night Albert Milberg, a young farmer, identified the body as that of his brother, Gerald, who had left home at 8 o'clock last night, and had not returned since that time. He knew nothing of his brother's whereabouts during the evening, and did not think that Gerald was accustomed to go to the Cotton Hollow establishment.

Funeral of Mrs. W. P. Frye.

LEWISTON, Me., Dec. 23.—The funeral of Mrs. W. P. Frye, wife of United States Senator Frye, took place to-day. The Rev. G. H. Howe, her pastor, conducted the services. The attendance was large, and many messages of condolence were received from friends in various parts of the country. Many flowers came from Washington, Portland, and Bath, as well as from family friends in Lewiston and Auburn.

DRUGGISTS AS DOCTORS

Business Transformed Since the Civil War.

Old Professional Tells How They Had to Prescribe—Leeches, Cupping, Vaccination, and Spring Medicines.

"Before the war," began the druggist whose memory and business date back to pre-civil war days, speaking of the drug business as it was compared to what it is at present, "a druggist always expected to do a good deal in the way of prescribing. In 1858 the College of Pharmacy graduated some six men where now hundreds are graduated. Very few druggists had anything but practical experience. It is probable that at that time the English were the most scientifically educated in that line. Here the druggist was expected to do practical work, to understand minor surgery, leeching, blood letting, and cupping. He could take a quart or so of blood when a patient came in and required it, and he could draw a tooth.

"Sometimes he would go out and make a call, and he was supposed to be thoroughly posted as to what constituted a dose of medicine, and to know the proper medicines to be given in different diseases. Nowadays a druggist is not supposed to know anything about a dose; his business is to understand the scientific preparation of medicines, and he is better qualified for analysis than for practical work.

"Chemistry enters more into the work of the druggist now than it did then. The whole science of medicine has changed, and it is enough to make the hair of an old-time druggist stand on end to see the doses of strychnine, arsenic, and nux vomica that are given. Forty years ago an ounce of strychnine would last a druggist ten years, and now he will use it in a month. The old-time druggist would not have put up such prescriptions as are sent to him now if the physician had stood over him and told him every ingredient. A druggist is not supposed now to know anything about the prescription. If a prescription seems to call for something that he does not think right it makes no difference, he must put it up or he is held responsible.

"There was an interesting case of this kind a number of years ago in England. A physician gave a prescription in which there was an extra large amount of digitalis, which is used to stimulate the heart. The prescription was taken to seven druggists before it was filled. The first six refused to put up the drug, as the prescription called for it. The seventh did, but the patient died. The case was taken to court, and it was decided that if the prescription had been filled in time the patient would have lived, and the six druggists were fined. Similar cases have been tried in the Supreme Court here. The physician is protected by law, but no one can understand the anxiety these excessive doses give the druggist. It is always possible that a mistake has been made.

"Now that we have telephones we can telephone to a physician to verify the prescription, but before we would hunt all day sometimes to find a man. They do not always like it and some think that the question reflects upon their judgment, but many physicians are very thankful. I remember one case in 1860. We received a prescription for a child which called for what seemed an excessive dose. The prescription was brought to us in the morning and all that day we hunted the physician and finally found him at night in the Academy of Music. He wanted to know if we had filled the prescription and was very glad that we had not. We had told the family in the meantime that we did not have the ingredients for filling the prescription, and had sent out for them. So no harm was done in any way. In the old days a druggist who understood prescribing could get a much better position and make a better salary than one who did not. In advertising for a man we would frequently call for one capable of prescribing.

USED TO VACCINATE.

We used to vaccinate occasionally, but there was not so much of it done then. We used the human virus always, and when we had a good healthy patient we would ask them to come back when the sore came to a head so that we could get a few points or we would take the whole scab. Then we would mix it up with a little water on a glass plate with a knife—we didn't think anything about germs at that time—tell people we had virus from a healthy person, and vaccinate perhaps a dozen people.

"There is no doubt, though, that a good many diseases were disseminated in this way, and there are many people to-day who date ailments of their youth and the deaths of their children to vaccination, and undoubtedly with reason. People don't really understand that only cow virus is used now. If they did I think there would be less opposition to vaccination, though, for my part, I don't see why tuberculosis should not be disseminated in that way.

"We used to use a great many leeches. We would use from 50 to 100 in a month, and in blood-letting often take one or two quarts of blood from a person. I don't think it did any harm to a full-blooded person. People ate coarser foods in those days; more pork and oatmeal. If a man got into a row and had a black eye, the first thing he would do would be to go to the druggist and have one or three leeches put on to take away the blood. Or leeches were put on for a headache, or for the earache or toothache. A woman would come in with a terrible headache, sit down in a chair in the store, and have two or three leeches put on each temple, and she would be relieved in a short time. Or they would be put behind the ear for the earache, or on the gums for a toothache.

"No, women didn't mind it. It was like having a tooth pulled—anything was better than the pain, and they would have their minds made up to it before they would come. It took me six hours to put leeches on a woman's gum once. She was a woman belonging to a wealthy family in the neighborhood. She had an ulcerated tooth and sent for me to bring the leeches. The gums were swollen and sore, the patient would not allow them to be lanced, and it was hard for the leeches to get to work. Finally they were started, and I wanted to go home. I had not had my supper. But the woman would not hear of my leaving her with those leeches in her mouth, and I had to wait. It was 12 o'clock when I left the house that night. There were no restaurants around here in those days, not even a bakehouse. There was one man who had opened an oyster house in connection with a saloon. He had twelve oysters left, and let me have six of those, but I went to bed pretty hungry.

"How much did I get for that? Well, we charged 12 cents apiece for the leeches, and there were two of them, and I asked 25 cents for applying them—49 cents. Doctors were glad to get 50 cents a visit at that time, and I have had a doctor, who afterward became famous and would not take less than $10 for an office call, thank me for sending him a patient from whom he received $2.

LEECHES STILL USED.

"Leeches are still used in country places where they are taken from the ponds, though we always used the Swedish leeches. In many of the poorer neighborhoods, particularly where there are a good many brawls, they still use the leeches for black eyes.

"For regular bloodletting an incision was made in a vein in the arm and as much blood was let as seemed necessary to relieve the patient. That was a regular Spring and Fall medicine that many people took as they took their sulphur and molasses. I don't know why it should have been injurious as a remedy. Depressing medicines are given now to lessen the action of the heart in case of a fever, and I don't know that there is any more harm in the one than in the other.

"As for the sulphur and molasses, there might be less danger from contagious diseases if people took a little sulphur occasionally now. People used to take quantities of Spring medicines and often in the Fall, as well. We used to put up from fifty to a hundred pounds of them every year, yellow dock, burdock, sassafras and sarsaparilla, and there were whole families who took their sulphur and molasses with a little cream of tartar, every spring, taking it three mornings and skipping it three.

"As for tooth drawing, I never did much of that myself, though I have done it. There was generally some one in the store who liked that work. It was great fun for the boys and we used to get them in to experiment. If the tooth didn't come out very easily we would lance the gum all around and it came out without any trouble, but it left the gum in a bad condition.

"The reason so much of this work was left for the druggist was because we did not have many doctors. We were a working people. Why, in 1857 there were only seven millionaires in the United States. All our wealthy men have made their money since the war. Our men did not have time to spend a number of years in a college. When the war broke out a law in this State was passed giving physicians a diploma when they had had one year in a college and two years' experience in the field. That was the reason so many doctors took post-graduate courses later. It was only in the South that men had time for study. The Southern men were gentlemen and devoted themselves to law, war, and medicine. The medical students at Bellevue were Southern men. They had the time and money for study and they owned anywhere from a few hundred to a thousand slaves, and they needed a knowledge of medicine to look out for them. So at the time of the war we had only a few doctors and not many lawyers.

"There was a good deal of interest in the business then, but there always is, and we meet all kinds of people. They don't think anything of routing us out of bed now at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning to look at the directory because they think it is our business to keep an open directory for them, and they get us up at any hour to use the telephone."

JERSEY CENTRAL WAGE SCALE.

Answer to the Demands of the Men May Be Given This Week.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Dec. 23.—The new scale of wages which the Board of Directors of the amalgamated organizations of engineers, firemen, brakemen, conductors, and telegraphers employed by the Central Railroad of New Jersey have prepared for the railroad officials to accept, includes an average increase of $5 per month for the firemen, brakemen, and telegraphers. The conductors want to be paid by the mile, the same as the engineers, with a minimum rate of $3 for the day, the same as they now receive, providing the number of miles they run does not equal that sum. This would mean a slight increase in the pay of the conductors running through trains. It is also demanded that the company issue annual passes to the men who have been in the service of the company ten years, also to their wives.

The negotiations for the new wage scale, which has been under consideration since last May, is being managed by the committee, of which L. P. Titus is Chairman. It is expected that the company will give a definite answer to the proposed scale this week. The employes believe that it will be accepted and put into effect at once.

SAW FATHER DRINK WHISKY.

Baby Follows His Example and Is Taken to Hospital in Convulsions.

The rule against admitting children under five years of age into the J. Hood Wright Hospital was broken yesterday, when a man brought a child in convulsions, to Surgeon Hanscomb.

The child was Marie Horn, two and a half years old, of 523 West One Hundred and Thirty-first Street.

She was playing about the house yesterday morning, and saw her father go to a cupboard and take down a bottle. He filled a glass and drank.

When the man left the room the child followed his example. The liquor in the bottle was whisky. The child fell to the floor, and a little while later her father found her in convulsions. The child's condition is serious.

FIRE PANIC IN BIG TENEMENT.

Sick Woman, with Babe in Arms, Forces Way Through Frightened Crowd.

Fire in the "Big Block," that on West Sixty-second Street, between Amsterdam and West End Avenues, which is said to have the largest population of any like area in the world, badly frightened the tenants for a time. It burned part of No. 242, and did $1,000 damage. Twenty colored families live in the house.

William Brooks was entertaining friends in his apartment on the top floor. Mrs. Celia Owens, a tenant in the rear of the house, saw flames through the transom and shrieked "Fire!" She gathered her five children together, and cried out to her daughter, Mrs. Susie Gotfried, who was sick in bed with a few-days-old baby. Mrs. Gotfried carried her baby to the street through the crowd of people trying to get out. All got out safely.

Capt. Cosgrove of Engine No. 40 was first to arrive. His men prevented the flames from spreading further than the top floor, though they broke through the roof. In going through the house after the fire the police found playing cards strewn all along the third floor hallway.

Bluestone Properties Sold.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Dec. 23.—J. F. Kilgour of Passaic, N. J., once famous as the Bluestone King, has just purchased extensive bluestone properties at West Brookville, Sullivan County. A company has been formed, of which Dr. Jones of 1,027 Third Avenue and W. C. Diiger of 198 East Fifty-eighth Street, New York, will be members. This property was controlled by the Midland Bluestone Company, with a capital stock of $200,000, twenty-eight years ago.

Died Suddenly at the Supper Table.

Joseph Rosenbaum, fifty years old, died suddenly at his home, 17 East Ninety-fifth Street, on Saturday. He was about to sit down to supper, when he fell over and died. His death was due to heart disease. Mr. Rosenbaum was born in this city, and was connected with the Kentucky Distilling Company.

Died from a Boar's Bite.

LANCASTER, Penn., Dec. 23.—Benjamin Bishop of Penryn, aged forty-two years, died to-day at St. Joseph's Hospital. Some time ago, while feeding his hogs, Bishop was viciously attacked by a boar, which bit him severely on the leg. Blood poisoning resulted.

John T. McCutcheon Ill.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—John T. McCutcheon, the artist and newspaper correspondent, is critically ill at his home in this city. He was stricken with pneumonia several days ago.

POMMERY

THE STANDARD FOR CHAMPAGNE QUALITY.

"Among the best judges of Champagne, it is a common expression that to order Pommery is to get the best bottle of Champagne procurable. There is no other brand of Champagne that is more extensively used in the most exclusive and fashionable circles."—BONFORD'S WINE AND SPIRIT CIRCULAR.

THE METROPOLITAN CONCERT.

Regular Season Opens with the "Stabat Mater" and Miscellaneous Programme.

The formal season of grand opera in many tongues commonly caters to two distinct elements in this town, the regular audience of opera night and the concert or Sunday night audience. Mr. Grau's stars had had their greeting from the first earlier in the week. Last night they were welcomed by the second. Thus it was that the first Metropolitan concert in crowds, enthusiasm, and long-continued welcome to each new singer was largely in the nature of a first night.

The latter half of the evening was given over to Rossini's "Stabat Mater." The arrangement was:

"Stabat Mater."
(a) Introduction—"Stabat Mater Dolorosa." Mmes. Nordica and Schumann-Heink; MM. Cremonini and Plançon, and Chorus.
(b) Aria—"Cujus Animam" ....M. Cremonini
(c) Duet—"Quis est Homo." Mmes. Nordica and Schumann-Heink.
(d) Aria—"Pro Peccatis" .....M. Plançon
(e) Aria and Chorus—"Eia, Mater." M. Plançon and Chorus.
(f) Quartet—"Sancta Mater istud agas." Mmes. Nordica and Schumann-Heink; MM. Cremonini and Plançon.
(g) Cavatina—"Fac ut Portem." Mme. Schumann-Heink.
(h) Aria and Chorus—"Inflammatus." Mmes. Nordica and Chorus.
(i) Quartet—"Quando Corpus." Mmes. Nordica and Schumann-Heink; MM. Cremonini and Plançon.
(j) Chorus—"In Sempiterna Saecula." Chorus.

Pol Plançon, in his two arias, was heartily welcome, and Mme. Schumann-Heink's always numerous admirers nearly forced a repetition of her cavatina. Mme. Nordica sang the "Inflammatus" twice.

Of the miscellaneous concert preceding the oratorio, the overture to Meyerbeer's "Dinorah" was the popular number. In addition Campanari sang "Inno Sacro," Miss Susan Strong an aria from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba," Cremonini Donizetti's "Spirito Gentile," Gilbert an air from "Tannhäuser," and Miss Carrie Bridewell "Ah, mon fils," from "Le Prophete."

Performance of "Hamlet" Postponed.

In consequence of the need of extra rehearsals for the heavy scenery of "Hamlet," Mme. Bernhardt and M. Coquelin decided late last night to postpone the first performance at the Garden Theatre until Tuesday evening. Tickets purchased for this evening will be exchanged for any other performance, or the money will be refunded at the box office.

E. H. Sothern Returns to Work.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 23.—E. H. Sothern, the well-known actor, who has been laid up for some time from a serious accident that resulted in the cancellation of numerous dates, arrived here to-night with other members of Daniel Frohman's company and will appear with the company to-morrow night.

"The War of Women" Stranded.

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 23.—"The War of Women" theatrical company, headed by Miss Hope Booth, has disbanded in this city, owing to lack of funds. Several of the company who reside in New York are in financial difficulties.

DROWNED IN AIDING COMPANION.

Skater Escaped Once, but Went Back to Meet Death.

SUSQUEHANNA, Penn., Dec. 23.—While a party of young people were skating upon the ice on the Susquehanna River last night at State Line, four miles north of Susquehanna, the ice broke and two of the number, Miss Ida McKune of State Line, aged twenty-two years, and Arthur Munson of Lanesborough, aged twenty years, went under.

Miss McKune's body disappeared from view, but Munson succeeded in reaching shore. He hurried to a farmhouse nearby for help, and while working with the rescuing party a few minutes later he went through the ice a second time and was drowned. The bodies were recovered several hours later. Hundreds of men were engaged in the search for them.

Mr. Munson was employed in the Erie Railroad shops at Susquehanna. Miss McKune was employed by the Delaware and Hudson Railroad Company, at State Line.

POLICEMAN SLEPT ON WATCH.

Nap Almost Cost His Life in a Burning Building in Halifax.

HALIFAX, N. S., Dec. 23.—Fire partially gutted The Chronicle newspaper building this morning. The blaze started Saturday night about 11 o'clock and was supposed to be extinguished. A police officer was placed inside the building to watch in case of a second outbreak. He is believed to have fallen asleep, as at 3:30 o'clock this morning a soldier doing sentry duty close by observed flames breaking through several windows and gave the alarm.

The fire had gained such headway that the escape of the policeman by the doorways was cut off. The officer appeared at one of the windows later on calling for help. The window was broken in and he was taken out half suffocated with smoke. The loss by fire and water is estimated at $10,000.

CHICAGO MURDERER PARDONED.

Had Killed a Policeman in Dispute About the Boer War.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—Patrick Furlong, once a policeman, who, in February, 1900, killed Edward Leach, a brother officer, and was aentenced to the penitentiary for fourteen years, has been pardoned by Gov. Tanner, and will take his Christmas dinner with his family in Chicago.

Furlong, who is of Irish parentage, and Leach, an Englishman, became involved in an argument about the Boer war. Leach's declarations that England could whip any country on earth led to blows, and both men drew revolvers, Furlong shot first, with fatal effect.

MAGISTRATE FINES A MEDDLER.

Says New York Has Troubles of Its Own Without Outside Interference.

Albert Dexter, a young man who said he was from North Carolina, was fined $10 in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday by Magistrate Zeller for striking Louis Viano, a seventeen-year-old newsboy, who is better known as "Louisiana." According to the story told by the boy, he was selling papers at Fourteenth Street and Sixth Avenue, on Saturday evening, when a smaller boy asked him to buy his stock of papers. Dexter, he said, interfered and attempted to force him to buy the papers from the boy, and, when he declined, struck him and knocked him down.

Dexter said that he struck "Louisiana" because he had struck a smaller boy. Magistrate Zeller fined him $10 and said, "We do not need people to come from North Carolina to protect our citizens. We have enough trouble with people who live here, without having people from North Carolina meddling in our affairs."

HAD HER FIANCE ARRESTED.

Accused Him of Selling the Furniture of Her Flat While She Was Out.

Miss Mary Thomas of 127 West Two Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street was to have been married Friday evening to William Henry Wallace of 212 West Sixty-second Street, but instead she had him arrested last night on the charge that he sold $250 worth of furniture of her flat.

Wallace and Miss Thomas met two months ago, and they soon were engaged to be married. He gave her a gold engagement ring, but asked her for it last week, saying he wanted to have it engraved. Then he gave her a little money, she says, and told her to buy a Christmas article, and she went down town to purchase it.

While she was gone Wallace had all of the furniture of the flat removed to a second-hand dealer's store on Eighth Avenue, between One Hundred and Twentieth and One Hundred and Twenty-first Streets, where it had been sold for $50. Wallace was arrested last night.

New Barbers' Union Formed.

A new barbers' union has been formed to take the place of the former organization suspended for meeting in a non-union hall. J. R. Helm, who appeared as delegate of the new organization at the Central Federated Union yesterday, announced that union shops would be opened in all parts of the city.

FRENCH CANADIANS' HOPES.

High Birth Rate in Quebec Compared with Decrease in Ontario Leads to Extravagant Language.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Dec. 23.—The diminution in the birth rate of Ontario, especially in view of the fact that there is no sign of a decrease in the large birth rate of the French Canadians in Quebec, is attracting some attention. For a number of years past the birth rate in Ontario, the most populous and progressive of the English provinces of Canada, has remained stationary, in fact in many years has shown a retrograde movement. So striking were the statistics on this point that the Synod of the Church of England in Canada at its last triennial meeting in Montreal took the matter up seriously, and debated it at length. One reason assigned why there is not a similar state of affairs in Quebec is that strict ideas on the ideals and duties of marriage are enforced by the Roman Catholic Church.

The annual report of the Department of Public Health in Ontario, just issued, shows that there has been a steady augmentation in the number of marriages during the past few years, there being 1,139 more in 1899 than during the previous year. Notwithstanding this fact, the number of births was only 44,705 in 1899, as compared with 46,590 in 1898.

Les Débats, a French Sunday paper, published in this city, gives the statistics with the remark: "Courage, valiant French Canadian mothers, French domination will come about through you, and your grateful country will elevate you on its altars."

Elsewhere it has an article headed "Le Malthusianisme dans L'Ontario," in which it says:

"Naturally, the French Canadians, who, as a Minister of the Crown has already well said, hope to one day become the majority in Canada, do not complain of these things for their part. We will show you something in twenty-five years. At that date we will equal the English if we play our cards well. Once we reach that point, we will see what a panic there will be among the loyalists of Ontario, so literally terrified by the spectre of French domination that they will begin to emigrate to the United States, recommencing the grand trek. The proof of the mutual repulsion which separates our two races is to be found in an article in an Ontario paper, which declares that the English of that province would prefer to be annexed to the States than to submit to French-Canadian supremacy. So much the better. Do it, then, quickly, for the French-Canadian supremacy which you so much detest is coming regularly, pitilessly, as the large hand of a clock. At the hour marked it will submerge you beyond return. Annex yourselves, Malthusians of Ontario, while there is yet time. Later there will not be time, for you must remember that when we are the stronger we may not permit you."

This is the paper which was bought up by Mr. Tarte to support the Government during the last election, and which is now carrying to extremes the race war then inaugurated.

DOCTOR VACCINATES HIS NOSE.

Some Humorous Features of the Smallpox Outbreak—Strange Case of Non-Infection.

Serious as the present smallpox outbreak has appeared at various times, it has not been without its humorous features, though some of the episodes which have caused many smiles have seemed anything but funny to the principal actors in them.

One physician in this city had a slight scratch on his right thumb, and while he was vaccinating a number of his patients just a little of the virus touched it unnoticed. He knew about it forty-eight hours later, when it "took." If he has been out of practice for a week or two, he has at least the satisfaction of knowing that according to accepted theories he is immune from smallpox.

His experience, however, is as nothing to that of one of the vaccinators on the staff of Dr. Alonzo Blauvelt, Chief Inspector of the Bureau of Contagious Diseases. This doctor had a slight pimple on his nose, and while he was at work with needles and toothpicks it itched and he absentmindedly scratched it. This "took," too, and in a few days the unhappy man was in seclusion nursing a huge red, purple, and blue proboscis which would cause to fade into insignificance the greatest efects of the wildest Western "nose-paint" if brought near it. It is a trying situation for a model of sobriety.

In striking contrast to these cases is an old story told in connection with them to show that the infection is not always so easily passed along from one to the other.

It was in the height of the great blizzard that a man walked into the department offices, then in the Police Headquarters building, with a severe case right in the sloughing stage, when contagion is supposed to be almost unavoidable for all unvaccinated who come in contact with the patient. The stranger said he had been refused admission to an up-town hospital, where his trouble was recognized, and that as cabs could not get around he had come down town on the Sixth Avenue elevated road, only to be stalled for three hours in a car so crowded that the passengers were standing on the seats and it was necessary from time to time to open the windows to let out some of the heat from their wet and steaming forms. This, too, was a condition most favorable for the spread of the disease.

The man was sent to the pesthouse as quickly as he could be got there, without resorting to any other public conveyance, and the officials had everything in readiness when the prescribed two weeks had gone by to receive the majority, if not all of his fellow-passengers, none of whom, however, came under their care. Still, the doctors conclude every story these days with the remark: "The only way to be safe is to be vaccinated."

Woman Killed by a Train in Jersey City.

An unknown woman about forty years old was run over and killed at the Monmouth Street crossing of the Erie Railroad Weehawken Coal Branch, Jersey City, last night. She was well dressed, and in her pocketbook was found a wedding ring, two water bills, and two tax bills. The pocketbook had been ground under the car wheels, and the name in which the bills were made out could not be deciphered.

Louisville Man Robbed and Murdered.

LOUISVILLE, Dec. 23.—John Kappleman, a private watchman, was found to-day near his place of employment with his brains beaten out. His pockets had been rifled of his wages paid him the night before. No arrests have yet been made.

Tornado in Alabama.

MACON, Miss., Dec. 23.—News was received here to-day that a tornado passed through the eastern edge of Noxubee County and the western part of Pickens and Sumpter Counties, Ala., last night, doing great damage. On several plantations houses were blown down. Two negroes are known to have been killed.

SUGGESTIONS.

1. We manufacture solid silver only, and of but one grade, that of sterling 925-1000 fine; therefore the above trade mark is a guarantee of quality as absolute as the Hall Mark of England.
2. Purchasers secure an entire freedom from false impressions to which they are liable where solid silver and plated ware are made in the same factory.
3. The question, "Is it silver, or is it plated?" is never raised concerning a gift bearing this trade mark, as all wares so marked are solid silver and solid silver only.

BOY SHOT UNDER THE EYE

Crazed Man Fatally Wounds Nine-Year-Old Nathan Roth.

John Galletus Feared His Fellow-Employes Were Persecuting Him and Fires Recklessly on a Brooklyn Street.

Nathan Roth, nine years old, who lives with his parents at 166 Berry Street, Brooklyn, was shot and probably fatally wounded last night by John Galletus, a boiler maker, who lives at 113 North Fifth Street. James Kelly, twenty-seven years old, of 179 Bedford Avenue, was also shot by Galletus, but his wound is not serious.

Roth was shot in the head, the bullet entering under the right eye. After both the boy and man had fallen to the sidewalk, Galletus fired a third shot at another passing pedestrian, but he ducked his head and the bullet went wide.

Galletus then ran up stairs to his apartments, and placed the revolver on the front room mantel. The shooting quickly attracted a large crowd of excited people. Policemen Owens and Burns of the Bedford Avenue Station went into the house to look for Galletus. Owens found him in his apartments. Galletus gave up his pistol and was then arrested.

Young Roth and Kelly were attended in a drug store at North Sixth and Berry Streets by Dr. Shields of the Eastern District Hospital. He found Kelly's heavy overcoat and some cards had stopped the force of the bullet, and his wound was slight. In Roth's case the eyeball was hanging from its socket. The boy was unconscious, and was hurried to the hospital, where the surgeons at once began to probe for the bullet.

Galletus is employed in a shop in Greenpoint. He has a wife and two children. Lately he has had trouble with fellow-employes, and a week ago was struck in the right eye. On Friday another man cut one of his fingers. He told his wife he was afraid the men would some day kill him. A party of men shouting passed the house at 7 o'clock last evening. Galletus jumped up, exclaiming.

"They're after me; they're after me!" He grabbed the revolver. Mrs. Galletus tried to restrain him, but he pushed her aside, and ran down the stairs yelling: "I'll kill them now!" Just as Roth and Kelly were passing the house he began shooting. It is thought he was temporarily insane.

DISTRESS IN PORTO RICO.

Army Officer Reports that Many of the People Are Dying of Starvation There.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Dec. 23.—Dr. A. D. Williams, Assistant Surgeon of the United States Army, has arrived from Porto Rico, where he was detailed to make a report on conditions as observed by him on a march with soldiers across the island. That report was made to the Adjutant General, Department of Porto Rico, San Juan. A copy of the report was given out to-night by Dr. Williams.

"At Los Marias," the report says, "we began to see the vanguard of misery. In that small, squalid town there is no medical man. Many were sick. A Mr. Toncuand, the American school teacher there, told me that many of the people, not only of the surrounding country, but of the town, were in great distress. I asked him the cause of so much sickness, and so many deaths. He answered without hesitation, 'For want of food.'" The report continues:

"At Adjuntas the conditions were appalling, men, women, and children, swollen, bloated, diseased, and emaciated, whose pinched and haggard features appeared weighted with the sorrows of years. When I asked the City Physician of Adjuntas the cause of such a large death rate—fifty-two deaths and four births the week immediately preceding our visit there—he replied: 'The death rate is about the same every week. The prime cause, chronic starvation.'"

Dr. Williams in this report declares that with fourteen patients in the hospital at this place and three nurses, the municipal authorities allow the steward to draw only $1 a day in municipal stamps for the subsistence and care of the patients, and that the steward can realize only 50 cents for his stamps, and with that amount daily he has to provide the scanty hospital food.

GEN. GREENE'S SUCCESSOR.

Senator Platt Says the Man Has Not Yet Been Selected.

Senator Platt, when asked last night about the appointment of a successor to Gen. F. V. Greene as Chairman of the County Committee, said: "That matter has not been decided upon. Executive Chairman William H. Ten Eyck and ex-Surrogate James M. Varnum are being considered, but other names have also been brought forward."

The Senator also said there was a sentiment in favor of Garrett A. Benson of Albany for Sergeant at Arms of the State Senate. Some Albany organization Republicans, however, are, according to report, working against Benson because of local disputes.

Mr. Hill Keeps Out of Sight.

Ex-Senator David B. Hill played the game of hide-and-seek yesterday. He left the Hoffman House early in the day and at a late hour last night, according to information retailed at the desk, had not returned. But he had not given up his room although it was declared by an attaché that his grip had been taken early in the day to the residence of an ex-State official.

Democrats' Speeches Merely Deferred.

The statement was current yeaterday that no speeches were made at the Manhattan Club on Saturday night because it was considered too early to discuss the Democratic Party conditions. A similar reception will be given in the early Spring, when it is promised that Democrats of prominence from all parts of the country will be heard on the question of the reorganization of the party and other matters.

CAR IN TWO SMASH-UPS.

First Accident Fractures Man's Skull; Second Hurts Two Policemen.

John Riley, twenty-six years old, of 640 East One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Street, and James Murray, twenty-six years old, of 615 Eagle Avenue, motormen on the Union Trolley Company Line, were prisoners in Morrisania Police Court yesterday morning, having been participants in a collision at One Hundred and Sixty-first Street and Washington Avenue, early yesterday morning.

Murray ran his car into a furniture van driven by Daniel Little, twenty-four years old, of 222 East One Hundred and Twenty-third Street. Little received a fractured skull. He was taken to Fordham Hospital, and may die.

While Roundsman Breen and Policeman Dam of the Morrisania Police Station were getting the motorman's name, a second car, in charge of Riley, came along and crashed into the first car. Bren and Dam were thrown to the street and were injured, but not seriously.

The motormen were paroled until Jan. 2 by Magistrate Brann.

For an Irish Parliamentary Fund.

DUBLIN, Dec. 23.—Archbishop Walsh, in a letter to John E. Redmond, leader of the Irish Parliamentary Party, says "the time has come to resume the old practice, in abeyance for several years, of subscribing to the Irish Parliamentary Fund." He incloses a check for £10, and congratulates Mr. Redmond upon "grappling with exemplary success with the difficulties of your position."

Mother Stops Wedding Ceremony.

SUSQUEHANNA, Penn., Dec. 23.—At Hawleyton last night, while David D. Owen and Miss Nancy D. Vaughan were being united in marriage by a local Justice of the Peace, and when the ceremony was half completed, the young woman's mother jumped in between the couple and forbade further proceedings. The marriage was then declared off.

T. L. POOLE DIES SUDDENLY.

Stricken with Apoplexy, United States Marshal Expires Almost Instantly at Syracuse.

SYRACUSE, Dec. 23.—Theodore L. Poole, United States Marshal for the Northern District of New York State and member of the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Onondaga-Madison District from 1894 to 1896, was stricken with apoplexy this morning at 8 o'clock as he attempted to rise from his bed and died immediately.

Major Poole had been in poor health for several months. During the Summer he suffered from an attack of nervous prostration, from which he recovered sufficiently to assume in September the active duties of United States Marshal, for which he qualified early in July. He was born in Elbridge, Onondaga County, on April 10, 1840. When twenty-two years of age he enlisted as a private in Company I of the One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment, New York Volunteers. When the regiment was mustered into service he was appointed Quartermaster-Sergeant, and from that time was successively advanced until the close of the war, when he was discharged with the rank of Brevet Major. At the battle of Cold Harbor he was severely wounded, and after several months of suffering at the hospital it became necessary to amputate his left arm to save his life.

Since the war Major Poole has been prominent in politics. He was a Republican, and had occupied the offices of Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue, United States Pension Agent for the Western District of New York, United States Congressman, and United States Marshal. He was also a prominent Grand Army of the Republic man, serving for ten years as a member of the Council of Administration, and in 1892 being chosen Commander of the Department of New York for one term.

CHRISTMAS CHEER FOR THE POOR

Week of Feasting Arranged by the Episcopal City Mission.

Nearly all of this week will be occupied by the New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society in giving Christmas festivals to the poor under its charge. The first festival will be given at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon to the young boys and girls who are living under the roof of St. Barnabas House, at 304 Mulberry Street.

On Thursday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, there will be a festival for the children of the industrial school at God's Providence Mission, on Broome Street, east of the Bowery. On the same evening, at the same place, the members of the Boys' Club and the Girls' Guild will be entertained by the society. On the same evening there will be a festival for the children connected with St. Ambrose's Church, at Prince and Thompson Streets.

On Friday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, the day nursery children will be the guests of the society at God's Providence Mission. On the same evening the members of the Sunday school of the Chapel of the Messiah, on East Ninety-fifth Street, near Third Avenue, will have their Christmas tree and feast.

On Sunday afternoon the children connected with the Italian Church of San Salvatore, at 40 Bleecker Street, will have their Christmas festival.

GUAYAQUIL-QUITO RAILWAY.

Chance for Americans to Secure Employment Pointed Out by Consul De Leon.

Perry M. De Leon, United States Consul General at Guayaquil, in a report upon the progress of railroads in Ecuador, points out the chances open to Americans to secure remunerative positions in connection with the development of the Guayaquil-Quito Railroad.

The report says that a company called the Ecuadorian Association, consisting of New York, London, and Edinburgh capitalists, has engaged a number of mining engineers to prospect the country and has made a contract with a railroad contractor, J. P. McDonald of Knoxville, Tenn., to build the road to Quito. Already 3,000 laborers are employed on the road, which is to cost $18,000,000 and is to extend 300 miles, piercing the heart of the Andes and rivaling the famous Arroya Road in Peru.

The engineering department is under the management of John A. Harmon of Virginia, who is assisted by a corps of American engineers, and under whose direction over fifty miles of the road have already been graded ready for the rails. This road, the report says, will undoubtedly stimulate commerce between the United States and Ecuador, especially with California, from where would be shipped large quantities of groceries, provisions, wines, &c. The report adds:

A number of American engineers, sub-contractors, and foremen are employed on the work, but there is need for many more, especially for the two latter classes. Competent and sober men can find employment as clerks, and several good stenographers who can speak and write Spanish as well as English can find employment. Parties interested should address F. C. Dunn Guayaquil, Ecuador, and the Ecuadorian Association, New York.

GERMAN BUSINESS DEPRESSION

Consul Albert Says It Is a Natural Reaction After a Period of Great Prosperity.

Talbot J. Albert, United States Consul at Brunswick, in a report treating of the business depression in Germany, quotes statistics showing that there has been a decrease of 37.4 per cent. in building enterprises in Germany, as compared with the Summer of 1899; of 58 per cent. in railroad projects; of 63.43 per cent. in construction of electrical and street railroads; of 32.33 per cent. in projected electrical plants for lighting, &c. Continuing, he says:

The number of projected gas works is almost a third less, but, in view of size and percentage of production, there is little difference. In other spheres of activity, such as mining and smelting, work in stone and earth, (fertilizing salts, &c.) metal manufacture, production of chemicals and textiles, breweries, and water works, the statistics show a difference of 27.2 per cent.

There have been quite a number of failures in all branches of business during the last seven months, and in my own Consular district two of the oldest and best established glove manufacturers have become bankrupt.

This depression is a natural reaction after so much prosperity. Germany was never so flourishing as during the year 1899. New business enterprises of all kinds were projected and old enterprises increased their plants; future profits were discounted; new issues of securities were made to cover expected profits. The depression in the iron and steel trade in April last called the attention of the public to the actual condition of affairs and this led to the general taking of stock. A judicious restriction of the spirit of enterprise followed, which averted an otherwise inevitable panic.

SAY F. M. PARSONS RESIGNED.

Rumored that Deputy Attorney General Will Reaume Practice.

ALBANY, Dec. 23.—It was announced on excellent authority that Deputy Attorney General Frank M. Parsons had resigned. The report could not be verified, owing to the absence from the city of Attorney General Davies and his deputies. To a few of his intimate friends several weeks ago Mr. Parsons signified his intention of resigning his place in order to again resume the practice of law.

Mr. Parsons was appointed a Deputy Attorney General by ex-Attorney General T. E. Hancock. During his connection with the office he has rendered many important opinions.

Dominion Stocks Favored in London.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Dec. 23.—The Finance Department has been advised of the appearance in the London Official Gazette of a notice of the admission of Dominion inscribed stocks to the list of securities in which trust funds should be invested. It was announced by Mr. Fielding, Minister of Finance, last session that the arrangement was well under way.

Crosstown Cars in Collision.

A half-hour block resulted on the Sixth and Amsterdam Avenues, and Fifty-ninth Street crosstown electric lines on Fifty-ninth Street, just east of Columbus Avenue, last night, when Car No. 266 crashed into one ahead of it. The front platform was broken off and fell on the ground, and the "shoe" under the car was caught in the slot. It took a wrecking crew half an hour to dislodge it.

WILL CHRISTEN CUP YACHTS.

Misses Lawson and Hanley to Name the Rival Boats Building in Boston.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 23.—That two of Boston's fairest young women will christen the two Boston yachts that in the Spring will race for the privilege of defending the America's Cup, is, it is said, practically certain. Miss Gladys Lawson, daughter of Thomas W. Lawson, who will build the keel boat, will give a name to the boat that Designer Crowninshield has planned. Miss Lawson is a beautiful young woman, and one of the most popular of the younger Back Bay set. She is also an accomplished horsewoman.

When the new centreboard cup defender, which C. C. Hanley is designing in Quincy, is ready for christening, it will be Miss Sadee Eleanor Hanley, Mr. Hanley's eldest daughter, who will break the bottle of champagne across the new craft's bow. This much, along with other details of launching, has been definitely decided upon. Miss Hanley, although having lived there but a short time, is recognized as one of Quincy's most charming young ladies. She was graduated from the Boston University in the class of 1898, being Secretary of her class. At the college Miss Hanley was a leader socially, as well as intellectually, and was a member of the Gamma Delta and several ladies' societies. She also taught in connection with College Settlement work carried on in the North End under the supervision of Wellesley College. Miss Hanley's specialty was language, and on graduation she accepted a position as teacher of languages in Monmouth (Me.) Academy, where she now is.

BRONZE FOR CUP DEFENDER.

Composition Metal Received at Herreshoff Yards for New Yacht.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 23.—The hull of the new defender to be built at Bristol for the Belmont syndicate is to be plated with the same quality of metal used in plating the Columbia two years ago. The first consignment of Tobin bronze arrived in Bristol this morning direct from Ansonia over the Consolidated Railroad in box cars. The Ansonia shippers marked the lot as "sheet brass," which was the designation given to the Tobin bronze plates shipped to Bristol two years ago for the hull of the Columbia.

Forty-seven crates of this plating have been shipped to the Bristol boat builders. There are several crates yet to arrive, but from what is learned they will be in Bristol to-night. The forty-seven crates of plating will go far toward completely covering the frame of the new cup defender. To-day the designer spent a considerable time inspecting the keel casting in the south shop. When the lead is completely cool the work of attaching the keel plates and setting up the frames (now being bent) will be rushed at top speed.

GARDNER IS CLUB CHAMPION.

Victor in Crescent A. C. Billiard Tourney Surprised Spectators.

The final game in the annual billiard championship tournament of the Crescent Athletic Club was decided at the city clubhouse of the organization, in Clinton Street, Brooklyn, Saturday night. Frank C. Gardner furnished a surprise by defeating Frank A. Keeny, champion of the club, and previous holder of the title, by seventy-nine points. Gardner was slow and started off poorly, but steadied himself and finished the game with a fine run of thirty-three. The summary:

Final Game, Crescent Athletic Club Championship Tourney.—Frank A. Gardner—5 1 0 1 8 11 13 7 2 1 5 1 2 5 0 0 10 13 0 0 6 1 4 14 4 5 1 1 8 0 14 6 30 6 2 14 3 7 33. Total, 250; average, 8 16-39; highest runs, 33, 30, 14, 14.

Riding Club's Christmas Games.

The annual Christmas festival of the children of the Riding and Driving Club of Brooklyn was held on Saturday at the clubhouse on the Park Slope. Santa Claus, the children's patron saint, was thoroughly up to date in coming on the scene in an automobile, with Frank Duryea, an expert chauffeur, holding the levers. He was received with howls of delight, though some of the children thought he looked like Riding Master Harry Taylor. With a blare of horns he rolled in on the auto, which was loaded with toys and candies. He alighted at the club parlors, and then distributed boxes of bonbons to the children, and, having many left, treated the older people to a share of the sweetmeats. The music ride which followed was participated in by the Misses Ackerman, Smyth, Leech, Kenyon, Gaynor, Walton, Hubbs, Bruff, the Misses Bedford, and Messrs. Dykman, De Selding, Bedford, Dinghee, Dunne, Shepard, and Roscoe Gaynor. Each of the riders received a present from the club. The sports of the day resulted as follows:

Egg and Spoon Race for Girls, Scratch.—Final heat won by Miss Leslie Ackerman; Miss Mildred Bedford second and Miss Leech third.

Boys' Egg and Spoon Race.—Final heat won by Jack Dykman; Desmond Dunne, Jr., second, and E. T. Bedford, Jr., third.

Potomac Regatta Next Year.

The announcement is made that next season a Potomac regatta will be held at Washington, in which crews from all over the country will be invited to compete. President Doyle of the Potomacs will begin work on the undertaking during the Winter, and expects to secure the assistance of the Analostans and the Columbias, as well as the support of the business men of Washington. Boating men from all the clubs are anxious to come to Washington to row on the historic river once again, and an effort is to be made to have the regatta take place about midsummer.

There have been four cups offered by Washingtonians for boat races, three of which are held by out-of-town clubs, while the other is held by the Analostans of Washington. The Washington Post Cup is held by the Ariels of Baltimore, The Evening Star Cup by the Ariels, the Merchants' Cup by the Analostans of Washington, and the Mason Cup by the Pennsylvania Barge Club of Philadelphia. President Doyle will have these prizes returned for another Potomac River regatta, and in addition will have medals and other prizes.

Armory Athletic Games.

The Brooklyn Athletic Club and Forty-seventh Regiment Athletic Association games, which are scheduled for the Forty-seventh Regiment Armory Jan. 23, 1901, are attracting the attention of all the competing athletes in the metropolitan district. The armory will allow a 100-yard straightaway and has a track eight laps to the mile. It is one of the largest atructures of its kind in the United States. The following events will be decided under the Amateur Athletic Union rules and are open to all registered athletes, whether members of athletic clubs or not: 100-yard run, handicap; 220-yard run, handicap; 440-yard run, handicap; 880-yard run, handicap; 880-yard run, novice; one-mile run, handicap; one-mile relay race, handicap; four men to each team; 12-pound shot, handicap.

The following events will also form part of the programme, and are open to members of the regiment only: One-hundred-yard handicap, 220-yard run, novice; 880-yard run, handicap; one-mile run, handicap. There will be one bicycle event on the card at one mile, under the sanction of the National Cycling Association.

The prizes in the relay race will consist of a handsome silver cup and four silver medals to the winning team, and four bronze medals to the second team. In all other events the prizes will consist of silver cups to the first, second, and third in each event. A banner will be presented to the club scoring the most number of points.

New York Wrestler Injured.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., Dec. 23.—In a Graeco-Roman wrestling match at the West End Wheelmen's Club room's last night between M. J. Dwyer of this city and H. C. Leonard of New York, the latter sustained two broken ribs. He declined medical attention, but left on the early morning train for New York. The bout was awarded to Dwyer, who received a purse of $200 and 7 per cent. of the gate receipts.

LABOR STRIKES NOT EFFECTIVE.

British Delegate Says Legislation Will Solve Social Problem.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23. — "You can never solve the social problem by strikes; that is my opinion after twenty years' experience in the movement," said Peter Curran, Chairman of the General Federation of Trades Union of Great Britain, in speaking to the workingmen of Chicago to-day at a meeting held under the auspices of the Building Trades Council.

Mr. Curran came to this country as the fraternal delegate from the British Trades Union Congress to the American Federation of Labor Convention and represents about 2,000,000 organized workers in the United Kingdom. He is President and organizer of the Gas Workers and General Laborers' Union, with general offices in London. Mr. Curran said:

"After spending more money in England during the last twenty-five years on the industrial battlefield than would keep 700 men legislating for our interests in the houses of Parliament, we have come to the conclusion that we must have something to say about the making of the laws under which we have to work, and we must get away from the old orthodox political parties if we hope to secure what we seek.

"The only possibility of our securing labor legislation is by sending our own men to Parliament, not as our masters, but as our servants. You never can remedy the social evils of which you complain by muscular force. You must do it through legislation.

"I am not in favor of any laws which would take away the right of the worker to strike, but I am not an advocate of strikes. There is only one solution, and that is in common ownership, for as long as we allow the land and the machinery of the country to be held as private monopolies by the few, so long will we have industrial disputes and upheavals."

STREET CAR MEN STRIKE.

Scranton Company Employes Want an Advance in Pay.

SCRANTON, Penn., Dec. 23.—Every one of the 300 car and barn employes of the Scranton Railway Company obeyed the strike order which went into effect at 5 o'clock this morning, and as a consequence only two cars were run in all of the Lackawanna Valley to-day. These two cars were manned by Superintendent Patterson and dispatchers, foremen, and clerks. No attempt was made to molest them, and although rain fell a greater part of the day, the two cars seldom had a passenger.

The tied-up region extends from Pittston to Forest City, a distance of thirty miles, and includes sixty-five miles of track, on which eighty cars are run ordinarily.

The men demand 20 cents an hour for old employes and from 15 to 17½ cents for new men. At present the new men receive an average of 15 4-5 cents an hour, and after four years' service this is raised to 17½ cents. They also demand a ten-hour day instead of twelve hours, as at present. The company in its answer to the Grievance Committee's demands, says it is not in a position to afford any increase in wages at this time.

CIVIC REFORM METHODS.

The Rev. R. Heber Newton Advises the Federation to Avoid Cranks.

The Rev. R. Heber Newton addressed a meeting of the Committee of One Hundred of the Civic Federation at the Social Reform Club, 45 University Place, last night on the duties and responsibilities of such a body. Referring to a call by the Federation for a meeting of two delegates from each trade union and reform organization in the city to form a central council, he said:

"I am not clear as to the wisdom of inviting delegates from all reform organizations. All the cranks in the city would want to join in the movement. It is manifestly desirable, if you are to do good work for the betterment of the city, to keep the crank element in the background."

He believed, he said, in first starting the organization on a labor basis, then to ask the co-operation of the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade, the Bar Association, and the other business and professional men's organizations in trying to bring about reforms. One class could not help itself alone.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

BUFFALO, Dec. 23. — The four-story building 963 Broadway was gutted by fire at an early hour this morning. The total damage to the building and contents is estimated at $25,000, divided as follows: Louis Marrel, furniture, $8,000; Wiesman & Eiss, dry goods, $10,000; building, $7,000.

MILFORD, Conn., Dec. 23.—The Park Hotel in this town was almost totally destroyed by fire early this evening, the loss being about $6,000, partially covered by insurance. The house was the second of that name to be burned. Its predecessor on the same site, the old Park Hotel, which was destroyed by fire a few years ago, was a famous hostlery, known to every Yale man of the older generation as the Mecca for students who had suffered ruatication, and called by some of the society boys "the Milford chapter."

"COLD" WEATHER

Be afraid of a cold, if you haven't got it; but don't be afraid, if you have one.

Scott's emulsion of cod-liver oil will break it; but colds don't pay. It costs half a week to humor a cold.

We'll send you a little to try, if you like.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST—Rain and colder, winds westerly.

Since Saturday the storm track has turned sharply to the northward and the centre of disturbance last night overlay Central Upper Michigan with somewhat decreased intensity. The depression extends almost to the Atlantic Coast, and there have been general rains or snows east of the slope region, except in New England, and they continued from the Upper Mississippi Valley and upper lake region eastward. There will be rain in New England and the Middle Atlantic States, followed by clearing weather over the southern portion of the latter district. There will be rain or snow in the Ohio Valley and lower lake region, and snow over the upper lake region. It will be colder in the afternoon or evening in the Middle and South Atlantic States. For to-morrow generally fair weather is indicated over all districts, with lower temperature in New England and somewhat higher temperature in the Central Rocky Mountain region and the extreme Northwest. On the New England and Middle Atlantic Coasts the winds will become brisk to high westerly. On the South Atlantic Coast they will be fresh westerly. Storm signals are displayed from Delaware Breakwater to Portland.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES'S thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

Store Closes this Evening at 7 o'clock

Now for CHRISTMAS and Santa Claus

YOU'RE in a hurry and we're prepared to help to-day. The news below is short and crisp. It suggests the breadth of selection possible in this most comprehensive store. It tells of excellent variety of most ideal gift-things still here, and it hints of many special prices.

Probably most satisfying of all is that this is an all-year-'round store in every line we show, and stocks are not allowed to be sold out completely in anything. This means not only that variety is best here to-day; but also that you or the person to whom you give any article bought here, which may not be right in size, or just the thing wanted, will find excellent selection here and fullest freedom for exchange after Christmas. Now for the goods themselves:

RUGS

An ideal gift, safe to decide on; and, as offered now, costing much less than their real worth.

Oriental Rugs, $6 to $35. Worth a third more.
Smyrna Rugs, 85c to $43. Worth a third more.
Persian Wilton Rugs, 27x54 inches, at $1 each.
Goatskin Rugs, dyed to represent various animal skins, at $3, from $4.50.
Sample line of Sheepskin and Goatskin Rugs at half price.

Third floor.

NECKWEAR

For women. This handsome set—stock collar and belt to match—has become very popular. Sold many of them to purchasers intending to give them as presents. They're of narrow velvet ribbon, strapped with bands of gold ribbon, pink, blue, yellow, white. $8 a set.

Lace barbs in beautiful designs, at $3.75 to $9.75 for real lace; 50c to $1.50 for imitation lace.
Russian lace collars, at $7 to $9.
Ruffs of Liberty silk, $1 to $18.
Black satin stock and four-in-hand, trimmed with gold, $2.65.
The Viola stock, in light blue, pink, white and red, $2.50.
The Vera stock and tie, trimmed with gold; yellow, light blue, pink and red, $1.

Broadway and Tenth street.

Handkerchiefs

Last minute shopping—still a gift or two to be thought of. Handkerchiefs—of course! Easy to choose—when the variety is as broad as here—and sure to be appreciated.

Fancy boxes of 3 handkerchiefs, for children, 25c and 35c; of 6, 50c, 75c and $1
Women's handkerchiefs, white, hemstitched, scalloped, hemstitched and embroidered, or lace trimmed, from 12½c as high as you care to go.
Men's handkerchiefs, plain white, hemstitched, or hemstitched with initial, from 12½c to $1 each.
Silk handkerchiefs and mufflers for men and women.

Broadway.

Fancy Plates

In the China Store is one table filled with beautiful plates in little lots—less than a dozen in each. The shapes and patterns are of our best. A wide variety. They are plates that sold until to-day at $2.50 each; some that are fairly worth $2; some that were $1.50; a few that sold regularly at $1.25. Choose one or more now at One Dollar.

Raglan overcoats of fine cheviot, in gray and olive; 8 to 16 years. Price $15.

Second floor, Ninth street.

Men's Scarfs

There is not the least break in variety here. More scarfs come forward constantly to take the place of those sold. This stock is superb right through the season. The Christmas selling is enormous, but provided for. The most beautiful Neckwear is here from Paris and London, as well as exclusive advance selections from the Spring styles of best American makers.

Prices, 25c to $4.50.

Men's Store, Broadway and Ninth.

Men's Bath Robes

These are the styles that particular men approve. Made in the comfortable way that is exclusively ours—with the "Raglan" sleeve.

They come from our own factory, and this brings a saving of about a quarter of the usual cost, and gives you better robes besides. Excellent variety.

Prices, $3.75, $6, $6.50, $8, $8.50, $10.

Men's Store, Broadway and Ninth.

Umbrellas

An unmatched collection of men's and women's umbrellas at prices from $3.75 to $27.50. Plenty of handsome styles, too, at lower prices, and they're decided bargains.

TILTS ON THE SPEEDWAY

Fast Horses, Driven by Amateur Reinsmen, Make Fine Sport.

MOTH MILLER EARNS HONORS

Mounted Policeman's Skill Averts an Accident—A Great Crowd Watches the Brushes.

The Speedway brigade of trotters and pacers were somewhat late in putting in an appearance on the stretch yesterday morning owing to the threatening weather, but when they did arrive they made up for lost time, and the result was some excellent sport. Not for weeks had the roadbed been in better condition, as the warm damp weather had brought the frost out of the ground and the harrows made the footing soft but firm. Both sides of the stretch were crowded with spectators, who were kept busy keeping track of the speed trials, so numerous did they become shortly before noon. One rather exciting incident occurred while the speeding was at its height which served to prove the efficiency of the mounted police force guarding the drive.

Several pacers were coming down the stretch at a racing clip, when Red Lord, 2:10¼, driven by David Lamar, took fright and broke into a gallop. Mr. Lamar, who is an expert driver, clung to the reins and sawed at the bit without bringing the animal to his feet. Mounted Policeman Flanigan, who has any number of captures to his credit, saw the condition of affairs and was after the unruly animal in an instant. For a minute there was the liveliest kind of a race. There was a question whether Flanigan could overhaul Red Lord. Digging the spurs deep into his horse, the policeman urged his mount to his utmost speed, and gradually gaining seized the runaway pacer by the bit. A short but decisive struggle followed, and Mr. Lamar, getting a new grip on the lines, soon quieted the animal, while the crowd cheered Flanigan's good work enthusiastically.

The roan pacer Moth Miller, 2:07, driven by Dr. David Randall, proved a prominent factor in the sport yesterday morning and won a number of brushes in fast company. One of the horse's first encounters was the pacer Mike, driven by G. W. Groto, who held Moth Miller to the first quarter post, when the roan spurted, gained a lead of a length, and landed an easy winner. On the next trip down the stretch Moth Miller had Birdie R., driven by A. E. Thompson; Oscar, 2:20¼, driven by B. Zahn, and Whistle, 2:20, with Dr. Neldan handling the ribbons. The start was a very ragged one, but before a quarter had been covered they were pretty well bunched, with Moth Miller leading and Birdie R. in second place, closely followed by Whistle. They finished in this order, Moth Miller having an open length to the good. Oscar, 2:20¼, turned the tables in the next brush and beat Birdie R. easily, and later led the pacer Mike to the finish.

Richard B., the chestnut trotter with a mark of 2:21¼, driven by Charles Lloyd, did some fast work, and had a nose and nose finish with the trotter Crystal Chimes, driven by James Murphy of Chicago. Charles Welland's bay mare Salient was in remarkable form and speed and proved it by winning a hotly contested brush with the famous trotter David B., 2:08½. In a second brush with Richard B. Crystal Chimes won easily, and in a third honors were about even. Belle Esprit, 2:12¾, the bay gelding owned by Charles Reilly, was matched against Birdie R., who made a hard fight, but was a trifle too slow for the gelding. The handsome little pacer Ada P., 2:08½, driven by David Lamar, came down the stretch in company with Belle Esprit, and for a quarter it was a nip and tuck race, neither animal seeming to be able to gain even a trifling lead. Both drivers encouraged their horses to their utmost speed with voice and whip, but it looked very much like a dead heat until Ada P., who is a remarkable finisher, made one of her famous spurts and crossed the line a good length in front of her opponent.

Isaac Fleming, driving the bay trotter Page, 2:08¾, had several tilts with Hopeful, 2:21¼, driven by W. E. Durando, but Page was too fast, and had things about all his own way. Dr. A. K. Kramer appeared on the road behind his recent purchase, McShed, 2:17¼, and won a very creditable brush from the speedy green trotter King Tom, driven by Christopher Hackett. One of the prettiest races of the morning took place shortly before noon between Mike, driven by G. W. Groto, and Amokin, 2:10½, and Monopol, driven to the pole by Theodore E. Maxfield. The team had a trifle the best of the start, but Mike was not long in closing up the gap, and they came down the stretch under the whip nose and nose. When within 100 yards of the finishing post Mike made a desperate spurt, but the team was too quick for him, and they crossed the line with honors about even. Edward W., driven by George Coleman, had a pretty race with Whistle, and finished a length ahead. In the morning Dr. David Randall challenged David Lamar to a race, and offered to match Moth Miller against either Ada P. or Beatrice, owned by Mr. Lamar. The challenge was accepted, and the race will be decided New Year's morning, the loser to give $50 to some charitable fund. Among the many on the road were Jack Curry, driving David Lamar's trotter Louis Victor, 2:10; Nathan Straus, driving Alves, the famous trotter with a mark of 2:09¼; Dr. H. H. Kane, driving the pacer Little Gem, 2:15½; De Witt C. Flanigan, behind Kingwood, 2:17¼; Frederick Diatz, driving Miss Overton, 2:20½; James Kennedy, with the bay pacer N. T. B., 2:21¼; William Clark of Yonkers, driving Woodsboy, 2:22½; George Young, driving Handy; John Donner, with Glenmere Boy, 2:14½; Hugh Kelly, driving the veteran trotter Commodore Porter, 2:13, and William C. Newcomb, driving his team of black pacers.

Statistics of Harness Racing.

The record of harness racing for the year 1900, for all practical purposes completed now, will show a long list of new-comers who have achieved records of 2:30 or better, while in the faster classes the increase is proportionate, down to the 2:10 list, which the present season has increased by 15 trotters and 62 pacers. With the additions, the registered 2:10 trotters now number 125, while the 2:10 pacers are 354. Only 12 of these records were made to the old-style high-wheel sulky, all the others having been earned since 1891, with the aid of the now universal pneumatic tire and its accompanying improvements. In the nine years of the new racing vehicle the extreme of speed for trotting horses has been cut down five seconds, while the best time by a pacer has been reduced nearly seven seconds. [The Abbot's mile this year in 2:03¼ stands as the world's best for a trotter, while Star Pointer's mile in 1:59¼, made in 1897, still holds first place among the achievements of pacers, though now three years old. Harness racing statistics of the year show, among other interesting things, that eight stallions have each three or more of his produce included in the roll of fame, the 2:10 list—Chimes, Electioneer, Guy Wilkes, Young Jim, Pilot Medium, Wilton, Alcyone, and Mambrino King being the illustrious eight. Chimes is deservedly first named, as he holds the place of honor with the world's champion, The Abbot, 2:03¼; Fantasy, 2:06, and The Monk, 2:08¼, as his best representatives, while Merry Chimes, 2:08¾, and Ed Easton, 2:09¾, are others worthy of mention among his produce. Other facts that are expressed in figures show that the harness horse has just completed his most successful season in ten years, with every prospect of a continued steady prosperity, both in opportunities to earn money and in the amount of public money earned.

Speedway for Plainfield Drivers.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Dec. 23.—Horsemen in Plainfield and vicinity are agitating a plan to secure the construction of a speedway in that city. Mayor Newton B. Smalley of North Plainfield, former Judge H. A. Coddington, J. Wesley Johnson, President of the First National Bank, and many other enthusiastic horsemen are interested in the scheme. The proposed speedway is to be in the southwestern part of the city, the idea being to open up and extend Arlington Avenue for one mile beyond its present terminus at Randolph Road. This would make the drive run almost to the Middlesex County line, and thus attract horsemen through that section. The horsemen promise to raise a private fund sufficient to grade and finish the roadway providing that Plainfield Council opens the necessary territory. There is no regular speedway in the suburban territory in New Jersey, and if this one should be constructed it would interest horsemen for twenty miles around. There are many fast horses in Plainfield, and if the speedway should be built it is the idea of the horsemen to inaugurate regular weekly matinée races the year round.

Harness Races for Dubuque.

DUBUQUE, Ia., Dec. 23.—It was announced last night that harness races will be given at Nutwood Park in August. The principal events will be the Dubuque Preparation Stake, $7,500, for three-year-old trotters; a stake worth $2,500 for pacing three-year-olds, and a $10,000 even for trotting stallions, will also be opened. H. L. Clark of St. Joseph, Mo., will be Secretary under the new management.

Turf Quarrel Awaits Settlement.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 23.—President Robert Aull of the St. Louis Fair Association returned to-day from Memphis, where he went to attend a conference of Western turf officials who are opposed to the Turf Congress action in the matter of regulating racing dates.

"No definite action was taken at the Memphis conference," said Mr. Aull. "We intend to wait until the Turf Congress meets in Chicago, Dec. 28, before doing anything. We met to learn each other's views on the question at issue. All parties interested seem to be of the opinion that the trouble will be settled satisfactorily at the coming meeting." As matters stand, the Turf Congress prohibits racing in St. Louis before June 10. This is not satisfactory to any one of the St. Louis tracks, and they may bolt the Congress if it does not reconsider its action.

AMBITIOUS WESTERN GOLFERS.

Proposed World's Championship at St. Louis Causes Surprise.

Secretary Robert B. Kerr of the United States Golf Association and a number of other local players were thrown into a state of surprise and mild perturbation last week over the news from St. Louis that a golf club there, known as the Mound City Golf Club, was ambitious to hold a world's open championship tournament. It was stated that this eagerness was to be backed by a sum of $10,000 for prizes, of which $5,000 was to be the victor's share. The further announcement was made that applications had been made to the United States Golf Association and to the Royal Ancient Golf Club of Edinburgh for sanction to hold the tournament, and that the date was to be 1903. Why this ambitious Western club, which, moreover, is not yet known as a member of the United States Golf Association, did not announce the world's golf championship for next Summer is the point that is puzzling the Eastern officials.

The Mound City Golf Club is a comparatively new organization. That is about the only information now obtainable about it. The application had not reached Secretary Kerr on Saturday, and he is curious to learn just what its contents will be. Possibly the club will defer this application until after it applies and is admitted as a member. In that case, a delegate may present the request for the world's championship in person at the coming annual meeting of the United States Golf Association, which will be held in this city, probably at Delmonico's, in February. The application would open up an interesting topic of discussion, but the discussion in the Royal Edinburgh Golf Club would undoubtedly be of a far more entertaining nature.

In this latter respect it looks as though the St. Louis enthusiasts had committed an error. The jealousy that may rankle in the golfing hearts of old St. Andrews, Prestwick, Hoylake, and other hoary arbiters of golf in the old country might be so strong as to make worthless the sanction of the Edinburgh Club, provided it were granted, and thus deter the Vardons, Taylors, and even Peter Pexton of famous Tooting Bec, whom Nicholls defeated last week, from coming over to secure some portion of the ten-thousand-dollar purse.

Mr. Kerr's smile, when he was spoken to regarding the first world's championship being held in this country, expressed more than many words, and other local golfers regarded the affair as one of the most interesting jokes in the annals of American golf.

The chief Christmas Day competitions in the metropolitan locality, outside of Lakewood, will be at the Nassau Country and Dyker Meadow Golf Clubs. At the former club the sixteen members who have qualified for the Percy Chubb Cup in the past three weeks will meet to-morrow for the first two match play rounds. The qualifying competitors are S. H. Ordway, L. J. Busby, L. P. Ryder, J. Rogers Maxwell, Jr., W. H. Hagen, W. C. Beecher, W. L. Hicks, J. A. Weekes, Jr., Percy Chubb, Walter Gibb, J. B. Coles Tappan, S. E. Buchanan, H. F. Noyes, P. C. Hicks, Harvey Murdock, and J. H. Moore.

The Montclair Golf Club has re-elected its former officers for another year. They are: President—Paul Wilcox; Vice President—T. T. Reid; Secretary and Treasurer—H. H. Spies; Captain—Allan Kenneday.

SEVENTH REGIMENT'S SHOOT.

Two Events Competed For on Armcry Rifle Range.

The marksmen of the Seventh Regiment shot off two events in the regular weekly competition Saturday night, in the rifle range of the regiment's armory, Park Avenue and Sixty-seventh Street. Sergt. A. Stevens of Company F led in the three-prize match, while in the handicap, the four leading men's actual scores, allowances not considered, were equal, the handicap reducing the tie to three men. The scores made, and a list of the men who qualified as experts and sharpshooters, in the evening follows:

Yale Dolan Won the Mackey Cup.

Special to The New York Times.

GARDEN CITY, L. I., Dec. 23.—H. Yale Dolan of Philadelphia, the trap shooter who was injured recently in a gunning accident on Chesapeake Bay, showed that he had lost none of his marvelous skill with the shotgun here yesterday when on the Carteret Gun Club grounds he won the Clarence Mackey Cup by grassing ten birds straight. Robert A. Welch, Capt. A. W. Money, Harold Money, Louis T. Davenport, and G. H. Hall faced the traps in the main event. Dolan had to kill straight to win, as G. A. McAlpin killed nine. One of the biggest shoots ever held by the club is planned for Tuesday at the traps here.

New Yorkers After Shooting Ground.

Special to The New York Times.

YAPHANK, L. I., Dec. 23.—That Col. Wagstaff and a party of New York sportsmen will get the contract which they sought at a recent meeting of the Brookhaven Township Board of Trustees for the exclusive hunting privileges on 200 acres of fishing and shooting grounds now is doubtful. The amount offered was $500 a year for ten years. Hammel & Corwin, the present lessees, pay $150 a year. They offered the board $500 a year for the future. Then it was discovered that the firm acted for a party of New York sportsmen, headed by Col. Wagstaff. There was a sharp discussion and the bid was laid on the table. The probabilities are that the board will offer the hunting privileges at public auction, naming $500 as the starting price, or will throw open the tract publicly, exacting a fee of $2 per head per year from gunners, by which method it is thought that more money can be realized for the county.

ON LOCAL BOWLING ALLEYS.

A Considerable Cessation of Activity Caused by the Advent of the Holidays.

The advent of the holidays is responsible for a considerable lessening of activity among the local bowlers. A number of the principal tournaments, including the Bank Clerks' League, Life Insurance League, Wholesale Drug Trade Association, Archdiocesan Union League, Interclub League of Brooklyn, and the Twenty-third Regiment tournament are entirely suspended until after New Years, while all games are omitted to-night and to-morrow night, and New Year's eve and New Year's night.

A number of the tournaments are now nearing their finish. The Long Island League reached the end of its schedule last week, but a number of ties require several additional games on Wednesday evening next. It will be succeeded early in the new year by the Carruthers' National tournament. Other tourneys soon to finish are the Greater New York, which ends next week; the National League, which will conclude one week later, and the American National, which will end Jan. 21. The National League will be succeeded by the New York Royal Arcanum tournament, while the tourney of the United Bowling Clubs of New York will follow the American National series.

The programme for the week in the principal local tournaments follows:

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 26.

Columbia Bowling League—Audubon, Rosedale, and Bank Clerks' Bowling Clubs. Schlusing's Columbia alleys.

Harlem Bowling League—Grove Hill, Friendship, and Cyclone Bowling Clubs. Thum & Kahlsdorf's Harlem Palace alleys.

National Bowling League—Spartan Bowling Club and Roseville Athletic Association. Starr's alleys.

American National Bowling Tournament—Central, Bank Clerks', and Metropolitan Bowling Clubs. Thum's Germania alleys.

North Side Bowling League—Hyperion and Bronxdale Bowling Clubs. Pump's North Side Palace alleys.

Greater New York Bowling Tournament—Pin Knight, Monarch, and Empire Bowling Clubs. Thum & Ehler's Palace alleys, Brooklyn.

Brooklyn Royal Arcanum Bowling Tournament—Gilbert, Fraternity, and Lefferts Councils. Trainor's alleys.

Long Island Bowling League—Roll off ties. Elephant Club alleys, Brooklyn.

THURSDAY, DEC. 27.

Columbia Bowling League—Empire City and Grove Bowling Clubs and Century Wheelmen. Schlusing's Columbia alleys.

Harlem Bowling League—Audubon, Central Park, and Belvidere Bowling Clubs. Thum & Kahlsdorf's Harlem Palace alleys.

National Bowling League—Golden Rod and Oriental Bowling Clubs. Starr's alleys.

American National Bowling Tournament—Central, Bank Clerks', and Metropolitan Bowling Clubs. Thum's Germania alleys.

North Side Bowling League—Liberty and Knickerbocker Bowling Clubs. Pump's North Side Palace alleys.

Fire Insurance Bowling League—Lancashire, Liverpool and London and Globe, and Lloyd's Plate-Glass Insurance Companies; Norwich Union, Hanover, and Home Insurance Companies. Reid's alleys.

Twelfth Regiment Bowling League—Field and Staff and Company A. Armory alleys.

KENNEDY WINS STAR RUN.

Leads a Field of Twenty-four in Cross-Country Chase.

T. J. Kennedy of the Star Athletic Club won the eight-mile open handicap cross-country run of that organization over the Long Island City course yesterday afternoon from a field of twenty-four other starters. He had a handicap of 6:15, and won easily by fifty yards, in the actual time of 1:01:41. The second, third, and fourth men, Houghton, Kelly, and McAvoy, were also members of the home club, and the fifth man was C. L. Brady of the Xavier Athletic Association, who received the time prize. His time was 0:57:18.

The course, which is four miles in length, was circled twice. Houghton, who finished second, led in the first round, closely followed by McAvoy, Goldberg, Kennedy, and Ziegler in the order named. At the sixth mile Kennedy spurted and obtained a lead which he kept to the finish.

Robert Kennedy of the Star A. C., who was scratch man, quit after the first round, as did Rutgers, Knoth, O'Donnell, Carms, Hussey, Schnell, Hugg, and Estoppey. The order at the finish was as follows:

Name.	Club.	Hcp.	Time.
T. J. Kennedy, Star A. C.		6:15	1:01:41
C. E. Houghton, Star A. C.		5:30	1:01:11

Last Coursing of the Season.

The New York Coursing Club held its final races of the season on Saturday in private. There will be no more coursing by the club until Spring. The Saturday races left the greyhounds Memory, Ideal, and Rapparee II. in a tie as the best dogs of the season. An offer of $500 was refused for Memory after the trials. Wind River and Lady MacDuff were the first pair, and Wind River won. Then Maude defeated Nellie after two trials. The famous Memory then met Roquelle, and hard and good work won for Memory. Becky Sharp beat King Cob; San Toy beat Penelope; Marjorie beat Royal Fabric; Rapparee II. beat Lassie, and Idela beat her full sister, Lady Falvia, completing the first round. Wind River opened the second round by defeating Maude, other winners being Memory, Rapparee II., and Idela. The third round started with Wind River being slipped with Memory. They did wonderful work all through, and Memory won cleanly, after an exceptionally interesting contest. This victory by Memory left only her and her two kennel mates, Idela and Rapparee II., and the meeting ended, the kennel taking the cup.

BICYCLE PRICES IN 1901.

Dealers Say Wheels, If No Cheaper, Will Be Better.

New ideas and novelties in bicycle construction, in the opinion of makers and dealers, will play a much more important part in the trade for 1901 than further reductions or variations in prices. The worth of wheels is so thoroughly established, these say, that there is little room for changes in that direction, except that competition has caused a tendency to put better material in the cheaper grades of wheels, and the want of a market has practically stopped the putting out of machines made solely to sell. On the subject of prices in 1901, a dealer who handles many makes of bicycles, said: "Prices vary now from $75 for a thoroughly up-to-date chainless machine, to $25 for a chain wheel that will last a season. Between these figures, almost any kind of bicycle can be bought, and good serviceable chain models that will give satisfaction, range in prices from $35 to $50. The disposition, however, is to improve on even the lowest grades, and next season a machine that will wear and stand service can be bought for $25, the chief difference between it and costlier bicycles being in the finish, the size of tubing used and the absence of some of the smaller improvements and conveniences."

Of new devices that are coming into common use, the coaster brake is one of growing popularity. The worth of the cushion frame has been proved, and dealers say it will be included in most of the high grade wheels of 1901. Other new things are axles which permit of the removal of wheels without springing the forks, handlebars, adjustable to many positions without altering the distance between the grips, spring posts greatly improved over models formerly in use, and several decided though seemingly unimportant improvements in tube tires.

POLICE PROHIBIT ALL BOXING.

Pugilist's Death in a Philadelphia Ring Causes the Order.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—As a result of the fatal termination of the amateur boxing bout last night at the Philadelphia Athletic Club between Joseph Kelly and Edward Sanford, who fought under the name of Frank Barr, all boxing contests have been prohibited for the present by the police authorities. Director of Public Safety English to-day issued an order to the police to the effect that all permits for sparring contests heretofore issued are revoked, and that no more permits will be granted for the same for the present, and the police are instructed to prohibit sparring exhibitions until further notice. There are quite a number of athletic clubs in the city where boxing contests, both amateur and professional, were held, six rounds being the limit prescribed by law.

The exact cause of Sanford's death will not be made public by the Coroner until the inquest is held to-morrow. The report that his skull was fractured is erroneous. Frank Henderson, manager of the club, who acted as referee, was to-day released on $1,000 security. Kelly and the seconds of both boxers are still in custody, being held without bail to await the action of the Coroner's jury.

Notes for College Athletes.

The Faculty Advisory Committee of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America, will meet at the Fifth Avenue Hotel in this city on Thursday next. Several changes will be made in the eligibility rules and the case of Beck, the Yale athlete, will be considered.

The date decided upon for the Cornell track team's handicap road race is Saturday, Jan. 12. This race is open to men from all the preparatory schools and colleges. Handsome medals will be awarded to the six men finishing first in the race and also a medal to the man making the fastest time. Entries must be made with H. E. Hastings, 523 East Buffalo Street, on or before Monday, Jan. 7. An entrance fee of 50 cents must accompany each entry.

Plans have been decided on for an out-door track at Cornell. It will be a twelve-lap track, six feet wide, built of two-inch yellow pine planking and raised six inches above the ground. It will be built in twelve-foot sections, with braces every three feet, and the turns will be banked to allow fast running. The plans were drawn by Capt. Hastings. The track, which is oval shaped, will be laid on the parade just north of the armory.

The basketball team of the University of Pennsylvania will play a special series of six games, most of them in the vicinity of this city, this present week. The schedule is as follows: Dec. 24, Carlisle Y. M. C. A.; Dec. 25, Yonkers Y. M. C. A.; Dec. 26, New Britain Y. M. C. A.; Dec. 27, Mount Vernon Institute; Dec. 28, Pratt Institute, Brooklyn; Dec. 29, Poughkeepsie. The following men comprise the team: Bennett, (Captain;) Sauscer, Darragh, Wilkinson, Evans, Paine, Miskey, and Baillie, (manager.) Yale played these same teams five weeks ago, winning four and losing two games.

The Cornell University Football Committee will shortly hold a conference at Ithaca with a number of alumni interested in football matters, for the purpose of discussing plans for the 1901 football season, especially with regard to the coaching. Among the alumni expected to attend this conference are G. S. Warner, '95; Hawley Taussig, '97; William McKeever, '97; D. M. McLaughlin, '98; C. D. Wyckoff, '98, and Charles Mason, '95. Unofficial sources state that there is a very strong desire to appoint a graduate as head coach, who would be more or less under the supervision of an alumni committee. There seems to be a strong desire also that whatever the coaching system determined upon, it be more permanent than has been the case in the past.

The following schedule has been arranged for the hockey team of the University of Pennsylvania: Jan. 8, Haverford College, at Philadelphia; Jan. 18, Brown University, at Philadelphia; Jan. 29, Philadelphia College of Dentistry, at Philadelphia; Feb. 2, Yale University, at New York, (championship game;) Feb. 5, Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia; Feb. 12, Swarthmore College, at Philadelphia; Feb. 15, Princeton University, at Philadelphia, (championship game;) Feb. 22, Columbia University, at New York, (championship game.) In addition, games with the St. Nicholas Hockey Club of New York and the Hockey Club of New York will be played, and a two-days' trip to Pittsburg in February is contemplated.

Pennsylvania's chances for a strong gymnastic team this year are considered unusually good, over twenty men having taken part in a recent impromptu exhibition. Several exhibitions will be given in January and the early part of February, and the regular annual exhibition at the Academy of Music will be held just before Lent. The latter meet will be held in conjunction with the teams of one or two other universities. Princeton last year and Yale the two years before took part in these meets, and this year Yale, Harvard, Princeton, and Columbia have signified a desire to participate. A meet will also be held with Rutgers College at New Brunswick on March 2.

Thrown from Carriage and Hurt.

While returning home from a drive with his daughter yesterday afternoon C. L. Latman of 410 East Seventeenth Street, was thrown from his carriage, a wheel of which struck the curb at Fourth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street. He received a severe acalp wound, and was taken to Bellevue Hospital. He left for home later

GOV. ROOSEVELT'S ERROR.

Gov. ROOSEVELT, in removing District Attorney GARDINER at this time and on the evidence submitted, has, we are convinced, committed a blunder that comes perilously near to being a political crime.

According to the statement of the Governor this action was taken because the evidence was conclusive that Col. GARDINER showed indifference to the offenses against the ballot committed by Chief DEVERY. To support this conclusion, it is argued that he did not acknowledge the telegram of the Governor directing attention to these offenses; that he denounced the indictment of DEVERY as an "outrage"; that he is reported to have approved the action of DEVERY, and that he refused to issue subpoenas in blank to the Assistant Attorney General for use in prosecuting violations of the election laws, and allowed his assistants to interfere with the prompt trial of election cases.

It is plain from the published testimony and from the remarks of the Governor that the point that weighed with him was Col. GARDINER'S attitude toward the outrageous conduct of DEVERY. The other matters were collateral or confirmatory. Now, what was the attitude of the District Attorney? He expressly denies that he publicly approved of DEVERY'S action at the time. He declares now that he condemns it. He explains that his remarks as to the indictment of DEVERY were not intended for publication and that the word "outrage" was applied solely to the unauthorized use of his name to the indictment. He explains his failure to reply to or acknowledge the telegram of the Governor by the fact that he did not receive it until the day after the election, when the order of DEVERY had already been revoked. We do not find in the testimony anything that shows that this explanation in any important respect was incorrect. We do not find anything that shows that Col. GARDINER approved the action of DEVERY or sympathized with its spirit, except the statement of the reporter who had the interview with him, and that statement is contradicted and is not confirmed. Yet this is clearly the gravamen of the offense attributed to the District Attorney, for which he is deprived of his office.

If this matter is sifted, it appears that the District Attorney is removed for no official act whatever. The only thing of real importance charged against him is that he publicly approved of DEVERY'S action, and this, as above noted, is denied, and certainly is not proved. If it had been distinctly proved, it would be a most atrocious sentiment for any man in his office to express; but it would not be an official act. The office of District Attorney is elective. The authority it possesses comes from the highest source known in a representative popular Government. The Governor has the power of removal from it, but it is a power to be used only when the incumbent has forfeited his title by an essential betrayal of his official trust or an essential abuse of his official authority. He may be shown to the Governor to be a most unfit man to elect, as GARDINER unquestionably is, but to justify his removal he must be shown to have violated the law governing his office or to have committed an offense that clearly makes it unsafe and wrong to leave him in the office. We find no such showing in the testimony before the Governor.

Our readers need no reminder of our opinion of Col. GARDINER. He has been a wretched and preposterous District Attorney, as was shown in the hearing on the City Club's charges. There is plenty of evidence that he is in some important regards a bad and dangerous as well as a ridiculous man. He has done a good deal to carry out the famous motto that, in a moment of overstimulated candor, he invented for Tammany, "To h—l with reform." His conduct is not palliated, it is aggravated, by the fact that he has had the education and some of the associations of a gentleman, but all this is not a sufficient reason for removing him from an office to which he was elected not merely by the legal plurality, but by the majority, of the voters of the county. It is because we think that the people's rights and not GARDINER'S are infringed by the action of the Governor that we are forced to condemn that action as a blunder in the nature of a crime.

THE NOTE TO CHINA.

We believe that the country will be found deeply to regret the fact that the United States has signed the note addressed to China by the Powers, which was published by the State Department yesterday.

It is not easy to understand why the signature was finally given. In a general way it is known that the inexcusable blunder of Minister CONGER created a situation which it was deemed better to accept than to face the consequences of reopening the discussion. We do not doubt that this decision was reached most reluctantly by the Administration, and for reasons that appeared imperative. In a matter of this sort it must, of course, be left to the Government to make known or to withhold those reasons, according to its responsible discretion. The country has, and has good ground for having, great confidence in the wisdom of the President and the Secretary of State in all this Chinese problem. But it remains true that the line the Government has finally felt itself compelled to follow is practically without satisfactory explanation. The resulting situation is, so far as it can be understood, deplorable. We are at a loss to imagine what it was that seemed a worse alternative both to our Government and to that of Great Britain.

Here is the substance of the note to China. A great international crime has been committed by or with the connivance of the Government of China. In consequence, the capital and the province in which it is have been occupied by the troops of the Powers. "China has recognized her responsibility, expressed regret, and evinced a desire to see an end put to the situation." The Powers "have determined to accede to her request upon the irrevocable conditions enumerated." The note closes in the following words: "Until the Chinese Government has complied with the above conditions to the satisfaction of the Powers the undersigned can hold out no expectation that the occupation of Peking and the Province of Pe-chi-Li by the general forces can be brought to a conclusion."

It will be noted that the situation which China wishes to see ended and which the Powers threaten to continue indefinitely unless their conditions are complied with is one in which the United States is not really concerned. We have no part in the "general forces" occupying Peking and its province; we have there nothing but a legation guard; this guard is not under the command of Count VON WALDERSEE, the General in Chief of the forces of occupation. On the one hand the situation which China finds intolerable and wishes ended is not of our making, and we are free from any avowed intention of taking any part in its continuance that is important enough to influence the action of China. In short, our signature to the note seems merely our assent to a threat that we shall do little or nothing to aid in carrying out. This is so far fortunate that it still leaves us in a position of greater friendliness to China than any of the other Powers, and may enable us at a later stage of the negotiation to be of some service in shaping a workable policy in conformity with the principles of justice and expediency heretofore laid down by our Government and that of Great Britain.

But for the time being it is only too plain that those principles are not embodied in the conditions enumerated in the note. What we have sought in the past has been a reasonable indemnity, the integrity of the Chinese sovereignty, the promotion of the reform of the Government by strengthening the rightful ruler, and the extension of commerce, the latter so far as practicable to be accepted as a part of the reparation due and as a measure of future security. Of these objects some are ignored, others are rendered more difficult by the terms of the note. Trade extension is only vaguely provided for. The promotion of the reform of the Government is not considered. The sovereignty of China is practically destroyed by dictating its internal policy, by forbidding the importation of arms and the materials of manufacture, by the occupation of territory to be determined solely by the Powers. As the note stands it regards nothing, seeks nothing but the punishment of China for past offenses and the armed prevention of offense in the future. It is cruel, narrow, short-sighted, stupid. Even if accepted by China, it opens a prospect of great uncertainty and difficulty and danger. If rejected by China, there is not, so far as we are aware, a single statesman engaged in this serious business that would dare to predict the consequences or venture to say how the Powers shall deal with them.

DANGEROUS CLASS LEGISLATION.

The decision handed down a few days ago by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York, declaring unconstitutional the law invalidating contracts for public work when the contractor does not pay the "prevailing rate of wages" will put a temporary stop, at least, to the withholding by the city of payments due for work performed, on the complaint of trade unions having no direct interest in the matter. It rests with the courts to say whether such a law, arbitrarily restricting the freedom of individual contract, to the public disadvantage, is constitutional or not; but it needs only average lay intelligence to see that it is an improper law, dangerous in its tendency and mischievous in its operation.

As the rule, the laws which have been passed in the interest of labor are the outgrowth of the failure to accomplish by strikes specific ends deemed desirable. An example of this is the New York statute known as the "dressed-stone law," now before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. This law, the passage of which was secured after an unsuccessful strike, provides that all the stone used in State or municipal work must be dressed where such work is being carried on. Its object was to prevent the competition of stone cutters in other localities with the work of the local unions. When argued last June before four Judges of the Appellate Division they were equally divided on the question of its constitutionality. In a number of States we have laws favoring the wage earner unduly, to the extent of curtailing the civil rights of others not so classed. For example: We have laws exempting wages from attachment by creditors; laws making the claims of employés preferred claims against insolvent employers; laws making the stockholders of companies individually liable for wages due by a corporation; laws making the claims of employés a first lien upon the franchise and property, real and personal, of employers and superseding other liens of earlier date. Seventeen States have enacted laws requiring that certain classes of employés be paid every week or every two weeks, in cash, by check, or by orders payable in cash at sight and subjecting those who fail in this to fine and imprisonment. Many judicial decisions have been rendered declaring such laws unconstitutional, and they are usually re-enacted in a new but equally objectionable form or pass unchallenged because none of those wronged or oppressed have taken the trouble or incurred the expense of fighting the unions in the courts.

What are the limits to this form of class legislation? An analysis of the laws to which we have alluded shows a fixed determination on the part of the labor unions to abridge the freedom of contract, the right of property owners to protect their property, and the right of the citizen to the privileges and benefits of citizenship. If it cannot be stopped by the creation of a wholesome public sentiment against the enactment of laws of this character and for the repeal of those now on the statute books, it is very likely to happen that organized capital will try its hand at the same dangerous game. Should it be prompted to do this by way of reprisal or in obedience to the instinct of self-protection, the workingmen will cry out against oppression by the plutocrats, and we shall have the country torn by the issue of "the classes vs. the masses," which, in the hands of a wiser exponent than Mr. BRYAN, may be serious.

LIGHT FROM LUZON.

The following letter was sent to The Outlook with a note stating that its author was Lieut. Col. JAMES PARKER, United States Army, a graduate of West Point and Rutgers College, and a son of CORTLANDT PARKER of Newark, N. J. Col. PARKER is in command of "an isolated province in Southeastern Luzon," with a population of some 50,000. It throws a ray of light on a situation not generally very cheerful:

In one of the schools I have established here the children, taught two hours daily by a soldier, orally, (for I have no books,) have learned in six weeks over 500 English words, and can even sustain a short conversation, their accent being clear and distinct. Nowadays, as I ride about my province I am saluted at every door by little childish voices piping up, "Good morning, Colonel." I stop and speak with them in English. They answer me proudly from their little store of newly acquired knowledge, and as I ride away they always cry out, "Good-bye, Colonel." The boys are all our friends. They play with the soldiers and talk to them. There is no use for Spanish here any longer. Only those who received an unusual education can talk and read Spanish. The children should be taught from English school books, and well taught. A knowledge of "Americano" will make them quickly Americans.

Things are gradually progressing here. We have Mayors and police in all the towns of the province, and schools. I detail a soldier to teach English in each school, and the children are making great progress. On account of the confusion of dialects, Bicol, Visayan, Ilolan, and Tagal, the textbooks have always been Spanish. I trust that the commission will not allow this system to be perpetuated. I propose that in the schools of this district the children shall learn geography, history, and arithmetic in English, as they desire to do. The difficulty is textbooks. If I only could get a lot of illustrated American primers! It is a glorious opportunity. By teaching these children to read English, in five years there will be a new generation coming to the front that will read American newspapers, appreciate American manufactures, have new wants, be civilized. Knowing the uses of things, they will want them. They will no longer be content with a hut without furniture and a pound of rice a day. They will want money to buy the things they need, and will be willing to work for it. It is labor that will make these islands enormously productive. I wish I had the primers.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—When it was first reported that the French vine growers were serious believers in the efficacy of artillery for the protection of their vines from hail, and were preparing to spend a lot of money on the systematic bombardment of approaching storm clouds, the tale was regarded with general incredulity, and one of the scientific papers went so far as to charge the American Consul, who had sent the story over here with the manufacture of obvious "fakes" for use in the sensational papers. The Consul's accuracy as a reporter, however, was soon established, and if his rash accuser has not since made due apology he has neglected an obvious duty. Our own dispatches have very recently given full details of the modified cannon used for shooting away the clouds, and, more than that, they have presented the practical results on which the confidence of the vine growers in the new scheme is based. The cannonading does seem to have some effect in the way of changing hail to rain, and, though the exact measure of that effect is still a matter of dispute—chiefly among those who, like the scientific paper mentioned, do more theorizing than observing—the owners of the vineyards are convinced that the amount of protection secured is worth much more than it costs, and they are rapidly increasing the number and weight of their batteries. The success of the device is especially interesting because it tends to show that there was something else than ignorant superstition in the belief, almost universal in the Middle Ages and widely spread among the savages of all times, that storms could be dissipated or their paths changed by the making of loud noises. This idea often took the form of reliance on the ringing of church bells, and though of course it was the sacredness of these bells, and not the vibrations of the air they produced, that got the credit for any effects that may have resulted, that circumstance does not remove the necessity for admitting that the old fellows who rang the bells were not quite so silly as their descendants have long supposed. They doubtless moved in an absurdly crooked path from cause to effect, but so long as they accomplished the journey, their reputation for common sense need not suffer very materially. Theirs is not the only instance in which correct conclusions have been reached by reasoning of the queerest sort.

—Some serious attention is deserved by the fact that at every hearing of the Brush will contest a considerable portion of the courtroom is filled by "Christian Scientists" whose avowed object is to influence the Surrogate by the silent exercise on his mind of the psychical powers which the adepts think, or pretend to think, they possess. The undertaking is ludicrous enough in some ways, and we have no faintest fear that it will prevent the Surrogate from deciding the case on its merits and the evidence, but before dismissing the matter with a contemptuous smile, consider its significance for a moment, and the excuse for smiling, even contemptuously, at anything the "scientists" do will disappear. Their effort to coerce the Surrogate by their "mental treatment" illustrates a phase or side of Eddyism to which little attention has been paid. That these people do have and exercise a certain force must be admitted by everybody who has had an opportunity to study their operations, and the admission is made as frankly by those who regard everything connected with "Christian Science" with loathing as by anybody else. What is not so generally known, however, is the circumstance that this force is systematically exerted for other purposes than the cure of disease. Eddyism is precisely the same thing as Voodooism, and the followers of the newer cult, like those of the older one, believe that they can injure as well as aid, can punish enemies as well as reward friends. Mrs. EDDY herself has asserted that students of one of her many husbands, after becoming rival and competing sorcerers, brought about his death by the dark spells they cast upon him. This charge is presumably nothing more than a characteristic bit of spitefulness, but it hints at what is going on in "Christian Science" circles. Of course they can hurt people who do not fear them only by the use of the ordinary instruments of injury and revenge, and they have not yet, so far as known, resorted to poisons or daggers, but it is not at all improbable that they can and do exercise over those to whom the uncomprehended is terrifying a power the effects of which may be dangerous to health and even to life. Faith can inspire terror as easily as hope, and the patient whom one of those emotions would cure might be killed by the other.

—It is much to be regretted that it has been necessary, in refuting the charges brought against the West Point cadets, to give wide publicity to facts that cannot fail to cause pain to a bereaved father and mother. Young men who are accused of something not far from murder have a right, however, to defend themselves by telling the whole truth, even though it does violate the injunction to speak nothing but good of the dead. The dead must take their chances in such a case. And, after all, the revelations in regard to young Booz, as we have already said, prove only that he had no fitness for the career of arms. The same is true probably of a majority of all boys, or at least of a considerable minority. Physical courage, in other ages the most valuable, and therefore the most valued, of all manly qualities, is no longer in frequent demand, and with ordinary good luck one may go through life respectably and happily without it. But the professional soldier must still be fearless, or if not that, he must have perfect command of his fears, which, if not the same thing, is a better thing. An upthe-State paper, commenting on this case, says that a constitutional coward deserves pity and sympathy, not insult. True, but a commission in the United States Army should not go with the pity and sympathy. We all hate war, and yet wars come; fights between boys are universally disapproved, and yet the boy who always refuses to fight does not always make the best man, while as for the boy who fights ill when he does fight, really there isn't much hope for him. It is not winning or losing the battle that counts; to do one's best is quite enough, and less than that is very terrible indeed.

—People who have noted the former state and present condition of the French Canadians in New England will more than doubt the report that they meditate a great trek to the northward. All over New England there are children of French Canadia immigrants who are well-educated and well-to-do, who have made for themselves recognized and respected positions in their respective communities, and before whom there are open every advantage and possibility enjoyed by those whose Americanism is of older standing. The tale of a projected flitting which is now in circulation probably expresses not a fact, but a desire—a desire confined chiefly if not wholly to the other side of the frontier. Canada has vast stretches of vaoant land, to which she would gladly welcome the citizens she lost in other days. It would be hardly fair for her to get them now, however, for they have been vastly changed since they crossed the line.

"ENGLAND AND THE CANAL."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your leading article of Dec. 20, inst., under the above caption, and its successor in to-day's issue entitled "Next Steps," seem to presuppose, without qualification:

First—That the canal should be built by the United States Government.

Second—That the Nicaragua route should be selected; and your comments follow these presumptions.

The regret felt at the failure of the Senate to ratify the Hay treaty in its original form is without doubt sincere, and is a distinct disappointment not only to the Administration, but to the general public, and the writer shares with you the same sentiment. Irrespective, however, of the motives which you ascribe to Senators in accomplishing its mutilation, and its possible rejection by Great Britain, how does the real question stand? What route is to be selected? And who will finally construct the canal?

An answer to these questions may be revealed by considering the position of our Government had the Hay treaty been duly ratified in its first integrity.

Perhaps no clearer view of our exact status can be found than that disclosed in the final paragraphs of Prof. Theodore S. Woolsey's monograph, published by you on Feb. 11, 1900, only six days after the signing of that convention.

Prof. Woolsey says:

In expunging the "prohibitions" from the Clayton-Bulwer treaty Great Britain is freed as well as the United States. She is quite as much at liberty to secure a canal under her own auspices as we are.

If we dig a canal in Nicaragua and leave a half-finished canal at Panama, the temptation to Great Britain or some other power to finish it and control it will be ever present, though perhaps never yielded to. If, however, the Panama rather than the Nicaragua should be recommended by the commission and the United States should complete it, no complication would be possible.

Such a result so definitely and logically proclaimed cannot be lightly set aside, and whatever direction subsequent negotiations may take between our own and other Governments, and however they may issue, the same questions will reappear, to be settled only by just comparison of the technical, commercial, and permanently economic merits presented by the two competing routes.

In the view of your present writer these advantages rest with the Panama Canal.

THEODORE WESTON.

New York, Dec. 21, 1900.

A CRITICISM OF MR. COMSTOCK.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My attention has been directed to statements of Mr. Anthony Comstock respecting his course concerning the Anti-Policy bill introduced in the Legislature last Winter at the instance of Capt. F. Morton Goddard.

I co-operated with Capt. Goddard in urging the passage of the anti-policy law, not, however, for compensation as a lawyer, but because I believed that the public interests would be promoted. I wish to add my testimony in corroboration of that of Capt. Goddard respecting Mr. Comstock's connection with the matter.

I had never met Mr. Comstock until last Winter in a conference with Capt. Goddard as to the kind of law to be introduced in the Legislature. After a great deal of consideration, Capt. Goddard and I were of the opinion that a law, to be effective in suppressing policy gambling, must be very stringent in reaching and imposing penalties upon those having any connection with the game. Few are aware how difficult it is to detect this form of gambling and secure conviction under the laws against gaming. Our object was, therefore, not only to reach and punish the players, but also those who were known as the "backers," runners, and other promoters of the game, and those who own or are in charge of premises in which it is carried on. In this way alone could we hope to suppress the evil.

I well remember the difficulties we encountered in our first interview with Mr. Comstock. His course with respect to the form and substance of the proposed law was such that I was obliged to say to him, in as forcible terms as I could command, that in my opinion his actions and recommendations were such as to lend aid and comfort to those interested in promoting the game of policy, and that if some of those individuals were present at our interview and could hear his suggestions they would unhesitatingly say that they had no more powerful ally than Anthony Comstock.

This led to Mr. Comstock modifying his views, and finally I prepared a bill with which he expressed himself satisfied. I delivered it to him personally at his office, and he promised to support it faithfully.

The next interview respecting the matter between Capt. Goddard, Mr. Comstock, and myself was on the train for Albany, where we were to appear before the Legislative Committee. Mr. Comstock recurred to his former suggestions and recommendations, and by his criticisms of the bill it was easy to see that it did not have his hearty support. He again urged decided and radical changes which would have deprived the bill of most of its force, and it was not until he was reminded of his absolute promise to support the bill and of the aid and comfort he was giving to those interested in promoting the game of policy, and a statement by Capt. Goddard and myself that we would be obliged to bring to the attention of the committee his course in the matter, that he again expressed himself as satisfied with the bill and renewed his promise to support it heartily.

I have no hesitation in saying that before the Legislative Committee Mr. Comstock failed to carry out his promises with respect to giving the bill his hearty support, and his apparent advocacy of the measure was such as to create the impression, upon my mind at least, that he did not really favor it.

I regret to be obliged to present Mr. Comstock in an unfavorable light, but under the circumstances I deem it my duty to state the facts as I remember them and to corroborate Capt. Goddard.

Dog Nuisances.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

About a year ago a letter was published in your columns from one of your correspondents, calling attention to the filthy condition of our sidewalks in the best and residential portion of our city, caused by the excrement of huge and tiny dogs who daily decorate the pavements with their filth. The letter mentioned called forth a flood of letters defending the noble animal and condemning the so-called brute for his attack upon the poor canines, who could not defend themselves. How they did champion this noble animal! How superior he was to the army of two-footed tobacco-chewing brutes, &c.! Now, the writer does not wish to let loose this army of defenders again, and wishes at the outset to say that he loves dogs—the noblest friend of man, &c.—but thinks that in a crowded city, where sanitary laws should be paramount, it is a shame and disgrace to see the sidewalks littered with the filth of these noble animals, and any morning can be seen both maids and mistresses leading these animals to the most public places and coaxing them to defile walk or doorstep. It is very seldom one sees a dog led to the highway, but it must be in the path of pedestrians. It is high time a stop was put to this practice, if only for the protection of health and the stopping of indecency. It is a wonder that our city fathers have not made some law to abate this outrageous nuisance, which has long been tolerated. Now, with all due respect to the noble dog, let us draw the line.

To Prevent Christmas Tree Fires.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have just read of the sad accident at the public school in North Moore Street in which the young girl was so dangerously burned; and I write you to suggest that one or two buckets of water be placed near to any Christmas tree on which there may be lighted candles, with a tin cup or two to throw water with. It might be the means of preventing many serious fires if not loss of life. It is only a few years since a whole family was burned in a similar manner.

CAREFULNESS.

New York, Dec. 22, 1900.

Lieut. Hobson's Deserts.

From The Brooklyn Standard-Union.

While Lieut. Hobson is making a slower and more prosaic, but none the less gallant, fight against fate than at Santiago, the opportunity seems fitting to suggest that it is high time the appreciation of the American people took the concrete form of simple justice. It will doubtless surprise even those who count themselves well informed to learn that Hobson's promotion, once definitely determined and announced by the President, has never yet been made effective, and that in some way not necessary now to explain, the ten-number advance for which his name was sent to the Senate was never consummated, so that he stands, therefore, relatively in the same position as if the deed which crowned his name with imperishable lustre had never been performed. Republics are not so ungrateful as has been so often asserted, only forgetful, and if the illness of Hobson shall have the effect of bringing to the public notice the highly unsatisfactory condition of affairs, it will not be without its compensation. It ought not to be necessary for Hobson or his friends to invite action in the matter; it would come with admirable grace from the "powers that be," or from comrades in the service who believe in standing by each other, and in seeing that just merit is justly rewarded.

Our Trade with Canada.

From The Toronto (Ontario) Globe.

THE NEW YORK TIMES points out that the trade of Pennsylvania with Canada exceeds the entire trade of the United States with South America. THE TIMES is strongly in favor of opening up negotiations for reciprocity with Canada. Our object, however, is not to hold out any hope that the United States will give us freer access to their markets at present, but to show that our neighbors are beginning to look at the matter in the true light. So far as Canada is concerned, we think that American tariff legislation has been framed in a somewhat narrow spirit. In some cases mere local or class interests have prevailed; in others there seems to have been a desire to "freeze out" Canada, and show her that her true interest was to enter the Union. THE TIMES'S article shows Canada as a neighbor, friendly, determined to go her own way, but willing to do business on fair terms. If this idea takes hold of the American people, it is not unlikely that sooner or later a mutually profitable arrangement may be made.

The Charleston Exposition.

From The Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier.

We republish to-day from THE NEW YORK TIMES a very appreciative editorial article on the South Carolina Inter-State and West Indian Exposition, which is fair and kindly in tone, and which sets forth in brief space the merits and purposes of the exposition. It will help to encourage our own citizens in their arduous undertaking to see how favorably it is regarded by one of the most ably conducted journals in the American metropolis.

What to Do with Nevada.

From The Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald.

The suggestion is made in THE NEW YORK TIMES that instead of raising Arizona and New Mexico to the dignity of Statehood, they be annexed respectively to Utah and Colorado, for the reason that "there should be no more Nevadas." Then why not join Arizona and New Mexico to Nevada? This would be curative as well as preventive.

A Cowardly Way.

From The Indianapolis Journal.

When THE NEW YORK TIMES declares that "the really formidable, uncompromising opposition to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is opposition to the Nicaragua Canal itself," it is doubtless correct, but it is a cowardly way of fighting, all the same.

The Lucky Cecil Family.

From The London Chronicle.

As some of our readers have expressed a desire to know how the £15,000 odd—or £17,000 to £18,000, according to Mr. Bartley—paid by a generous, but unconsenting, country to the Cecil family is made up, here are the exact figures:

Lord Salisbury, (Lord Privy Seal)	£2,000
Mr. A. J. Balfour, (nephew,) (First Lord of the Treasury)	5,000
Lord Selborne, (son-in-law,) (First Lord of the Admiralty)	4,550
Mr. Gerald Balfour, (nephew,) (President of the Board of Trade)	2,000
Lord Cranborne, (son,) (Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs)	1,500

These figures, it will be seen, total £15,050, the amount we gave roughly in our leading article of yesterday. In order, therefore, to arrive at the £17,000 of Mr. Bartley, it would be necessary to include the sum received by Lord William Cecil as rector of Bishop's St. Etheldreda, Hatfield, which, according to the Clergy List, is £1,432 gross and £975 net. It is only fair to point out, however, that the patron of the living is the Marquis of Salisbury himself.

THE SONG OF THE ANGELS.

Frank L. Phalen in Worcester Spy.

Far off in the dawn of the ages
When the world and its people were young,
One night o'er the plains of Judea
A wonderful anthem was sung.

It was sung by the angels of glory
To shepherds who watched through the night
Their flocks as they patiently waited
The advent of morning's glad light.

Flashing out through the shadows of midnight
There burst forth a vision so bright
That amid the strange splendor and singing
The shepherds stood trembling with fright.

Lowly listening, they heard the good tidings
Of glory and peace and good will,
And the birth of the Babe in the manger,
The world's deepest hopes to fulfill.

Never more shall the star and the vision
To the shepherds or wise men appear,
But the song of the angels forever
Sings on through the world far and near.

Sing on, holy anthem of heaven,
Sing on to our sorrow and tears;
Sing peace to the heart of the nations,
Sing joy to our swift flying years!

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

This was the unconventional note that a young matron on the upper west side of town had handed her by her maid the other day:

"My Dear Mrs. G.: I am dead and buried, and I recommend Mrs. F., who brings this note, as my worthy and capable successor."

Startling, wasn't it? But an interview with the bearer of the mysterious note revealed the fact that it was a missive from the wash lady of the family who, as it later appeared, was on her deathbed. The dying woman had taken this method of recommending a friend for her place as manipulator of the family linen. The bearer of the missive got the job, and on her first appearance announced that the writer of the note had "passed happily away" a few days after penning her sensational note of introduction.

"Paragraphers are perpetually poking fun at the women shoppers," remarked one of the wearied salesmen in the furnishing goods department of one of the big shops on Twenty-third Street during a lull in the rush on Saturday evening, "but you now see it is not always the women and the saleslgirls who are parties to the little comedies of the department stores." Which was apropos of this incident. A lady was buying for husband or son one of the elaborate silk dress suit protectors which they always deem a very appropriate thing for a Christmas present.

"What can I show you, Sir?" asked the clerk of a man who stood waiting at the counter. The lady had made her purchase and was awaiting the return of the bundle and the change for a bill.

"I'm no countryman," surlily snapped the man addressed, "and I can wait until you finish serving the lady, and give her her change."

"As you will, Sir," quietly replied the clerk, flushing considerably at the snappy reply of the customer. And he did wait, for the clerk took all the time that was due him.

"Now, what can I show you, Sir," he said to the man who was not from the country.

"Them dress-suit protectors; I reckon my boy would like one of them from his daddy for Christmas." Then leaning over he asked confidentially: "Do they wear them with any other kind of coats except a dress suit. I ain't quite sure if my boy has got a dress coat, though I reckon he has."

"They might be worn with other coats; I suppose, but it is not the custom here in the city," replied the wearied one. He smiled at the man who was not from the country.

Ascertaining their cost, after inspecting the protectors carefully, the countryman finally remarked. "Well, as I don't know whether my boy has a suit that he can wear one of them things with, and as it don't seem as if they would be the right thing with a sack coat, I reckon I'd best take a couple of neckties."

And the clerk remarked under his breath: "It's perfectly plain you are not from the country, you blooming jay!"

* * *

All about town one can see them. Wearing the uniform that in the days of the late Col. Waring meant something, men in semi-military dress ride up and down the streets in well-designed and easily running carriages, drawn by very respectable horses. On the sides of the carriages in small letters are painted the words "Street Cleaning Department." That seems to be the most visible part of what is left of the department that New Yorkers once justly prided themselves on. These foremen, or Superintendents, or whatever they may be, and their somewhat less spectacular fellows who travel about on bicycles are, of course, impressive and beautiful. But it strikes the man who has to travel about town that if there were fewer of these ornamental political chariots and charioteers and more of the workers with the brooms that the streets would be cleaner and neater, more presentable, and less filthy to drive or walk over. It doesn't take a scientist or an expert to tell whether the streets are cleaned. The flying dust, the rolling bits of paper, the uncovered ashcarts, the scarcity of cleaners, and the heaps of filth everywhere tell the story of neglect and of the dry rot that has settled down in the department that once kept the streets of New York clean and neat and wholesome. Citizens everywhere are complaining, with justice, that the streets were never in much worse condition than now. A walk up Fifth Avenue at midday Saturday from Twenty-third Street to Central Park showed just two street sweepers at work in all that stretch, one Superintendent in his wagon enjoying the gay, but dusty scene, and one Inspector on his bicycle. That forcibly tells of the sort of work being done by the Tammanyized department. Ladies out for an airing had to ride with the windows of their carriages closed until the Park and fresh air, free from particles of filth, were reached. Is not this condition of the streets one of the reasons for the spread of smallpox all over the city? Some of the physicians do not hesitate to say that it is at least a marvelously good helper.

When there comes into being the tailor who will do what his customer wants, when he wants it, and without subjecting him to a thousand and one petty and unnecessary annoyances, he will find a fortune at hand. It would easily be within his reach to attain eminence as a merchant prince, to range himself among the millionaires and to be called blessed by men and women alike. Strange that no one of them has ever thought of the possibilities for a man who would simply decline to exhaust the patience of his patrons in order to conform to the antiquated customs of men in his business. There are certainly no insuperable obstacles to overcome for the rapid cutting and fitting of a suit of clothes. All the fuss and worry of so terrible a task might easily be surmounted by a man with a bit of taste and tact and genius in the tailoring line. As it is to-day, the tailor is one of the most dreaded beings in the community. Once cloth for a suit of clothes is selected, the man who must have clothes made to fit is subjected to a system of Bertillon mesurements that, judging from subsequent results, are wholly unnecessary and frivolous. The cloth is alleged to be cut to these measurements at the pleasure of the cutter, not at all at that of the customer. Then comes the dreaded notification of a "fitting." Partially made garments are tried on what is sometimes termed "the human form divine," though judging from the tailor's efforts yours cannot be of these. Your suit is a travesty of a fit always. The cutter has plainly ignored the measurements to which you were subjected. He has seemingly taken instead a lot of figures he has found in his leisure moments in some book of logarithms or a treatise on integral calculus. If you are a thin man the fragmentary suit you try on looks to have been made for the fat man of some dime museum. If you are fleshy you can barely squeeze into something that seems to have been left over from the wardrobe of "the skeleton dude." This much is ascertained at the end of a week, if you are in luck and your tailor in a hurry. Then your tormentor tells you, after chalking and ripping and plying and stitching, to "call again" in three or four days. Your suit has now taken on the fashion of wearables—for some one else. More chalking and fitting and ripping and pinning. "Call again in a couple of days," suavely says the fiend of the thread and chalk and shears, just as if you had nothing in the world to do but race about at his beck and call. You do call and find that of the three garments ordered one may fit so that you will not be arrested if you wear it in public. The legs of your trousers either have a feminine train or are so short that you would be forced to wear top boots with them to shield your ankles from the public gaze. "So sorry, but the cutter must have made a mistake in the measurements," and then there is a correction of those measurements and another pair of trousers to be made. The collar of your coat never fits at the first trial, and it is a 100 to 1 shot that the two sleeves have no apparent relation to the coat or to one another. They do not sit as they should. So the days drag drearily and wearily on, and if you get the suit in a month from the time it is promised you are in luck. Generally your tiro of the task and take the ill-fitting garments home to be fitted by the slop-shop tailor around the corner, who rectifies the mistakes of the "master workman." It is the same with a woman's habit. Her troubles are as many and as long drawn out. One recently showed a tailor after a couple of weeks of trial and tribulation that there was but one single measurement in her whole gown that was

CHINA WILL ACCEPT TERMS

Native Officials Say She Will Not "Lose Her Face."

Joint Note to be Delivered To-day, and An Answer Is Expected About Thursday.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—Dr. Morrison, wiring to The Times from Peking Saturday, says that official Chinese declare that China will accept all the conditions of the joint note without "losing her face."

PEKING, Dec. 23.—Li Hung Chang, answering an inquiry from the foreign envoys regarding his health, said he believed he would be able to attend the meeting to-morrow in order to accept, with Prince Ching, the preliminary joint note.

The note will be presented by the Spanish Minister, Señor B. J. de Cologan, Dean of the Diplomatic Corps, with a few words expressive of a hope of as prompt a reply as possible to a note which has been carefully prepared with every desire to continue the dynasty, and not to be hard toward the nation, and of a further hope that the Chinese plenipotentiaries will urge upon Emperor Kwang Su the necessity of immediate compliance.

An answer is expected about Thursday.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Diplomatic circles discussed with interest to-day the provisions of the joint agreement which has been signed by the representatives of the powers at Peking for presentation to the Chinese plenipotentiaries. The hope is generally expressed that the latter will act promptly in the consideration of the note, and thus pave the way for the speedy settlement of the peace terms.

Mr. Wu Wu, the Chinese Minister, the demands made by the powers are a keen disappointment, and are not such, in his opinion, as should have animated the Governments which have the ultimate best interests of the Chinese Empire at heart. He regards them as harsh and severe, but expresses the hope that they will be discussed by both sides in an amicable and conciliatory spirit, and that the powers eventually will modify many objectionable features.

Mr. Wu expects that while Li-Hung-Chang and Prince Ching are fully qualified to act in the matter, yet the terms of the note will be sent by telegraph to the Court at its present abode, which is connected with Peking by telegraph.

ARBITRATION ON INDEMNITY.

The President Now Has the Matter Under Consideration — Envoys to Settle Punishment.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Russia's proposal, made a long time ago, for the reference of the Chinese indemnity question to the Court of Arbitration at The Hague in case there should prove to be too great a diversity of opinion at Peking, is being seriously considered by the United States Government, although the particular emergency for which Russia proposed it has passed by.

At the time Russia suggested the plan the indemnity question was the subject of an apparently interminable wrangle among the Envoys at Peking, and Russia advocated breaking the dead-lock by leaving it to The Hague tribunal. Since then the dead-lock has been broken by the avoidance of any decision whatever until after the protocol has been agreed to by China, and the final negotiations are in progress. There is, however, not much hope that the Peking Envoys will be better able to reach a decision when the question again comes up than they were before, and there is hardly more hope that an interchange of views among the powers would produce a satisfactory result within a reasonable length of time.

If the matter is referred to The Hague court, a bench could be constituted from among the powers which are not interested in China, and this impartial tribunal could reach a fairer decision than would be attained by a compromise among contending powers. Ten powers are interested in China, including two of the small ones, and sixteen gave their assent to The Hague court. There is, therefore, plenty of room to choose.

This subject has been brought to the President's attention. It is too early to say that he will adopt it or that a recommendation to the powers will soon follow, but it is known that he is giving it consideration. One effect of such action would be to end the wrangling at Peking, or at least reduce it to a minimum. The only questions left for the envoys to settle are indemnity and punishment. The joint note signed yesterday leaves open the amount of the indemnity and the nature of the punishment to be inflicted on the Chinese offenders. China is to punish the ringleaders as severely as possible, but the envoys can designate other victims and can pass on the severity of the punishment. If the indemnity question should be taken out of their hands, there would be nothing for them to fight over except the punishment question.

The United States Government would view this prospect with equanimity. It has very pronounced views on the subject of indemnity, but it is feared that Minister Conger does not share them. His recent success in overruling the policy of his Government does not make the prospect of an attempt to convert him to its views on the indemnity question very pleasing to the Administration.

JAPAN'S SYMPATHY FOR CHINA.

Almost a Revolution of Sentiment—Native Press Says Religious Invasions Should Be Suppressed.

YOKOHAMA, Dec. 5.—The wearisome and disappointing delays of the Peking diplomats are having a marked effect upon public opinion in Japan, producing what may be regarded as a revolution of sentiment in favor of China. The native papers are now mainly ranged on the side of leniency in dealing with the chief instigators, not only from a practical point of view looking at the supreme importance of inducing the Government to return to Peking, but also owing to the inherent force of the spirit of patriotism which characterizes the native Japanese.

The Japanese are naturally asking themselves what they would have done under similar provocation. The answer has given rise to an outflow of something strongly resembling sympathy, and Japan is therefore ranging itself on the side of the nations which are counseling the most moderate terms possible in the negotiations with the Chinese Court. It is noticeable also that even some of the foreign papers here are upon the same side, The Japan Mail conspicuously so.

The missionary question occupies a foremost place in the discussion. It is now felt as essential that the Western powers take cognizance of the sentiment here that religious invasions of Oriental countries by powerful Western organizations are tantamount to filibustering expeditions, and should not only be discountenanced, but stern measures should be adopted for their suppression. It is, of course, admitted that individual religious zeal in the line of propagandism cannot be interfered with, but the feeling here is that the missionary organizations constitute a constant menace to peaceful international relations.

The business stagnation continues, and is exciting some alarm in foreign as well as in native circles. The harbor of Yokohama is well-nigh denuded of shipping, and there is a steady, though as yet small, exodus of foreign residents. When the Chinese troubles are settled, however, every one is looking for a substantial revival of trade, and preparations for it are being made.

WOO-CHANG TO BE AN OPEN PORT.

PARIS, Dec. 23.—The semi-official Temps announces, in confirmation of the press dispatches, that the Viceroy of the Provinces of Hoo-Pei and Hoo-Nan declares that Woo-Chang will be made an open port.

Czar to Leave Livadia in January.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 23. — It was stated by one of the Ministers of State this afternoon that Emperor Nicholas and the Ministers of Finance, War, and Foreign Affairs do not expect to leave Livadia, where the Czar is convalescing, before the middle of January.

PERRY EXPEDITION MEMORIAL.

Japanese Are Contributing Freely Toward a Monument.

YOKOHAMA, Dec. 5.—The enthusiasm among the Japanese over the proposed memorial of the Perry expedition is increasing, and something handsome probably will be the result of the event.

One paper, remarking on the changes brought about by time, recalls the fact that when Perry's ships were lying off Uraga the alarm in Yeddo was immense. A system of signals was arranged to keep the capital informed of all the movements of the "black vessels," especially with regard to the contingency that they might proceed to Yeddo.

At first the citizens had an alternation of panics and reassurances, for whenever the tide turned the ships so that they rode with their bows northward, signals were at once made announcing an advance against Yeddo, and when the tide flowed news of satisfaction was hastily dispatched.

And now the Japanese are contributing largely to erect a monument to commemorate their advent.

STOCKHOLM, Dec. 23.—The condition of Prince Oscar, Duke of Scania, eldest son of the Crown Prince of Sweden and Norway, who has been seriously ill, is now much improved.

Berlin's Population, 2,469,676.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—The population of Berlin, including the suburbs, is 2,469,676, as compared with 2,076,946 in 1895.

Mild Weather in Stockholm.

STOCKHOLM, Dec. 23.—The weather in Stockholm is the mildest that has been known here for many years at the Christmas season.

Chile Buys Freight Cars in America.

SANTIAGO, Chile, Dec. 23.—The Government of Chile, which recently invited tenders for 400 freight cars, has accepted 300 from Beeche & Co. and 100 from W. R. Grace & Co., all of American manufacture.

Japanese Minister Resigns.

YOKOHAMA, Dec. 23.—Hoshi Toru, Minister of Communications, and formerly Japanese Minister to the United States, has resigned his portfolio in consequence of the persistent allegations of his implication in financial scandals. He will be succeeded by Mr. Hara, former Minister to Korea. It is possible that the stability of the Ito Cabinet will be affected.

The Trolley in Berlin.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—The electric trolley system is rapidly displacing the storage battery system on the busiest streets of Berlin.

'LECTION IN DE ZOO.

Lots of Ahgahfyin and Diffunce of 'Pinion—De Ishoos and de Outcum.

"Dat woh a powaful big time dey done had up to de Zoo de othah day," said Ephraim to the little boy.

"What was it?" queried the youngster.

"Didn' you heah about it?"

"The boy said that he had not, and Ephraim leaned his broom against a chair and walked over beside him. Then his voice dropped into a confidential whisper.

"You ain't gwine to tell nobody if I tells you, is you?"

The boy promised secrecy.

"You see it's dis a way," continued the darky. "I only happens to know 'bout it coz Mistah Elephun he a vehy pehticlah frien' o' mine. An' he make me promise not to tell no one. He say to me—"

"How can elephants say anything?" broke in the boy, "they can't talk."

"Mistah Smahty, how you know all dat? Bimeby you'll grow up, and den you won' spute wif youh eldehs."

Ephraim reached for his broom, and made a show of getting busy. The boy begged him to go on with the story.

"I reckon you know too much already," was the reply. "No use my tellin' you nuffin."

"Please Uncle Eph I'll be good."

"All right den. Well, as I was sayin', Mistah Elephun he done say to me dat dey was goin to hab a mouty excitin' time in de Zoo on 'lection day. You see, de an'mals all done know it wuz 'lection time, and dey wuz mouty anxious to get out and cas' dey votes. But they didn't see no way to go dat. So dey 'cide to hab a 'lection ob dey own right dah in de Zoo."

"What's a lection?" asked the boy.

"Mah soul, chile, you doan mean to tell me you doan know what a 'lection is! And you five years ole, too! Didn't youh pa 'splain fer you 'bout dat?" The boy admitted that his education had been neglected in that respect, so Eph explained.

"A 'lection," he said, "is a little lot o' boxes whah people puts in a little piece ob papah wid de names on it ob de man dey wants foh Praisident. Only dey doan put in de names on it ob just anybody dey wants. Coz den 'twouldn't be no 'lection at all. De papahs is all printed wid de names dey got a vote foh, dat's de reason dis is a free country.

"Well, de animals dey done know all 'bout 'lections. Dey ain't jg'nant like little boys what thinks dey know ebehthing. And dey was a lot o' 'lectioneehin' foh a whole week. Dey done fix it dat Mr. Elephun he was to be one can'date, and Mr. Tigah he gwine run ag'in him. An' de an'mals all take sides, some foh one, and some foh de othah.

"Mr. Hyena, he go 'roun' showin' his teef, and makin' speeches foh Mistah Elephun. Peeple in de Zoo dey think dat he howlin' fo' his suppah, coz dey doan undahstan' he talk. But he wahnt doin' nuffin o' de kin'. He wuz sayin' dat if Mistah Elephun 'lected dey wuz all goin' to have mo' dan dey could eat. For instead of bein' in de cages dey would be 'lowed to run loose in de pahk, and jes' go whah dey please. And he say dey ought all vote foh Mistah Elephun.

"Mistah Lion he done stan' up and talk in fabah o' Mistah Elephun, too.

"But Mistah Le'pahd he say dat one o' de reasons why nobody ought'r vote foh Mistah Elephun, jes' foh dat reason—coz Mistah Lion woh foh him. He say anybody kin see dat if Mistah Elephun 'lected he won' be de suah nuff Praisident. 'He say Mistah Lion goin' do all de talkin'. And Mistah Lion, he say, is done call de King o' de Beesties, and it bad nuff to hab people think he dey king, widout makin' him so suah nuff.

"An' Mistah Monkey, he say dat he doan wan' Mistah Elephun 'lected, coz he done get he shah o' de peanuts now. He say Mistah Elephun so big and strong and he trunk so fah reachin' dat he get mos' o' de nuts, anyhow. Mistah Tigah jes' he right stripe foh him, he say, and he goin' to vote foh him.

"Well, dey wuz a ahgufyin' dat a way foh moah dan a week, and some say one way and some de othah. An at las' dey hab evahthing ready foh de votin'. Coz dey couldn't get out o' dey cages to put little papahs in no box, so dey 'cide to hab de 'lection by acamation, and each one jest mus' get up an' say who he vote foh.

"Mistah Polah Beah, he make a lot o' noise, and say he goin' to vote foh Mr. Tigah.

"'Cum off de ice,' yell some of de othah an'mals, but Mistah Polah Beah jes grin and say nuffin. And Mistah Le'pahd get mad when dey tell him dat it doan make no diffunce what he think, he rep'tation been spotted so long nobody cah foh his 'pinon nohow.

"And all de people in de Zoo dey think de an'mals wuz gettin' rampag'us and tryin' to brek outen de cages, dey make such a awful racket. But 'twuz nuffin o' de kin'. Dey wuz jes ex'cisin' de right o' suffage. And how anybody know you doin' dat if you doan make a lot o' noise 'bout it?"

Eph paused, and seemed to be lost in deep thought. The little boy waited several minutes, then spoke up and asked:

"Well, Uncle Eph, who was 'lected?"

"Oh, didn't I tell you dat? I mos' fohgot. Dah nevah wuz much doubt 'bout dat, any way. Dose an'mal's got sense. Cose dey has. An' dey know what good foh 'em. So neahly all ob 'em vote foh Mistah Elephun, and he 'lected wifout any trubble."

"How fine," said the little boy; "and now I suppose they don't have to stay in their cages any more, and can play in the Park just as long as they like?"

Ephraim grinned. "Any one could tell you doan know nuffin 'bout 'lections," he said. "Cose dose an'mals ain't goin' to be 'lowed loose in no pahk. Dey jes goin' on de same as befo'. And dey knowed dat all de time, only dey like to 'suade deyselfs dat it would be diffunt."

"And will the elephant get all the peanuts, Uncle Eph?"

"Well, not quite all, maybe. But he need a lot, you know, he so big."

And Eph started his sweeping, leaving the little boy to think it all over alone.

THE SKIPPER'S FROG YARN

How the Old Man and His Mates Robbed a Temple.

Rigged Up as Reptiles, They Beguiled the People of Hooloopollabum, the Skipper Says.

Whatever may have been the skipper's weaknesses, temperance was not one of them. When he drank, he drank deeply. All the bartenders of South Street knew this to their sorrow, for the skipper never thought of paying for a drink any more than he thought of flying to the moon. However, the skipper was far too great a personage for a simple bartender to oppose his commands, so he drank as much as he pleased and as often as he pleased.

Possibly it was due to liquor that he told such wonderful tales. Indeed, it was highly likely that such was the truth, for who on earth could have lied so fluently when sober? His stories covered the whole history of ships, from the Ark of Noah down to the modern battleship, and, to hear him talk, one would have thought that he had himself sailed on all of them. But as long as his tales were good nobody cared a whit about their veracity. Cap'n Billy didn't object, neither did the big longshoreman; and the rest of the habitués of South Street's Munchausen Club were equally indifferent as to the laws of truth.

It is fairly certain that the Skipper was pretty well filled up with Holland gin when he told them the yarn about the Ship of Frogs that morning. If he wasn't he ought to have been.

"Gents," he said, by way of introduction, "there ain't no doubt that I've told you about some right wild doin's, is there?"

"You bet," replied Cap'n Billy.

"Well, you have spun a few good 'uns," admitted the longshoreman.

"I just guess I have," the Skipper went on. "An' every one o' them was as true as th' Bible."

"Tough on th' Bible," remarked one of the company.

"As true as th' Bible," repeated the Skipper, pretending not to hear. "An' some o' them a blarsted sight truer. But I'm going to tell you one to-day that'll make th' others seem like th' first-reader stories what you used to read in your childhood. This one's goin' to be true, too—true as Gospel. I was right here when th' whole thing happened, an' I'll never forget it—never.

"Well, as to th' time, I can't exactly remember, but I think it was about thirty or so years ago. My ship was th' Blue Fly. She was a brig, an' as nice a one as you ever clapped your eyes on, trim an' fresh painted an' with new pitch all over her sides. She was all right from stem to stern.

"Besides me, there were twenty men aboard. There were two mates an' a cook an' a cabin boy, an' th' rest were just men. We sailed from London along in January, havin' in our hold a lot o' stuff that we were to take out to India an' sell off to the ign'rant natives at twice as high a price as it was worth. Cheatin' th' wild men, you know, was a fav'rite occupation in those days, an' it is yet, for that matter. Such bein' th' case, we thought we might as well be th' ones to cheat 'em as anybody else; so we had a lot o' plans for gettin' next to the niggers, such as pretendin' we were pirates an' ghosts an' the like.

"All th' time that we were sailin' down to th' South Seas we thought about th' best scheme for doin' th' job up in good style, an' by th' time we got off th' India coasts our campaign was right well fixed. I won't bother you with tellin' all th' things we did. I'm just goin' to put you on to th' frog ship racket. To make th' story short—th' first gag we worked was fakin' up for all th' men aboard clothes that made the heartiest wot was dressed in 'em look like big bull frogs. Th' way we did it was to take a lot o' green cloth an' sew it up into garmints th' shape o' frogs. Some o' th' men were pretty good at a sew, an' long afore we got to India all th' costoomes were ready. We tried 'em on time an' time again, an' th' effect was satisfactory. They was made so as to entirely cover up anybody that got into 'em, an' on th' places where th' faces ought to be we painted eyes an' ears an' noses just like frogs'.

HOOLOOPOLLABUM IS SIGHTED.

"Well, we sighted a harbor that looked pretty temptin' one bright mornin'. Upon lookin' on our maps we found that th' place was called Hooloopollabum. 'Twas somewhere on th' southeast coast—I've forgotten th' exact spot. An' a great place it was. Right at th' edge o' th' harbor was a big city—three times as big as New York—an' we could see stickin' up from th' middle o' the city th' tall steeple o' th' temple owned by Mr. Pollagog, who is th' biggest an' th' richest o' th' heathen gods o' th' Hindus. When I saw that, I knew we had struck it rich, for I'd heard tell o' th' gold that this old god had stored away in his hold-out, an' I thought we'd be able to get a grip on some of it if we acted with th' proper circumspectiveness.

"'It's lucky,' I said to th' mate, 'that we happened to hit this here place first.'

"Then I told him an' all th' crew about th' Temple o' Pollagog. All th' time we were sailin' into th' harbor under a stiff breeze, an' it wasn't long before we hove close enough to see people movin' around on shore.

"'Now, boys,' I yelled, 'get on your frog rigs in a hurry.'

"In a few minutes every man aboard except me had on th' outlandish togs. Accordin' to th' plan we had fixed, I wasn't to dress up, but was to pretend I was a sort of slave to th' frogs that was runnin' th' ship. Well, as I said, all o' them got into their duds. Then they began to crawl all through th' riggin'. So it happened that when we came in good eye-range o' th' city it looked to th' people ashore as if they were about to be visited by a vessel o' frog sailors, an' you can guess without much trouble that th' ign'rant codgers were pretty well skeered up.

"Of course it wouldn't have done for us to have gotten too close inland, or th' damned niggers could have told that th' frogs were half men an' half cloth. So I ordered th' anchor dropped when we had just got far enough to give 'em a kind o' dim vision of us. Then we pulled down th' sails to keep th' wind from blowin' 'em to pieces, an' as soon as they were stored away we began to amuse ourselves by dancin' wild jigs on th' decks an' skippin' aloft an' doin' gymnastic whirls an' turns on the yards. I acted just like th' ones that were dressed up in frog style, for I knew it would set th' Hindus thinkin' more than ever if they saw a single man jumpin' about with a score o' frogs.

"You wouldn't believe it, but we kept that thing up for two whole days before makin' any move to go ashore. By th' time th' second day started there was a million niggers down at th' water's edge lookin' at us. Th' whole shore was black with 'em. They looked like a first-class zebra out of a circus, an' my face was painted solid all over with red, so that you couldn't tell whether I was a white man or not. I was a holy terror to look at, I can tell you. Th' boys were so full o' laughin' that they almost forgot to keep on playin' frogs.

THE SKIPPER'S LITTLE GAME.

"We lowered a little boat, me an' a couple o' th' frogs, an' then I climbed down an' got into it. An' while th' frogs jumped an' capered I started to pull for th' shore as hard as I could, makin' straight for th' place where there was th' biggest gang o' niggers. As I got nearer to 'em I could see that they were movin' this way an' that right lively, as if they were skeered up good, an' when I was within hailin' distance th' commotion among 'em was something awful. They evidently thought a funny thing was goin' to happen.

"At last I rowed up against th' sand o' th' shore, an' after seein' that my boat was well grounded I jumped off an' rushed square toward th' middle o' th' crowd o' niggers. You ought to have seen 'em scatter. They ran like turkeys, me after 'em. To be sure, I looked enough like th' devil to make anybody get out o' th' way. It wasn't five minutes before every nigger was out o' sight. If there had been one o' them there there had been 10,000, probably more, but they all got out o' th' way in such a big hurry that I didn't have time to count 'em exactly. Well, as soon as th' way was clear I walked along as fast as I could toward th' temple o' Pollagog, but for a second I glanced over my shoulder to see how th' frogs were gettin' along aboard th' brig. Great Jimminy! You should have seen 'em. When I saw how lifelike they looked I didn't wonder that we'd made an impression on th' black people. They looked as much like frogs as if they'd been genuine ones, an' that's a fact.

"In a few minutes I got to th' temple. When I walked in there wasn't a soul there. Th' priests, I s'pose, had all hid from fright of us, like th' rest o' th' folks. Any way, they weren't to be found in th' place, so I just made free to make myself at home. On lookin' around a bit, I found lots of gold an' diamonds an' other joolry. There must have been a million or two o' dollars worth of it, for, accordin' to th' best information I could get afterward th' people o' Hooloopollabum had been makin' presents to this here god o' theirs for a hundred or so years, maybe more, an' th' pile o' valuables they had collected together was awful to behold. Th' only question was, how I was to get away with it.

THE YARN GROWS TOUGHER.

"I happened to know th' lingo o' th' Hooloopollabites pretty well. You know, I always was ruther some few on rattlin' off foreign lingoes, an' before goin' on a voyage I made it a point to get acquainted with th' talk o' th' people o' th' country where I was headed for. So it had happened that only a week or so before startin' on this trip I had got hold of a few Hooloopollabite grammars an' studied up on th' niggers' jargon a little.

"From th' temple I hustled out to th' street an' begun to yell a thing or two. I knew some o' th' blarsted people must be hidin' in th' neighborhood, an' calculated as how they would hear me. What I said was this: 'Come out o' them houses, you miserable sinners, an' listen to th' message o' Mr. Pollagog. He's sent th' big frog ship to take away his money an' give it to him at his house up in th' moon. I am th' slave o' th' frogs. Hurry up, you dogs, or King Pollagog will come down here an' 'swat you over th' heads so you won't ferget him quick. Come along, now.'

"That's what I said to 'em, an' it wasn't many minutes before they were showin' up. At first they kind o' skulked out o' their places o' concealment in a uneasy way; then they started to comin' faster, an' in a little while they were pourin' out like bees. When I had a crowd of about ten thousand around me, I said:

"'Get down on your knees, for I'm th' delegate o' th' frogs, what Pollagog has sent to you.'

"Immejutly all o' them, every man in th' mob, fell down an' started to prayin'. I let 'em keep it up for a time an' then I remarked:

"'Get up now an' take this here gold an' stuff down to my boat. Don't be slow about it, or it'll be bad for you.'

"I guess I needn't tell you how them niggers worked for two whole days, an' how I rowed th' gold over to th' ship as fast as they brought it down to th' beach, an' how, when it was all loaded, I blessed th' city in th' name o' Pollagog, an' how th' frogs kept dancin' through th' rigging all th' time I was haulin' over th' gold. It'd take too long to tell it. O my! but wasn't it funny. An' after we had all th' money an' diamonds an' other truck aboard them niggers staid on th' shore an' prayer to us until there rose up a wind strong enough to set us sailin' out o' th' harbor, which was at least a week after th' deal had been finished.

"Well, I guess that's about th' end o' the story, except that I took particular pains not to go back to the city o' Hooloopollabum any more."

The Skipper's audience had been listening attentively, but, as usual, the end of the yarn was not satisfying. The Skipper always made it a point to leave the final flourish in the air until some of his hearers asked for it. Cap'n Billy came to the front with the expected question.

"But what did you do with th' dough?" he asked.

The story teller took a fresh chew of tobacco and replied:

"What did we do with it? Why, we sailed around till we found a nice little island—one o' them that nobody lives on down there in th' South Seas—an' then we took all th' gold an' carried it ashore an' hid it in a big cave, so that we could come back an' find it after we had finished up sellin' th' cargo o' merchandise that our employers had sent us out to pan off on th' Hindus. An' what do you think? When we'd sold th' stuff an' came back to look for th' island we couldn't find it to save our lives. We hunted for it about a month an' then gave up. Just think of it! If we'd found th' damned place we could have taken enough coin back to London to make us th' richest people in th' kingdom."

RUSSIA OFFERS £16,000,000?

Said to be Willing to Assist Roumania to That Extent.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—"Russia offered Roumania a loan of sixteen millions," says the Vienna correspondent of The Daily Express, "to assist her in the financial crisis, but the offer was declined because there were conditions attached undermining Roumanian independence."

MAY COPY LAFAYETTE STATUE.

Association Plans to Erect a Duplicate in This Country.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 23.—Archbishop Ireland said to-day his principal object in his recent visit to Washington was to attend a meeting of the Lafayette Monument Association. He added:

"We found that after paying all the expenses of erecting the bronze statue in Paris, we still had on hand $30,000. We almost decided to duplicate the memorial statue in Washington or some other American city, provided an additional amount can be raised. The matter will be settled definitely at a meeting to be held in Chicago early in January."

MINE BURNING 42 YEARS.

Fire Now Under Control, Will Be Extinguished in Two Years.

TAMAQUA, Penn., Dec. 23.—The officials of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company are jubilant over the fact that the fire in the celebrated burning mine at Summit Hill, which started forty-two years ago, is now under control, and it is said that the next two years will see its extinguishment.

The fire, which has consumed about thirty-five acres of the finest coal land in the anthracite coal region, has moved westward toward Lansford. Two immense drilling machines which have been constantly probing for the fire, have now honeycombed the earth to the west of the burning portion. Culm is being poured into these holes, and a solid mass will thus confront the fire.

Archbishop Ireland Not Going to Cuba.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 23.—Archbishop John Ireland returned to St. Paul to-day. He denied the statements recently telegraphed from Duluth that he was to visit Cuba and Porto Rico as a special commissioner appointed by President McKinley to settle disputes in regard to the division of Church property. "There is nothing whatever to the story," he said. "Such a thing was not mentioned by the President nor by any one on behalf of the Government. If I should ever visit the islands it would be purely on my own account."

Announces Discovery of a Comet.

BOSTON, Dec. 23.—A telegram from the European Union of Astronomers announces the discovery of a comet by Giacobini of Nice Dec. 20, 313 Greenwich mean time, right ascendency 22 hours 32 minutes; declination south 23 degrees. The motion of the object in right ascension is plus a degree and a half a day and in declination south 8 minutes.

Railway Official Killed.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 23.—Charles M. Miller, Assistant Engineer of the Montana Division of the Great Northern Railway, was killed by an electric car to-night. Mr. Miller, while crossing the street, was struck and thrown against the curb. His skull was fractured, and he died while being carried to the hospital. Mr. Miller's headquarters were at Williston, N. D., and he was on a visit to relatives in this city.

Vermonter Drowns in Florida.

TARPON SPRINGS, Fla., Dec. 23.—The body of W. H. Bigelow, a wealthy Winter resident from Vermont, was found in the bay to-day between the mainland and the island, where he had been drowned by the capsizing of his sailboat. One colored sailor was also drowned, but the body has not been found.

Man and Woman Overcome by Gas.

A man and woman, who registered at the Klondike Hotel, 155 Bleecker Street, Saturday night as George B. Brealits and wife, were found unconscious from illuminating gas in their room at noon yesterday. They were taken to St. Vincent's Hospital. Mary Barnett, the housekeeper, smelled gas, and she had the door of the room broken in by Policeman Bambeick when she could get no answer by knocking. The gas was escaping through a tube which had slipped from the gas heater.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

NEWS OF THE DISCOVERY OF EXTENSIVE COAL DEPOSITS IN RHODESIA CONFIRMED.—The coal experts who were recently sent into Rhodesia by the British South Africa Company have just published their report in Cape Town. The experts practically confirm the news concerning the discovery of coal which was published just before the breaking out of the Boer war. This is considered of immense importance in the light of the Cape to Cairo scheme.

The experts found that the coal field is situated some one hundred and eighty miles northwest of Bulawayo, and is known to cover at least four hundred square miles. The seams vary from 5 to 16 feet in width, and as the coal lies within 40 feet of the surface, it will be worked by means of inclines instead of shafts, for many years at least. It is estimated that at least 1,500,000,000 tons will be available after making an allowance of 20 per cent. for loss. The quality of the coal varies greatly, but the experts declare that the coal is better than that now in use in the Transvaal, Natal, and Cape Colony, and in some places compares favorably with the best American coal.

In view of the discovery and its estimated value, it has been decided to take the Cape to Cairo railway through the centre of the coal fields and so on to Victoria Falls. The survey of this part of the line is almost complete; the beginning of the work of construction has for some time been dependent upon the report of the coal experts.

EDUCATIONAL REFORM IN GERMANY.—Wilhelm II., as King of Prussia and Emperor of the German Empire, has just issued an edict based upon the report of the Minister of Education criticising the present intermediate school system maintained in Germany and offering suggestions for its improvement. His Majesty expresses the hope that the reforms which he outlines will be of benefit to the higher schools, and will tend toward obliterating the line of demarkation between the classical and the scientific and practical schools.

He would regard the education received in the Gymnasium, the Realgymnasium, and the Oberrealschule as of equal value, which may more clearly be made manifest by an interchange of curriculum, making certain courses "elective" in some schools which are "required" in others; in other words, making science and modern languages optional in classical schools, and the classics optional in eclentific schools. The Kaiser says that there is no objection to increasing the amount of instruction in Latin given in the Gymnasium and in the Realgymnasium, but it should be borne in mind that a knowledge of English is a matter of growing importance, and this language should be taught as an alternative to Greek in all the classes of those schools, except the three highest. Where the local conditions are favorable to the alteration, English is also to take the place of French as a compulsory subject in the three highest classes, French, however, being retained as a voluntary subject, where this change is made.

The Kaiser criticises the conventional method of teaching Greek, saying that too much time is taken up with useless technicalities, and that in addition to the aesthetic enjoyment of the Greek masterpieces, the teacher is to lay stress upon the appreciation of the connection between the ancient world and modern civilization. He also observes certain defects in the teaching of history. Important periods of ancient history are neglected, and the history of Germany in the nineteenth century, "with its inspiring memories and its great achievements for the Fatherland," is not treated with sufficient thoroughness.

He touches upon physical exercises, to which, he says, more attention should be devoted, while the individual health of the student should become the subject of constant attention. In particular, the distribution and the duration of the intervals between the lessons are to be better arranged.

SERIOUS UPRISING IN BRITISH EAST AFRICA.—The recent inquiry made to the Indian Government by Downing Street as to the available forces ready for transportation is now believed in London to have been inspired partly by the news from British East Africa announcing a serious rising of the Ogaden Somali in Jubaland, and not because the Government contemplates sending any more Indian troops to South Africa. The Ogadens, although they entered into treaty relations with the Chartered Company, and subsequently acquiesced in the extension of the British protectorate in their country, were not brought under control until 1898, when a punitive expedition was sent against them. Since then, it is said, owing to the fact that the people are fanatical and treacherous, a general revolt has been gradually fomented.

The British Government so far is said to be incompletely informed concerning the extent and seriousness of the revolt, but is nevertheless ready to send a large punitive expedition into the country should further advices prove such a measure necessary. In replying to inquiries made in Downing Street, the Government has emphasized the fact that communication between Mombasa and Zanzibar is only kept up by a monthly steamer, and that there is no telegraph to Kismayu, which would account for the scarcity of definite news on the subject.

In well-informed quarters the opinion is held that a strong force should at once be sent into Jubaland, and that the present force on the coast is inadequate to carry out such a scheme. The march, leading through a dense jungle by narrow trails, would, it is asserted, occupy a week. There are four or five British officers in Somaliland, which was chosen as the military headquarters partly from the fact that it is on the trail leading to the Ogaden headquarters. In Jubaland there are two Somali tribes, one of which, known to be in active revolt, has for its chief Sultan Ahmed ben Murgan, a young man who was acknowledged by the British in that quality in 1896. They are a large, warlike, and fanatical Mohammedan tribe, of nomadic habits, who spend their time in tending their immense herds of cattle and in raiding. Unlike the Ogadens, they possess no firearms, but are expert in the use of the javelin, sword, and long knife.

VANDALISM, CHRISTIAN AND OTHERWISE, IN THE LEVANT.—Mail advices from Jerusalem are to the effect that a wholesale destruction of ancient monuments is going on in that neighborhood and on the other side of the Jordan, with the full permission of the Turkish Government. The Church of St. Jeremiah, a monument of the Fifth Crusade, which was recently presented to the French Government, is being "restored," but in a way which destroys its original archaeological interest, as it is to be rebuilt in the interests of Catholicism as opposed to the Orthodox Church. It is also asserted that the Cufic inscription at the entrance of the small mosque of Omar, dating from the seventh century, has been sawed off, and its present fate is unknown.

The Turkish Government a few years ago sent colonists to occupy the sites of the remarkably well-preserved cities of the Decapolis, on the other side of the Jordan. It is now found that the colonists have turned the ruined cities into stone quarries, and that the work of destruction is proceeding in a methodical manner, with the encouragement of the Government. In Gerash, the famous Street of Columns is disappearing before the picks of the settlers, the columns being broken up and carted away, to be used in the construction of stone dwellings. At Amman many of the well-preserved Roman monuments have completely disappeared during the last twelve months, while the great theatre has been hacked into pieces. The well-preserved Cities of Famagusta, Caesarea, and Sebaste are now said to be so far destroyed as to be utterly unrecognizable, even when studied in the light of descriptions made by travelers not more than five years ago.

DEVELOPMENT OF WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY IN GERMANY.—The Postal and Telegraph Departments of the German Government have already formally adopted the Braun system of wireless telegraphy in preference to that of Marconi, while the military authorities are still experimenting with a view to its adoption in the near future. Prof. Braun, who is the head of the Physical Laboratory at Strassbourg University, is said to have proved that Marconi's theory that distance could be overcome by the employment of more powerful induction coils is an error, and that there is a definite limit to the length of currents favorable for the transmission of messages, beyond which any further strength of current is of no avail. The German savant has overcome the difficulty by making the transmitter oscillate, not as before by static charges, but by induction. His transmitter is a single wire, its lower part being in spiral form. By its side, though completely separate, there is another spiral wire, generally consisting of a single coil of thick wire. Through the latter Leyden jars are discharged, creating electric waves in the primary wire and causing others in the transmission wire. The transmitted energy can here be increased theoretically without limit, and is at the same time easily isolated.

The War Office recently established a connection by this system of wireless telegraphy between the Brocken, the highest mountain in North Germany, and the Kyffhaeuser, the highest summit in Thuringia, a distance of about sixty kilometers; also between the Borkum reef and the Borkum lighthouse, a distance of about thirty-five kilometers, and in each case the results are said to be highly satisfactory.

HIS WIFE IN BELLEVUE.

Lawyer Pomeroy Says She Was Attacked and Her Arrest Was an Outrage.

Frank Pomeroy of 2,251 Seventh Avenue called at Bellevue Hospital late last night saying he had heard his wife, Louise, had been committed to the Island by Magistrate Brann, in the Harlem Court, Saturday for intoxication, and that she had been sent to the alcoholic ward of the hospital for recuperation.

The woman was in the alcoholic ward, and Pomeroy was allowed to see her. He said he wanted to get her away from the institution. He was indignant when told she had to serve eight days yet either there or on the island, and he created a scene by exclaiming:

"I'll get her out to-night if it costs me $5,000!"

Capt. McHale of the night desk told him he would have to pay only $8 to have his wife released. Pomeroy declared he did not have the money with him. He said he would bring back his wife's sealskin sacque, a carriage, and the money to release her. Then he went out.

Mrs. Pomeroy was arrested in Harlem by Policeman Heartt. She had bruises on one arm at the time, probably from a fall.

After Mr. Pomeroy left the hospital he told the following story of his wife's adventures during the last few days:

"She is subject to heart attacks and sometimes wanders away from home, but she never drinks anything. On Friday afternoon she strolled away from the house and was followed by two men, who attacked her as she was passing a vacant lot and robbed her of three rings, altogether worth about $200. This is what she has just told me when I visited her in the hospital ward. She cannot remember exactly where the vacant lot was.

"As she lay there, unconscious from a blow that had been struck her by one of the robbers, a policeman found her and had her locked up in a police station on the charge of intoxication. On the next morning (Saturday) she was arraigned in the Harlem Police Court, and, after making no effort to defend herself, because she was in a state of high nervous tension and physical weakness, she was fined $10 on the testimony of the officer who had arrested her.

"As she had not the cash to pay the fine she was told that she would have to go to the Island for ten days; but the Magistrate, seeing that she was sick, had her sent temporarily to the Harlem Hospital, whence she was removed later to Bellevue. There I found her to-night, after searching in vain for two days.

"The whole affair is an outrage. Such a thing would not be tolerated in the Cannibal Islands. I shall take steps to trace the responsibility for it, and shall endeavor to have those punished who deserve it."

As Mr. Pomeroy said this he jumped into a cab to hurry back to the hospital. It was just a few minutes before 2 o'clock this morning. He had with him some wraps for his wife and said that he would, on reaching the hospital, pay the fine and secure her release. He said that she was twenty-seven years old and that they were married in Boston last Summer. Their home is an elegantly furnished flat at the address above named. Mr. Pomeroy is a lawyer

NICHE FOR CHRIST IN JEWS' TEMPLE OF FAME

Rabbi Schulman Analyzes the Teaching of Jesus.

His Regenerating Morality Declared to be Mainly that of Israel — Jewish Attitude Toward Christmas.

"Jesus was unquestionably a unique personality, with methods characteristic of Himself. At His best He was the Jew with a special sympathy with the outcasts and sinners of society. He translated into His own life the Pharisaic doctrine that the repentant sinner stands higher than he who has never fallen, and the beautiful motto of the sage Hillel, 'Love all creatures and befriend them with the doctrine.'"

The above remarks were made by the Rev. Dr. Samuel Schulman, associate rabbi of the Temple Beth-El, in the course of a sermon yesterday morning. His subject was, "Judaism's Message of Peace and Good-Will," the text being Isaiah, lvii., 19, "Peace, peace to him that is far off and to him that is near, saith the Lord, and I will heal him."

Rabbi Schulman said in part:

"These words of glad tidings voice the message in the air at this season. The atmosphere is laden with the precious perfumes of peace, sympathy, and good-will. No one can escape the contagion of the sentiment, and no one ought to refuse to appreciate the ideal for human society which this week of love and kindness foreshadows.

"The attitude of the Jew toward this season is, to my mind, clear. Neither thoughtless yielding to influences around him nor a narrow self-isolation is a fitting position for the enlightened Jew to occupy. He must not indulge weakness of a love of imitation nor allow himself to be carried away by force of example to the extent of participating in customs and symbols of a festival which in many aspects is a direct challenge to his own faith. He need not fail to appreciate that side of the festival with which he has affinities in thought and aspirations. He does not celebrate Christmas, but he rejoices to see his fellow-men rejoice. He recognizes that the message of peace is 'bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh.' It has always been the highest ideal of Israel's religion.

"Judaism and Christianity have very much in common, but also vital and irreconcilable differences. Let us not forget the former fact; it will foster our liberality. Let us be mindful of the latter; it will safeguard our loyalty.

"The thought that salvation for the race is to be obtained by the faith in one man selected from the world's saints and prophets to be the mediating savior between men and God is one that violates the fundamental principles of Judaism. With the dogma of the special sonship of God, of one man, we have nothing to do except to oppose it. The suggestion that we are to celebrate the birth of a Messiah has no meaning for us; but with the appeal to man's moral nature, with the social ideal and hope of a united humanity voiced in the message of peace, we have much to do. This message may be Christian in the eyes of the world, and proclaimed with accompaniment of Christian symbolism, but it is Jewish by the character of its original conception in Jewish prophecy. Peace is not a free gift like the sun and the rain, which come to the good as well as the evil. God does not permit moral pauperization. Judaism does not recognize saviors, it proclaims a saving morality. When we abstract from Jesus the supernatural, we find that His regenerating morality is mainly Jewish."

Rabbi Schulman then went into extensive comparison of the Sermon on the Mount with sayings culled from the Old Testament and rabbinical literature, and made the remarks quoted in the beginning.

"But, while granting Jesus' individuality and his impression on history," he added, "it must be emphasized that everything Jesus said might have been lost, and Jewish literature would account for every vital element in religion and true morality. The message of personal salvation and peace that He offered, stripped of all dogmatism, is Jewish. Humanity needs not a Son of God, but sons of God, created in His image, united in justice and lovingkindness; not a Messiah, but the messianic idea in a perfected society. So fixed are the dogmas with the ethics of Jesus in the minds of men that it would be disastrous to the pure monotheism of Israel's religion to recognize Him as a prophet. In the temple of fame of Israel there is a niche left open. When the world shall cease calling Jesus a God, Israel will know what to do with Him as a man."

ORDAINED BY BISHOP POTTER.

Rev. George Griffiths Bartlett Elevated to the Priesthood.

Bishop Potter officiated in the crypt of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, on Cathedral Heights, yesterday morning at the ordination of the Rev. George Griffiths Bartlett to the priesthood. He has been serving as a curate in Grace Church. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. George W. Douglass of Tuxedo, N. Y., and the candidate was presented by his father, the Rev. S. T. Bartlett, formerly Dean of the Episcopal Divinity School of Philadelphia. The Rev. Dr. Ernest Yorhis of the cathedral clergy staff sang the Litany.

After the hymn of ordination, "Come, Holy Ghost, Our Souls Inspire," had been sung by Bishop Potter and the choir and the congregation, the clergy joined with Bishop Potter in the laying on of hands, by which the Deacon was advanced to the priesthood. A white stole, the badge of the priestly office, was then placed over the shoulders of the newly made priest, and the Bishop handed him a Bible as the symbol of his authority as a teacher.

MISSIONS TO NON-CATHOLICS.

Father Elliott Tells of the Work of Catholic Missionary Bands.

The Rev. Father Walter Elliott of the Paulist Fathers concluded yesterday, at the Church of St. Paul the Apostle his series of sermons upon the missionary outlook at the close of the nineteenth century. Yesterday's address was upon "The Conversion of America." He said: "Here in America, in these last years of the nineteenth century, we have begun to organize our home missions. Distinctly for this work the Catholic Missionary Union, a corporation of prelates and priests, was formed. Its main efforts are directed to those parts of the country where Catholics are fewest, including the South. The Catholic Missionary Union now supports priests in Virginia, North Carolina, Mississippi, and Texas, whose sole occupation is that of making converts to the faith.

"Diocesan organizations of missionaries are already in active operation in the archdiocese of New York and in the dioceses of Hartford, Detroit, Cleveland, Ohio, and several others in the West. Similar bands are now forming in the dioceses of Providence, R. I., and Manchester, N. H.

"Cardinal Gibbons is authority for the statement that 30,000 converts are received into the Catholic Church in this land every year. This estimate of the Cardinal was made before the initiation of the new non-Catholic missionary movement, for, since that statement was made, the number of converts has increased 25 per cent."

FEARS FOR THE REPUBLIC.

Rev. Madison C. Petera Says Municipal Reform Must Begin Immediately.

The Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters delivered the second of a series of addresses on "Municipal Reform" in the Sumner Avenue Baptist Church, Brooklyn, yesterday.

"Once again," he said, "we have a virtuous outbreak against municipal corruption. As a rule, all our largest cities are the worst governed. Popular government in nearly all our cities has degenerated into a government by a 'boss.' The city is a menace to our civilization, and as our cities have grown larger and more dangerous, the government has become more corrupt, and control has passed into the hands of those who themselves most need to be controlled.

"Does not this fact contain an ominous augury for the future of our Republic? Unless there is an immediate grand rally of the good citizens that will drive out of politics these godless masses, the prophecy that the ocean was dug for America's grave, that the winds were woven for her winding sheet, and that the mountains were reared for her tombstone, will be fulfilled. There is time yet to save the city. But there is no time to lose."

VICE NEVER SO BOLD.

The Rev. Mr. Foster Thinks the Theatre the School of "Abominations."

The Rev. F. M. Foster, Ph. D., pastor of the Third Reformed Presbyterian Church, Twenty-third Street, preached, yesterday, on the present anti-vice crusade. He said: "In all the years, vice was never so bold, brazen, devilish! It stalks the street in open day; and at night the theatrical district—Broadway, Twenty-third Street, Eighth Avenue, and Forty-second Street—is fairly ablaze with abominations. Other localities, but not so large in extent, are equally plague-stricken.

"Just now there is effort at reform. A party is coming to the front determined to put in new men and have a 'clean' city. Not a few ministers are in the movement. These ministers are sincere in their efforts, as are many others. But will they succeed? Is there reason to hope that results other than those heretofore experienced will be attained? The future can be judged by the past. 'Reform' prevailed a few years ago. We were lifted up to be dropped down deeper than ever. The difficulty then was, the reformers needed to be reformed. Their committees would meet on the Lord's Day, discuss plans, and map out their course. Meetings, practically political, were held on the Sabbath. The 'reformers' dishonored the God of purity and righteousness, and could not legitimately hope for divine aid.

"Furthermore, the reform did not reach the heart of the question. It was superficial. It was waged largely against official corruption in 'protecting' vice; while the theatres, where the young are schooled into, and led into, the very abominations which produce such debauchery, were crowded nightly by the reformers themselves.

"A Sabbath-breaking city will be full of vice. A city which hands out saloon licenses will be morally corrupt. A city which licenses theatres will reap the vices which those institutions foster. And men will make money out of these vices which are established by law. If New York wishes 'reform,' there must be an acknowledgment of sin and departure from God, and of sincere repentance."

THE DURYEA WILL CONTEST.

Formal Probate Admitted and Case Will Be Tried Before a Jury.

The proceedings before Surrogate Seabury at Mineola, L. I., over the contest of the will of Edgar E. Duryea were brought to an abrupt end on Saturday by the decision of the counsel for the contestants to remove the case from the Surrogate and put it before a jury for trial.

J. Campbell Thompson, one of the counsel for the contestants, said yesterday: "In order to accomplish this it is necessary that the will shall be first formally admitted to probate. It is only after that has been done that we become entitled to a jury trial."

NO STRIKES ON THE TUNNEL.

Contractor McDonald, Sub-Contractors, and Unions Will Sign an Agreement.

The Central Federated Union yesterday indorsed a plan by which all strikes pending or in progress in the rapid transit tunnel work will be stopped and contemplated strikes prevented. The plan will cover the work until the tunnel is finished.

Delegate Pallas reported yesterday that Contractor John B. McDonald was in favor of having a conference between all the sub-contractors and building trades delegates to draw up an agreement between them and all the unions interested to cover all the time for the construction of the underground road. The conference will be held toward the end of next week.

The trouble between the Amalgamated Association of Engineers and the International Association of Machinists was reported settled, and proposed strikes called off.

RIDING TEACHERS STRIKE.

Protest Against Wearing Costumes Which Make Them All Look Alike.

Eight riding instructors, who went on strike in Durland's Riding Academy, Fifty-ninth Street and Eighth Avenue, on Saturday night against a new rule, by which they have all to wear the same kind of clothing and hats, were still out yesterday, but it was said that the places of most of them would be filled.

Mr. Durland says that the new togs would make the instructors look like gentlemen riders. He denied that it looks like a livery or a uniform.

"The dress consists of a coat and vest of fine black melton, trousers of checked whipcord, and white stockings," he said. "The hat is a square-crowned hat. They can wear all their rings and diamonds if they like. Any typical English gentleman rider wears the same costume."

The principal objection of the instructors is to the square-crowned hats, which cost $8 each. They say that in the new costume they all look too much alike.

ISABELLA HEIMATH'S REPORT.

Silver Medal Awarded for Exhibit at the Paris Exposition.

In the eleventh annual report of the Isabella Heimath, for the fiscal year ended Sept. 30, 1900, the Board of Managers presents a statement showing excellent progress. The recognition of the institution abroad. In the award of a silver medal for the Home's exhibit at the Paris Exhibition, is a source of gratification to the society.

The total number of inmates remaining in the institution at the beginning of the eleventh fiscal year was 163, leaving only one vacancy in the home department for men and two vacancies in the convalescent ward for women. The new admissions to the different departments were 339, making a total of 502 inmates who were sheltered and provided for during the past twelve months. Attention is called to the fact that the capacity of the Home has been repeatedly exceeded.

The cash account is made up as follows: Balance on hand, Sept. 30, 1899, $7,560.43; from annual dues, $2,785; from donations, $12,883.68; interest from mortgages and investments, $16,028.26; bond and mortgage account, $18,500; deposits of inmates, $1,717.20; account of deceased inmates, $13.83. Disbursements show $49,578.03; cash balance, $9,910.37, and $1,202.44 in the hands of the Executive Committee.

The average cost of maintenance of each inmate was 34 cents per day, as against 35 cents last year.

COTTON.—Practically the entire session on the Cotton Exchange was given to the straightening up of affairs preparatory to quiet holidays. The market started firm in tone, with prices unchanged to 5 points higher, and made further gains immediately after the call on urgent demand from the foreign and room shorts, who greatly feared a bull raid before the close. The initial Liverpool cables were far more favorable than expected, and final advices from that point noted firmness in both departments, with prices considerably above expectations. Manchester, too, sent favorable news, claiming demand for cloths and yarns for export was steadily growing, while home consumption needs were becoming urgent. The Liverpool market will be closed Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

Contract prices ranged as follows:

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

With the new year but a few days away, at which time more than one hundred million of dollars will be released for investment and other purposes, there can no longer be reason, so most New York bankers agree, for any fear of money stringency—that much-paraded bugaboo, which, to the sorrow of would-be market value depressors, has failed to materialize. Though the stock market to-day is closed, the banks will be open to make further preparations, and along the same conservative and non-disturbing lines that have characterized their recent actions, for the payment of this immense amount of money. It may be, indeed, that these preparations will involve the calling of some loans during the week, but most authority is to the effect that this will not be consequential and certainly neither disturbing nor terrifying. Then, this week past, there will be money enough and to spare.

Wall Street has reason for a Merry Christmas. It believes it has as full justification to expect a Happy New Year.

GOOD TIMES IN PITTSBURG.

J. C. Morris of Morris & Brown, Pittsburg, Penn., is optimistic. He says:

"There seems to be no diminution in the activity of the general manufacturing business in our locality. All the mills and factories are running full and hard, and every one speaks very confidently of the future for some time to come. There has never been more extravagant and extensive buying of Christmas gifts than this season. This, of course, is one of the best indications of general prosperity. The working people are making money, and have money to spend, and the stores are doing a very thriving business in all branches, especially those who carry jewelry and other lines of holiday goods. We are told that never before have storekeepers had such extravagant buyers as they have served this season. It does not seem to be so much a question of price as of quality. Everybody seems to want the best.

"In the stock market our local Exchange has taken fourth place in the volume of business they are handling, and the trading is beyond all precedent. We have active trading in a large line of local stocks and securities."

CANADIAN PROSPERITY.

J. C. Haight of Toronto, Canada, discussing business conditions in Canada, says:

"We are going steadily ahead, and, in proportion to our population, I believe we are doing as well as your people. What Canada most needs is money to open up the country and develop its wonderful resources, particularly in the mining districts. The country is marvelously rich in its undeveloped resources, but unfortunately that of itself is not sufficient. However, both English and United States capital is more and more being interested in the way of Canadian development, and I think we have every reason to look forward to greater prosperity than we have ever seen in our country."

GERMAN MONEY AND TRADE.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—Last week the Berlin Boerse had a bad experience, beginning with the heavy declines in coal and iron shares, due to the Coal Syndicate's restriction of the output. During the latter half of the week quotations were at a standstill. Yesterday, however, they showed more firmness. The financial press is now contrasting the situation in Wall Street with that of the German Boerses, where complete pessimism reigns.

The great rise of values in New York has not met with a response here, except in American railway shares, where great activity has prevailed. The German market sold Americans heavily after the rise in November, but during the past week it purchased heavily in London and New York. Under the lead of Northern Pacific all the American railroads were sought after. The papers are beginning to warn the public against buying at the present high prices.

Swiss railways continued in good demand. Navigation shares were more quiet, losing slightly.

The market for Government securities was quiet, 3½ per cent gaining slightly and 3 per cents losing. Bank stock declined 1 or 2 points; iron shares from 2 to 4 points, and coal shares correspondingly receding 10 points.

The embarrassments of the mortgage banks continued to depress the tone of the market. Obligations of all these institutions were offered, but the weakening tendency was somewhat moderated. The financial press admits that the market for this class of security has been ruined for years. Some of the banks tried to check the return of their obligations by reducing the re-purchase price, and others are expected to follow suit. As a consequence of this condition, the public is turning more and more to municipal and provincial securities. The Province of Posen is about to issue a loan of 50,000,000 marks.

During the week the iron market showed an unusual number of bad reports and more declines in price than during any other week since the reaction began. There were several auctions of goods not taken by those who had ordered them that resulted in unexpectedly low prices. Five thousand tons of steel wire, sold at auction in Wittem, brought only 76 marks per ton, which was offered by the company, the latter bidding in the whole lot.

On the Duesseldorf Boerse English pig iron No. 3 fell 5 marks. German pig iron was not quoted. The complaints of idleness at the mills and of a lack of orders are growing more frequent and more vehement. At a meeting of the Raw Materials Syndicate at Duesseldorf yesterday the question of premiums on export iron was discussed.

The Association of South German Cement Works has come to terms with the syndicate.

The money market remains easy. The fact that there has been no advance in the Bank of England rate has had a reassuring effect. Private discount reached 4⅝ Wednesday. It fell ⅛ yesterday. Carry-over money commands 6 per cent.; call money is abundant at from 3½ to 4.

THE MANCHESTER MARKET.

MANCHESTER, Dec. 23.—The Manchester market hardened last week on the advance in cotton. Buyers who had been keeping back orders in hope of better terms preferred to enter them, not waiting for the pending holidays. Where sellers insisted upon highr rates business was impeded. The position of buyers and sellers was very irregular. Some producers are well sold for weeks ahead; others need orders to keep their machinery running. A fair business was transacted.

Makers will begin the new year in a much stronger position than they have occupied for some time. Further contracts have been entered for China in qualities suitable to the districts not immediately affected by the disturbances. During the week there were some transactions for India, where the sellers happened to be easy to deal with; there was a moderate miscellaneous demand for other points.

COATI'S NOTORIETY FEVER

His Plan to Attract Menagerie Crowd Worked Too Well.

Combination .Lion-Tiger-Hippo Act Alarmed the Keepers and They Gave Him a Big Black Pill.

The fuss had him locked in the lion's house in the Central Park Menagerie in a cage six feet in the cube, and over the top of the cage on a tin, vulgar black on white shingle they had inscribed:

BROWN COATIMUNDI.
Inhab. So. Amer.

As a matter of fact, Coati was not brown at all, he was gray, and he'd begin to complain of it as the little fellow's troubles. It was just such slights as this one that were eating the stuffing out of his heart, and he was at best a very little sensitive, beginning at no larger than a good-sized pug, with thick silver-gray fur, a long, bushy tail like a squirrel's, and a cute sage little face like a fox's, and droll as a baby grizzly bear's.

The keepers liked Coati because he was good sunshine and play, and because he could eat a loaf of bread twice as big as himself and look incurably around for more, which was funny. At night, when the crowd of visitors had gone, the keeper would open the door of Coati's cage and put life on the head. Coati would look downward and sideward until the petting drove him up, when he would throw himself on his back and let Jerry, the keeper, crawl in his fur and play with him, pretending to fight until Coati would fight back with his soft, velvety paws, and little his bushy tail with joy and satisfaction.

Then, after the huge loaf had disappeared within the little chap, Jerry would come back and stroke the silver head till the bright brown eyes closed, and Coati was in no mind where there was nothing but jungle and a freedom and other Coatis to play with.

But of late a grief was eating at the vitals of poor Coati. He had become used to Jerry's petting, and wanted more. All around him were the immense barred cages of the huge yellow cats, which people came from far and near to see. No one ever came to see Coati. Who would think of stopping to look into the six-foot cage when there was such a thing as Fatima Murphy, tan-tails spectacular grey hippo-meat which is mentioned in the big tank alongside, with an ugly pink pig of a baby, as a side show attraction? Then, there was the African lion across the way. The insult he let out a roar the whole house-yard ran to his cage in hopes of seeing him devour a keeper.

The same with the black panther. Whenever she got sight of the keeper she hated she would give a spring to the front of the cage with a noise that sent cold chills down people's backs, and crouching, with switching tail and twitching shoulder-blades would watch the keeper with dancing eyes till he disappeared. Then women would shudder and men would look thoughtful, and Coati's heart would break within him with sheer envy. And finally, if anyone did not stop to have a look at Nero, the puma would let out a squeal or the Indian tiger across the way would let out a snort and wow-wow that would go Coati's animoter.

All that was very hard for the little man to bear. It was hard enough to spend one's natural life locked up in a cage in a menagerie, but to spend it without ever, ever creating a sensation was more than nature could stand. He knew what an adorable little creature he really was. Some one had told him so, long ago, before he was put into this hated hon's house, where he felt every moment that he was at a disadvantage. Formerly he was on exhibition in the monkey house. In those days, Roro, the polecat, was locked in the six-foot cage. But Roro had been removed outdoors, "for cause," and by order of the Menagerie Superintendent, and the cage being empty Coati was put into it.

For one whole afternoon Coati sat in a corner and thought over the situation. "I know I look like 2 cents in this crowd," he thought. Then he fell to thinking some more which is sad. He lay all that day with his pointed black little snout on his paws and his eyes scanning thoughtfully, over the crowd wondering how he was going to manage to create a sensation. The keepers pointed him out to one another and said they feared he was going to be sick, but Coati thought and thought till suddenly it came to him like a revelation.

It set Coati to creepy chills up and down his little spine to do it, but courageously the thing would work and before he knew it, he was his old self again, running back and forth in the cage, lively as a cricket and rooting in the sawdust on the floor at every step.

"Bill, the little fellow is acting mighty queer," said Jerry to the under keeper as he put his hand in the cage to stroke the silver head. "Wonder if he's got any pain?" and he shoved a huge slice of bread into the cage. But Coati had other thoughts and his eyes glistened with triumph as he sniffed at the bread and walked away.

"You can see the pain right in his eyes," said Bill. "Looks to me as if he might have a bad ache."

But Coati was not ill. He slept like a rat that night, for he was very happy.

Next day was Sunday. Coati was awaiting only the afternoon crowd to make his début. Neither of the keepers was around when Coati began his campaign, but Bill was the first to notice a big crowd around Coati's cage. "The people were laughing, and some said, "Isn't he cute?" and other pleasant things. When Jerry came up to the cage Coati had no longer his own quick step with him. He looked very forbidding and savage. A deep scowl of displeasure was on his forehead. His head was proudly upraised, a look of disdain was in his eyes, he parted his lips, showing his glenming teeth, and he dragged his feet after him like a stage villain.

"What in the world do you call this thing?" asked some one.

"Call it the fool," I'm the lion," thought Coati. "And what's more, now I'll be the tiger," he said to himself, encouraged by the presence of Jerry. He inserted another vicious wrinkle into his forehead, switched his tail, and strode back and forth with nervous noiseless steps, ever keeping his eyes on the audience. Then he let out a sound which he did not think was in him. "That is the tiger's snarl," he said to himself.

"The poor little devil has a bellyache sure. I knew it yesterday," said Bill. "Let's watch him. I think just now he is crazy."

Meanwhile the tiger snarled and the lion roared and Fatima splashed around in her tank, but all in vain; the crowd staid with Coati and the keepers.

"Now I'll play hippo," said Coati, "and then I'll give them a little taste of puma, followed by another of black panther," and he made a dive for his drinking tank, wherein he rolled and floundered and spluttered.

"Quick, get a bucket of water, Bill, he wants water," Jerry ordered, and the next thing Coati knew he was at the bottom of a cataract thrown from a thing bigger than himself in the hands of Jerry.

"That did him good," said the keeper as Coati climbed hastily out of the tank. The crowd laughed to see the little fellow doused, but Coati was game to the core, and he decided to give another act of his lion's performance.

He scowled and gnashed his teeth and dragged his villainous little feet more than ever, and when Jerry put his hand in the cage to pet him he made a snap at him. That settled Jerry. Coati, the little bundle of sunshine, had gone mad, he thought. Jerry disappeared, and when he came back he had a man with him who wore a blue cloth uniform and a blue cap with gold letters on the front. The people elbowed one another to see what would be the next move. The door of the cage was opened. A homely bag was thrown over Coati's head and he was drawn out of the cage. Then his hend was bared, his jaws forced apart, and in presence of hundreds of eyes a big, black pill was forced down his throat. Some one then rubbed his throat till the hated big lump went down within him. Before he knew it he was again in his cage.

He looked around him like a cat that has just landed on its feet out of a fourth story window, and does not know which way to scoot. There was that thing inside of him, and, for a moment, he wondered what it would do. He sat still to think.

"That's a great pill, it's working already. Never knew it to fail," said the surgeon, and Coati thought so too.

Coati was much disgusted with his lion and tiger performance, but to this day he knows he can be a hippo if he wants to, and can collect a crowd whenever he likes. Therefore, he is very content to be what he is, the keepers' pet.

"Nothing like knowing you are somebody," he often thinks, and as Jerry turns him on his back nights to have his daily friendly fight to crowl his fur, Jerry says:

"Great pill was that, Coati. You gave us a scare that day, but a great pill is that black one."

Referees' Notices.

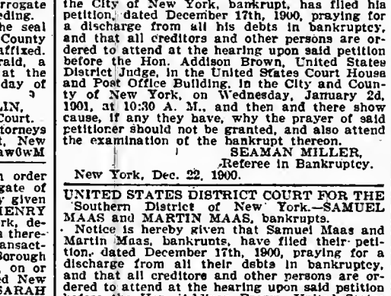
NEW YORK SUPREME COURT, COUNTY OF New York.—MARGARET KNOX, plaintiff, against JOHN M. BLAUVELT and others, defendants.

In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale, duly made and entered in the above-entitled action, and bearing date the 28th day of November, 1900, I, the undersigned, the referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction, at the New York Real Estate Exchange Salesrooms, 111 Broadway, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 24th day of December, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, by William M. Ryan, auctioneer, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold and therein described as follows:

All those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying, and being in the Borough of Bronx, in the City, County, and State of New York, and being bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a corner formed by the intersection of the easterly line of Central Avenue with the southerly side of Morris Street, as both the said avenue and the said street are laid down on a certain map entitled "Mortgage map of land belonging to Isaac T. Willis, being part of the farm belonging to Louis G. Morris, Esq., situate in the Town of West Farms, County of Westchester, New York, dated Mott Haven, March 1st, 1869, R. Ross, Surveyor." Running thence southwesterly along the said easterly line of Central Avenue as laid down on said map one hundred twenty-eight feet and seventy one-hundredths of a foot, (128.70;) thence easterly and parallel with said Morris Street, as laid down on said maps, one hundred sixteen feet and twenty-five one-hundredths of a foot, (116 25-100;) thence running northerly and at right angles to said Morris Street one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet to said southerly line of Morris Street, and thence running westerly and along said southerly line of Morris Street eighty-five feet and ninety-two one-hundredths of a foot (85 92-100) to Central Avenue at the point or place of beginning, be said several distances and dimensions more or less, together with all the right, title, and interest of the said John M. Blauvelt in and to said Central Avenue and Morris Street in front of the herein described property to the centre line thereof. Subject, however, to the covenants against nuisances contained in a certain deed, made by Louis G. Morris to Isaac T. Willis, dated March 1st, 1869, and recorded in the Office of the Register of Westchester County, in Liber No. 706 of Deeds, Page No. 71.

Dated New York, December 3, 1900.
JOHN H. JUDGE, Referee.
ARTHUR KNOX, Attorney for Plaintiff, 171 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan, New York City, N. Y.

The following is a diagram of the property to be sold:



The approximate amount of the lien or charge to satisfy which the above-described property is to be sold is $10,703, with interest thereon from the 23d day of November, 1900, together with costs and allowance, amounting to about $416, together with the expenses of the sale. The approximate amount of the taxes, assessments, and water rates or other liens to be allowed to the purchaser out of the purchase money or paid by the referee is about $2,040. The premises will be sold subject to a first mortgage now thereon, on which there is owing $7,000 of principal with interest at four per cent. from May 24th, 1900, also to two other mortgages on which there is due and owing $17,000 of principal with accrued interest amounting on the day of sale to about $920, and which principal sum of $17,000 bears interest at six per cent.

SUPREME COURT, COUNTY OF NEW YORK. —WILLIAM H. F. CROCHERON, plaintiff, against EDWIN B. GROVE and others, defendants.

In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale, made and entered in the above-entitled action, bearing date the 28th day of November, 1900, I, the undersigned, the referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction, at the New York Real Estate Salesroom, No. 111 Broadway, in the Borough of Manhattan, in the City of New York, on the 24th day of December, 1900, at 12 o'clock noon on that day, by Philip A. Smyth, auctioneer, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold, and therein described as follows: That certain indenture of lease bearing date May 1st, 1855, and recorded in the office of the Register of the City and County of New York, in Liber 725 of Conveyances, Page 194, December 13th, 1856, made and executed by the Trustees of the Sailors' Snug Harbour in the City of New TENANTS IN A FIRE PANIC.

Excitement on Avenue A — Policemen Rescue a Sick Woman.

A fire at 250 Avenue A, on the corner of East Sixteenth Street, at 1:30 o'clock yesterday morning, sent nearly 100 shivering tenants into the cold street. It was discovered by Policeman Charles G. Fichtel in Mettleman's tea store.

The building is a five-story brick tenement with four families to each floor. Fichtel beat upon the panels of the door, but failed to wake any one, and so he put his shoulder to the door and threw it from its hinges. He awakened the tenants, who ran into the streets in all stages of undress. Fichtel says he found the gas turned off and no lights in the hallways. This is a violation of the law.

Fichtel and a fellow-policeman, Fred Webber, rescued Eliza Hanson, sixty years old and ill with pleurisy, who was on the top floor. The halls were filled with smoke when the policemen went through the building and found the woman in bed unconscious. They carried her to the roof. When they appeared there was a wild burst of cheering which lasted for several minutes. The woman was not much injured. The damage by fire was $1,000.

MESSENGER LOST HER MONEY.

It Was Returned, However, and Mrs. Ranger Refused to Prosecute.

A woman appeared in the West Side Court yesterday as complainant against Joseph F. Dollard, a messenger boy, employed by the Postal Telegraph Company, at Eighth Avenue and Fifty-eighth Street. She gave her name as Mrs. Jessie M. Ranger, and said she lived at 221 West Fifty-seventh Street.

Through her lawyer, Alexander Tison, she said that on Saturday morning she called Dollard on the call box in her apartments, and, giving him $300, told him to deposit it for her in the Plaza Bank. Half an hour later the boy returned and told her that he had lost the money in a saloon, where he had gone to get a glass of ginger ale. She told him while she sent her maid for Detective Neddersmith of the bicycle squad.

When pressed by Magistrate Mayo to make a charge against the boy she refused to do so. She said that the money had been returned to her. The messenger boy was accordingly discharged. She gave as an excuse for not prosecuting Dollard that she was going to Florida and would not be here again for several months.

BOYS CHARGED WITH THEFT.

Five Harlem Youths Accused of Stealing Everything in Their Reach.

Harry Goldberg, eleven years old, of 520 East Thirteenth Street; Charles Echtermayer, eleven years old, of 515 East Thirteenth Street; Joseph Schultz, eleven years old, of 515 East Thirteenth Street; John Cross, eleven years old, of 646 East Thirteenth Street, and Abraham Goldberg, ten years old, of 520 East Thirteenth Street, were arraigned before Magistrate Hogan, in the Yorkville Police Court, yesterday morning charged with theft, highway robbery, and similar crimes. Jacob W. Kaufhold, a cigar manufacturer, of 505 East Thirteenth Street, had the boys arrested for stealing several boxes of cigars from him. He told Magistrate Hogan that the boys held up other boys and stole whatever they could get. They disposed of their booty for a "song." Magistrate Hogan committed the boys to the Gerry society until Tuesday.

BENZINE EXPLOSION IN A SHOP.

Man Burned, Building Damaged, and Theatrical Costume Destroyed.

An explosion of benzine yesterday morning in a ladies' tailoring establishment at 162 West Twenty-third Street, set fire to the building. Frank Hayden, one of the partners in the concern, was badly burned about the arms and face. Hayden was sponging a dress when the benzine, which stood in a can at his elbow, exploded. A passer-by turned in an alarm. The damage to the building was $500.

The explosion knocked down the plastering all through the house and broke several windows in the offices next door. The costume, which Hayden said was valued at $300, and was to have been used in the production of a new play, to-morrow night, was torn to fragments.

NEW THEOLOGY DOES NOT REPRESS MIRTH

Bishop Potter's Advice to the Young Men's Christian Association

Simplicity in Living an Important Feature for a Young Man—"Boss" Tweed's Diamond Suspender Button.

The audience that gathered in the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association yesterday afternoon to hear a sermon by Bishop Potter was a large one. In introducing the Bishop, Seth Low quoted from a sermon of Dr. Rainsford that he had heard in the morning. When Bishop Potter arose to speak he said:

"Unfortunately I did not hear Dr. Rainsford to-day, so I shall have to preach my own sermon."

Referring to the early days of the Young Men's Christian Association, the Bishop told how there had been many at a convention held some years ago who were opposed to secular amusements in the houses of the association. These, said the Bishop, would be ruthless he rejoiced that their advice had not been followed could they see now the good results of such innovations as gymnasia and gymnasia. The theology of old times, he continued, was inclined to repress the mirth and physical enjoyment natural to human beings, but a later and larger theology had supplanted the old doctrines, recognizing the relation of work to play and striving to bind them together properly.

The Young Men's Christian Association, the Bishop said, has also done much in helping to abolish "one of the most pagan elements in our life," the spirit of caste, a thing that it is to be hoped will some day be so obliterated that all men may sit down at the same table together—" the table of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Of those things most important to a young man in this city, the Bishop declared, are "self-possession, simplicity, and a right standard of values."

As an illustrative of the kind of expensive display that should be avoided was told by the Bishop, he said that once when a party of men was in the office of the late "Boss" Tweed some one espied on the floor a piece of diamond jewelry that looked like a coat button. Each man was asked if it was his property. At first Mr. Tweed said that is was not his, but he, as on a sudden thought, picked up his coat, looked at the upper edge of his trousers, and exclaimed: "Why, it's one of my suspender buttons." This is the kind of lavish personal expenditure, the Bishop said, that young men of these days should avoid. In telling the story he spoke of Tweed as "a very fine type of an article that we have, I am sorry to say, produced more at times than." He added that at the time the limit in neckwear of the "Boss" was a white shirt, "the only white thing about him."

Among men ought to cultivate a true idea of the standard of values, the Bishop said, to keep from being dazzled by the things that are false. He cited as an example of the recklessness of some men the career of the man who dies and leaves behind him an enormous fortune, no part of which has ever been expended in the betterment of others.

Next Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock the West Side Branch is to hold its meeting in Carnegie Hall, and the two speakers will be Gov. Roosevelt and Robert E. Speer, William E. Dodge acting as Chairman. The address of the Governor, which is being printed, will be read after that day in different Young Men's Christian Association houses all over the country. Tickets of admission, to be had by members at the West Side Branch, will be required for this meeting.

LIBERALITY OF THE CHURCH.

Dancing, Card Playing, and Theatres Not Sinful in Themselves, Says Dr. MacArthur.

The Rev. Robert S. MacArthur discussed at the services in Calvary Baptist Church last night "The Voice of the Church in Relation to Amusement." He said: "Nothing is more certain than that the Church as a whole has grown more liberal in her attitude in these recent days. We must not confound things that are evil with things which are evil only by excess or by improper associations. Some churches have denounced dances of all kinds, and in all times and places. They have thus set up false standards, and have made things evil in themselves when they were evil only because of associations and other conditions. A similar remark might apply to card playing. Whatever injures a man in his inner feeling and in his nobler purpose ought to be abandoned. Whatever interferes with him in his duty to his family, to his business, and to his church ought to be rejected, though it were dear to him as a right hand or an eye.

"What shall be said about the theatre? Shall the Church indiscriminately denounce all theatres, actors, and attendants upon theatres? Shall she be simply denunciatory hostile, uncompromising, and implacable in her opposition. This attitude has often been assumed by various branches of the Church. It is the attitude to-day declared in some church covenants and books of discipline. Such a course alienates a great body of men and women engaged in dramatic work of various kinds. It opens a broad gulf between them and the Church. It makes the Church practically indifferent to this great element in our community. It virtually ostracizes great groups of men and women because of the sins of some of those men and women. Such a course also is unjust, for no one has a right to put the Church in such an attitude. There is no one interest of humanity to which the Church can afford to be indifferent. The present attitude of the Church is ineffective, for men and women do go to the theatres even though they belong to churches with prohibitive rules. The true attitude of the Church toward the theatre and toward all men is transformative. She must not indiscriminately denounce all actors, all theatres, and all dramatists. She must treat them as she does books, distinguishing the good from the bad, commending the one and condemning the other."

W. L. WARD'S NEW WATCH.

How the Timepiece Was Presented to the Republican Leader.

Ex-Congressman W. L. Ward, the Republican leader in Westchester County, was presented with a six-hundred-and-fifty-dollar watch at a dinner at Sherry's on Saturday night.

The story is that when A. W. Cooley was nominated for the Assembly in a Democratic district a year ago Mr. Ward visited the then Chairman, B. B. Odell, Jr., and after telling him that Cooley had a chance to win, asked for some of the sinews of war to aid him in his canvass. Mr. Odell adjusted his eyeglasses and scanned the figures from the district in late years, and then, shaking his head, said:

"Bill, I don't see how I can do any better for you than I did last year. We are pretty short of money, to tell the truth."

Mr. Ward was toying with a cheap-looking silver watch at the time and Mr. Odell added:

"But I tell you what I will do. If you elect Cooley I will give you a two-hundred-and-fifty-dollar watch."

Mr. Cooley was elected, but Mr. Ward declined to receive the watch that Mr. Odell wanted to purchase. Mr. Cooley was re-elected last month, and the officials in Westchester who had heard the story determined to give him a timepiece. So the dinner was arranged at which it was presented.

BONDS STOLEN, THEY SAY.

Detectives Arrest a Young Man Who Refuses Any Information.

In the Centre Street Court yesterday John Gleason, Jr., twenty years old, of 11 James Street, who was arrested at his home on Saturday night by Detective Sergeants Faye and Clark, was arraigned on suspicion and remanded until to-day.

The detectives said that on Dec. 7, Gleason sold to Clark & Son, bankers and brokers, on Park Row, two one-hundred-dollar 3 per cent. United States coupon bonds, numbered respectively 13,267 and 13,268, for $218. The November coupons were not detached. These bonds, the detectives said, were found to be part of a safe robbery that took place in Harrisburg, Penn., on Dec. 5. The prisoner refused to make any statement.

FIREMEN HURT BY A FALL.

Step Into Elevator Shaft While Groping About a Burning Factory in Brooklyn.

The five-story brick factory building at 76 and 78 Ainslie Street, Williamsburg, was burned at an early hour yesterday morning, and several firemen were hurt, three by falling down the elevator shaft, a distance of fifteen feet.

The first three floors were occupied by Shade & Co., manufacturers of locks and as a nickel and silver plating works, while the two upper floors were occupied by Peter Wagner as a tailor's shop. Wagner employed about forty men and women.

The fire, which started on the top floor, was first noticed by a passer-by, who turned in an alarm. When the firemen reached the scene the flames had enveloped the entire upper floor and were shooting from the windows both front and rear. The building is situated in a thickly settled tenement district, and a second and third alarm were turned in. Half a dozen ladders were raised, and from these tons of water were poured on the building. So dense, however, was the smoke, which seemed to shoot downward from the windows, that the firemen had to work in relays upon the ladders. Despite their efforts the flames spread, and in half an hour the building, from the second floor up, was blazing fiercely.

After two hours of hard work the fire was under control, and half a dozen men attached to Salvage Corps No. 2 went into the building with tarpaulins. While groping about, S. J. Pullin of 200 Walworth Street and two of his comrades fell down an elevator shaft. Pullin was badly bruised, and had his injuries dressed by Ambulance Surgeon Shields of the Eastern District Hospital, after which he was taken to his home. Several other firemen were slightly burned, but declined medical treatment.

Shade & Co. placed their loss at $10,000, and Wagner at $5,000. The origin of the fire is unknown, and Fire Marshal Brymer was notified and will make an investigation.

INCENDIARIES IN THE BRONX.

Gang of Boys Believed to Have Started Several Fires at West Farms.

The residents of West Farms, in the Borough of the Bronx, are greatly alarmed over a series of fires that are believed to be of incendiary origin, and the work of a gang of boys whose only object is to cause excitement and see the firemen work. So far, only barns have been fired, but the people are in dread that the torch may be applied to their dwellings, and argue that if the boys who are suspected are daring enough to fire a valuable barn, they may some night set fire to a private residence, and not only destroy property, but endanger life. Consequently, several residents have gone to the police and demanded better protection.

The most recent fire laid to the gang of boys, one of whom is the son of a prominent business man in West Farms, occurred Friday night, when a frame building at One Hundred and Seventy-seventh Street and Boston Avenue, occupied by John Ross, a wheelwright, was almost completely destroyed. The same building was discovered to be afire a couple of weeks ago by some persons who saw a number of boys about the structure at the time. Three different attempts were made to burn the barn of Bernard Beirne, which is only 100 feet away from Ross's place, and the barn of Henry V. Welch, at the corner of Mechanic Street and Westchester Avenue, went up in smoke some days ago.

The Fire Marshal is investigating the matter, and the police have been asked to look for the incendiaries.

Boy Accused of Causing Girl's Death.

Maggie Enloria, five years old, of 524 Henderson Street, Jersey City, who was burned by her dress taking fire at a bonfire on Saturday night, died at St. Francis Hospital yesterday. Joseph Bunsby, nine years old, of 520 Henderson Street, who was charged by the girl's companions with pushing her into the fire, was placed under arrest on a charge of manslaughter. He claims that the affair was an accident. He will be arraigned before Police Justice Hoos to-day.

FISHER'S TALE OF BURGLARS.

He Keeps the Police Guessing, Then Disgusts Them.

John Fisher, who says he is thirty-four years of age and lives at 165 West End Avenue, but who, the police say, has no home and does chores in saloons, reported to Policeman Grady of the West Sixty-eighth Street squad that he had been assaulted by burglars early yesterday morning.

Fisher said he was sleeping in the back room of a saloon at 201 West Sixty-eighth Street, upon a cot which the proprietor had allowed him to occupy, when two men forced open the street door and crept into the room. When he called out to ask them what they were doing they hit him on the head with a jimmy. Fisher showed a scalp wound which Grady thought was severe enough to warrant his going to Roosevelt Hospital, where he had his head dressed.

Detective Day later made an examination of the room and listened to Fisher's story. The door, of which the lock was broken, had been anchored with a cask of whisky weighing about 650 pounds. Fisher alleged that the burglars had opened the door, pushing back the cask. The detective thought this remarkable.

Fisher's description of the burglars was not clear. He said at first that they were both short men, and he told of two men whom, he thought, were intruders. The two men were arrested. Fisher then said he was sure they were not the men. He then said that the men were tall. Then he changed his description, and said that one was short and one was tall. Finally he admitted that he had been drinking and could not tell what the men looked like. After a close cross-examination he said he was not sure that there had been any burglars there at all. The police had worked all day on the case, and they were very much disgusted when they got through with Fisher.

STAGE CHILDREN'S FESTIVAL.

Over 400 Youngsters Receive Presents and Enjoy Themselves.

The children of the stage had a Christmas festival at Tony Pastor's Theatre last evening. Over 400 little performers and children of members of the profession, with many of their elders, enjoyed a vaudeville performance given under the direction of Mrs. E. M. Fernandez by thirty-two youngsters, who won enthusiastic applause by their songs, dances, imitations, and specialties, the programme ending with a minuet.

There were calls for Aunt Louisa, and Mrs. Eldridge arose in her box and made a brief speech, saying that it was the first time in twelve years she had seen the performance, always having been too busy behind the scenes. She was sorry she had been obliged to resign the Presidency of the Entertainment Committee, but she felt that she was growing older every year and that the work ought to be in younger hands.

After the performance the children had refreshments in the banquet hall. Miss Cora Tanner and a committee of women serving them. Then they were marched up into Tammany Hall, where the presents were distributed, after which there was dancing.

In the afternoon Mrs. Pastor and a committee of women distributed clothing to eighty children of stage people.

Parents Say Son Threatened Them.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Buckley of 62 East One Hundred and Twelfth Street appeared in Harlem Court yesterday morning and told Magistrate Brann that their son, Charles, sixteen years old, was incorrigible. They said that they were afraid of their lives and that he had often threatened to kill them. The boy, who was a prisoner in court, denied that he had ever threatened them. He said that his father beat his mother and that he took her part. Magistrate Brann gave the boy a severe lecture and then committed him to the House of Refuge.

Christmas Banquet for Employes.

Sixteen hundred employes of O'Neill's department store, Sixth Avenue and Twenty-first Street, will be the guests of the head of the firm to-night at the annual Christmas banquet. In addition to providing three meals a day for his employes during the Christmas season, Mr. O'Neill begins the holiday season for his workers each year with a dinner after the customers have gone. The bill of fare will include all of the usual Christmas dainties.

HOW HE SAVED TIGER.

Cat a Nuisance, but Was in Peril, So a Hole Was Cut in the Wall of the House.

This is the story of a cat. This cat, Tiger by name, happened, as ill-luck would have it, to stray down a chimney from the roof of his home on night before last, and when somebody at the lower end of the flue started to build a fire in the stove on the following morning there issued from the chimney such howls that the maker of the fire, a cook of portly mold, fled in terror from the room. But there came later a man who investigated the cause of the unearthly noises; so Tiger was released and is to-day alive and happy.

The way it all came about was like this: Albert Dinfield, owner of the great cat, has not been popular with the other tenants in the apartment house at 574 West One Hundred and Thirty-first Street, because those others do not fancy the menagerie that he keeps in his rooms. Besides the cat, there are in his collection a couple of fox terriers, and the fights that have been going on daily between these two and Tiger have resulted in echoes which penetrated through every floor from the top of the house to the basement.

On Saturday night, just after one of these commotions, Dinfield, planning both to give Tiger a little fresh air after his defeat at the paws of the terriers and to hide his own head from the wrath of his neighbors for the next hour or two, took the cat up to the roof. Together they sat there for a while. Then the owner remembered that he had left something down stairs. He went after it, leaving Tiger looking contentedly over the parapet. When he returned nothing was to be seen of the cat, and, after searching for more than an hour, he decided that some of the hostile neighbors must have stolen his pet. Finally, after planning to hide his time and either discover his lost favorite or have vengeance on the kidnappers, he went to bed.

Early yesterday morning the cook on the top floor started to light her fire, with the result already told. Her employer, hearing her yells and seeing her in flight, ran into the kitchen and was greeted by the heart-rending shrieks of the spirit in the chimney. As soon as he perceived whence the noise came, he put out the little fire that the cook had built and then rushed to the roof. Down the dark chimney there was just enough of a beam of light for him to descry the form of Tiger at the bottom. He lowered a rope and called "Kitty! Kitty!" but it was no use, for every time the big cat tried to climb up he fell back again, so heavy was he that he could not support his own weight. At last the rescuer was obliged to cut a hole in his wall, through which Tiger jumped out. His beautiful fur, which in its normal condition had been covered with many streaks of white and yellow, was singed so that he looked almost black.

When the rescuer saw what cat he had found he was on the point of walling it up in the chimney again, but good heart overcame malice, and Dinfield was informed of the pet's whereabouts.

IN DEFENSE OF A. W. MILBURY.

Spencer Trask Tells How India Famine Fund Paper Came to be Used.

Spencer Trask, who was a member of the Committee of One Hundred on India Famine Relief, said yesterday that he had no reason to doubt the honesty of Arthur W. Milbury, whose appeals for money for educational work were made without authorization on paper bearing the letterhead of the committee, and that Milbury had not disappeared.

"Mr. Milbury," he said, "was Assistant Secretary of the committee, and on its dissolution accepted a position with the International General Electric Company and went to its Philadelphia office, where he has been ever since. As to the use of the committee's stationery, this was a mistake on his part, but an innocent one. As I understand it, he wrote only to a few persons who knew him and his past associations, and a quantity of unused letterheads being on hand he used these for economy's sake."

BOY SHOT DURING QUARREL.

Italian's Bad Marksmanship Results in Injury to Innocent Spectator.

Luigi Berrinio, twenty-one years old, a butcher, was arrested yesterday afternoon and locked up in the East Fifth Street Police Station, for shooting Memi Colhioro, twelve years old, of 420 East Eleventh Street. Memi was shot through the groin. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where it was said there was hope for his recovery.

The shooting was the result of a quarrel between Berrinio and Salvini Schillizzi, the janitor of the house in which he lives. Berrinio became aggressive because the janitor told him not to interfere with some store sheds in the rear of the house. In the altercation that ensued he fired a shot at Schillizzi from a revolver. The bullet went wide of its mark and struck young Colhioro, who was standing near by looking on. The prisoner was held for examination, pending the result of the boy's injuries.

FILLS FRIEND WITH BIRD SHOT.

Astoria Man Mistakes His Neighbor for a Pigeon Thief.

Herman Wolf, thirty-six years old, a piano maker, living at 223 Flushing Avenue, Astoria, was shot in the neck and head on Saturday evening by his friend and neighbor, Felix Theulica of 225 Flushing Avenue.

Late in the evening Wolf went into the vacant field, back of the houses in which he and Theulica live, to bury some refuse. Theulica has a lot of fancy pigeons in a croft back of his house, which, for some time past boys or men have been stealing. He was on watch for the intruder and had a gun loaded with fine bird shot. He saw Wolf near the croft and fired at him.

The small shot lodged in the man's head and neck. Dr. Meyer of 229 Steinway Avenue attended the injured man. Theulica was arrested and was held under $2,000 bail, as Dr. Meyer said there was very little chance of the injuries resulting seriously.

ARONSON DIED FROM PNEUMONIA.

His Accident in the Bicycle Race Did Not Cause His Fatal Illness.

An autopsy on the body of Oscar Aronson, the six-day bicyclist, proved that he had died from pneumonia instead of injuries from the fall in the Madison Square Garden race. He contracted pneumonia during the race.

Aronson, Turville, and nearly all the racers in the contest had a bad spill on Wednesday. Aronson was unconscious for three hours, and was taken to the New York Hospital, where it was thought his spine had been broken. He had had bruises, though they had nothing to do with his death. The body was removed to Aronson's home, at 730 Sixth Avenue, Brooklyn, and the funeral will probably take place to-day.

Fell to His Death from Housetop.

A policeman on post on West Thirty-first Street was notified yesterday morning that a man had been found dead in the yard at the rear of 209 West Thirty-first Street. He thought the body had fallen from one of the windows of the house. No one in the building knew the dead man. The body was taken to the West Forty-seventh Street station house. Later the dead man was identified as Martin Reardon, thirty-five years old, a laborer, of 752 Sixth Avenue. Reardon formerly lived in the Thirty-first Street house. It is thought that he went there late Saturday night, forgetting that he had moved away, and, going to the roof by mistake, missed his footing and fell off. His skull was crushed and he was cut and bruised.

Saved by His Sweetheart.

Alexander Shissel, a musician who lives at 203 East One Hundredth Street, had his life saved by his sweetheart yesterday afternoon. He went to sleep in his room at about 3 o'clock, leaving a gas stove going at full blast beside his bed. Half an hour later Miss Anna Braun of Hoboken called and detected the odor of the gas. She could not arouse Shissel, and shouted for help. A policeman forced his way into the room where the musician was found lying unconscious from gas. Shissel was revived by a physician.

Lieut. Hobson's Condition.

The condition of Lieut. Hobson at the Presbyterian Hospital last night was better than it was Saturday, and showed continued improvement.

FRENCH LABOR TROUBLES

The Number of Strikes Is Increasing Every Year.

Queer Results of Cohesive Power of Labor Unions—Capital Frightened by Millerand's Appeal.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Dec. 12.—Just as the year 1900 is closing the French labor bureau authorities are publishing the advance sheets of the report on the strikes and other labor troubles of 1899. There were 740 strikes, involving 176,826 people, among whom were 23,417 women and 10,042 children employed in 4,290 establishments. The days of labor lost were 3,550,734, of which 1,038,340 were lost by 55,576 non-strikers who were forced into idleness by the labor unions. Never were there so many strikes in any former year in French history.

The strikes affected nearly all pursuits, but were most numerous among the employes of corporations, 165 of these concerns, employing 82,082 hands, having been drawn into the storm centre during the year. This is a notable increase over former years. Among industries the textile and iron works furnish the largest number. Organized labor conducted 441 strikes. Over half the strikers were employed by the day.

An analysis of the result of these strikes is interesting. Of the 740, 180 were successful, 282 ended in compromises, and 278 completely failed. Of the people on strike 12 per cent. won their case, 70 per cent. compromised, and 17 per cent. went to the wall. The proportion of those who lost is much below that of former years. The majority of the strikes which failed were based upon demands for the removal of foremen or protestations against the discharge of fellow-workmen. The motives of the others were: 412 for a raise in wages, 90 of which succeeded; 45 against a reduction, of which 24 failed.

Labor troubles are on the increase in France, and the year 1900 will score much higher in strike history than its predecessor. Although the Government possesses a very marked admixture of Socialism, it has resorted to some strong measures to quell labor troubles. During the bakers' strike at Marseilles, national authority interfered by sending to that city all the soldiers in the army who had ever worked in bakeries. When the longshoremen were on strike at Havre their places were taken by employes of the navy. The bluejackets were remonstrated with and threatened, but

"Theirs not to make reply
"Theirs not reason why
"Theirs but to do or die."

and so, while the labor union hesitated to attack the navy the strike quietly petered out.

THE CHALONS-SUR-SAONE RIOT.

While the great strike at Chalons-sur-Saone, in the iron works, was in progress, the police were confronted by over 1,000 violent men in a most threatening mood, who threw stones and clubs and fired pistols and guns at them, wounding several dangerously. After the gendarmes had fired a few rounds into the air and the earth they fired at the mob and wounded four men. This was made the subject of an interpellation in the Chamber of Deputies, and Prime Minister Waldeck-Rousseau defended the gendarmes. He said that the sacred right to work was the right to live; that it was as much the duty of the Government to protect one man in his right to work as it was to protect one thousand men in their right to strike and not work. Though his Cabinet is called "the Socialist Ministry," he was sustained by a large majority.

Street railway strikes have occurred in almost every city in France, but one in Lyons is perhaps without parallel. When the tramways of that city adopted the electric system and gave transfers to all parts of the city the managers soon found that they were the victims of an organized filching conspiracy on the part of conductors. These enterprising men passed transfers to each other; they were turned into the office as fares and the booty was divided. To stop this robbery the company employed fifty "controllers," to stand at street car crossings and punch an octagonal hole into each paper transfer; none were good unless so punched. The people rebelled against standing in the rain and waiting to have their transfers perforated, but they finally submitted.

Then the company discovered that conductors had devised a cunning method to imitate the octagonal incision in the transfers and that new swindles were going on. The punches were replaced by stamps which impressed Chinese characters upon the transfers, every controller having a different letter of the alphabet. No one short of an innocent Heathen Chinee could circumvent this device.

Of course, the conductors looked upon the controllers who watched them with that affection which another class have for a sleepless detective. The two classes of employes snarled and growled at each other all the time. But that condition was not to last long. The conductors have their labor union, and by a shrewd stroke of diplomacy they inveigled all the controllers into joining it, the two conflicting interests promising to abide by each other in cloud and sunshine.

The controllers ceased to be useful to the company the moment they yoked themselves to the conductors. They were discharged. Two meetings of the union were held, and a strike was ordered. All the conductors quit work because their despots were dismissed. They exacted the immediate return of the men who had been hired to watch them, to dog their every action. Every car in that city or over half a million inhabitants was stopped for three days, when the company weakened and gave all the cast-off controllers some job. Three days before the strike the conductors wished every controller to the bottom of the Rhône. The spirit in which the former rallied to the support of the latter in their trouble is a good illustration of the cohesive power that holds labor unions together in France.

ITALIAN AGITATORS IN FRANCE.

While international law would prevent statemen from crossing into the territory of a friendly nation and exciting revolt against the Government, there seems to be no frontier to labor agitators. During the last three months two members of the Italian Parliament, Signors Morgari and Rondoni, have been preaching Anarchy and aiding and abetting lawlessness in Marseilles, Lyons, St. Etienne, and Calais. In their own country they were muzzled. Men were shot down for uttering such sentiments in Milan less than a year ago. What makes their toleration in France very paradoxical is that in Lyons, when an Italian assassinated President Carnot a few years ago, the people hunted down every Italian in the city, mobbed and destroyed Italians' homes and places of business, surrounded in an angry mob the Italian Consulate, and compelled the lowering of his flag. Now two Italians go to Lyons and lead mobs against Frenchmen, advocating the complete and violent overthrow of all laws which protect property, and permit Presidents to rule in peace. Emerson called this "pairing off in insane parties."

The strike of the lace workers at Calais has also brought into friendly proximity men who at other times are mutually antagonistic. Their leader, an ex-Mayor of Calais, is charged with using workingmen to punish his political enemies. He has repeatedly told the poor fellows that if they would only obey him he would lead them to twelve hours' pay for eight hours' work. They did as he told them, and have been idle two months. Last week the employers formally closed their works, never to open them until the employes surrender. Nearly 1,500 persons are idle, and the town is full of armed troops. The Calais lacemakers are the best-paid workingmen in France. They received all the way from 1,200f. to 10,000f. a year.

The English lacemakers of Nottingham are remarkably sympathetic. In spite of all the insults Frenchmen have heaped upon the Queen and upon Englishmen generally during the Boer war, the Nottingham union voted last week to send its French brothers and sisters 1,250f. a week during the lockout. If, while the strike lasts, the trade of Calais should be shifted to England, that would, of course, only be a just reward to the Nottingham lacemakers' disinterested generosity.

The strikes of October, 1900, threw out of work 26,469 hands. The troubles seem to be occurring systematically and with a total progression. The opponents of the republic attribute them to the triumph of Socialism in the Government, and predict that they will break out in every branch of industry within the next six months. That would be a very satisfactory state of affairs for Prince Victor Napoleon, now serving as Colonel in the Russian Army, and the most eligible of the pretenders to the French crown.

Minister of Commerce Millerand, the Socialist member of the Ministry, seeing that the multitude of idlers caused by strikes is rapidly increasing, has addressed circulars to all the Prefects, asking them to favor the opening of national mills and workshops. The inevitable consequence of this appeal is to frighten capital from all industrial investments.

CRUSHED BETWEEN TWO CARS.

Goldberg Was on His Way to Earn Christmas Money at a Wedding.

On the way to earn a little extra Christmas money by making himself useful at the wedding of his employer's daughter, Louis Goldberg, forty years old, of 342 Osborne Street, Brooklyn, met death yesterday morning at the Brooklyn entrance to the bridge.

Goldberg was employed in a tailor's shop in Suffolk Street, Manhattan. His employer's daughter was to be married yesterday, and Goldberg had been told he could find some work to do at the celebration. Anxious to earn the extra money he started early yesterday morning from his home for Manhattan. When he reached the bridge he found that the south roadway was being repaired, and shuttle cars were being operated on the north roadway. One of these cars, No. 2,138 of the Fulton Street line, had come in on the switch at Washington Street.

There was a crowd waiting to board the car, and all made a rush for it, including Goldberg. He was the first to reach the step of the front platform, and was trying to open the closed gate when some one, in climbing over the dashboard, released the brake. The car started down the grade and collided with a De Kalb Avenue car, which was turning into Washington Street from Sands Street. Goldberg, failing to see that a collision was imminent, clung to his position and was crushed between the two cars. He died before an ambulance surgeon summoned from the Brooklyn Hospital could reach him.

Walter Lombard, forty-two years old, of 27 Alabama Avenue, motorman of the Fulton Street car, was placed under arrest.

WHOLESALE GROCERS SWINDLED.

Bogus Orders Presented for Merchandise—One Man Confesses in Court.

The wholesale merchants dealing in groceries and other merchandise on Franklin Street and on West Broadway have been victimized for some time by a gang of swindlers, to whom goods were given on bogus orders.

The police of the Leonard Street Station were notified and Detectives Farrell and Higgins were detailed on the case. On Saturday evening Edward B. Coughlin, a delivery clerk in the employ of Francis H. Leggett & Co., in Franklin Street, received an order for $29 worth of extract of beef. The man who presented the order was detained while Coughlin notified the police by telephone.

The man was waiting in the office of the company to have his order filled when the detectives placed him under arrest. He said he was Charles H. Allen, a shoemaker, thirty-five years old, of 170 Bleecker Street. Other victims, the detectives said, are E. C. Hazzard & Co., grocers, of 177 Hudson Street, William Simpson, grocer, of 757 Sixth Avenue, and George C. Schlusing of 462 Fourth Avenue. In Centre Street Court yesterday morning Allen pleaded guilty, and was committed to the Tombs by Magistrate Deuel, in default of $1,000 bail for trial.

HIS TALK AROUSES SUSPICION.

Police Will Be Asked to Investigate the Death of a Waiter.

Martin Schwartz, thirty-one years old, of 114 Fourth Avenue, a waiter in a Sixth Avenue restaurant, died at his home yesterday from a fractured skull. He talked in a delirium of having been kicked and beaten. It was said at his home last night that the police will be asked to investigate.

Schwartz got home at 7:30 o'clock Saturday night and complained of feeling ill. He complained of pains in the head, and at 6 o'clock in the morning was unconscious. Dr. D. A. Doble of 408 West Twenty-fourth Street was called in, but Schwartz died in a short while. Dr. Doble reported the case to the Coroner. He found that Schwartz had a depressed fracture of the skull, though no wound was visible.

John Arnold, the landlord of the house, and an aunt of Schwartz were the only persons at the house last night. They said an investigation would be made.

Two New Smallpox Cases.

Two new smallpox cases were discovered yesterday, one in Long Island City. The patients are Isabella Freedus of 209 East Ninety-eighth Street and Edward G. Fox of 121 and 123 Fifth Street, Long Island City. They were removed to North Brother Island. Fox, according to the health officials' record, is a telegraph operator on the Manhattan elevated railroad. Occupants of the house say he is a ticket chopper. He has been at home for many days, as he was not feeling well.

Bark Minden Here for Repairs.

The Norwegian bark Minden, Capt. Tegeaen, which sailed from Mobile on the 27th of last month for Liverpool, put into this port for repairs yesterday. On the 15th inst. she encountered a storm off Hatteras, during which she sprung a leak, besides sustaining various other lesser injuries. The Minden is a vessel of 1,287 tons, and is owned by C. B. Hofgaard of Tonsberg, Sweden. She was built at the North Yards in Hantsport, N. S., in 1879.

AMERICAN RAILROAD SHARES

Frenzied Dealings Unprecedented in London—"In and Out Business" Which Can Hardly Lead to Shipments of Stock from New York—The Money Market Calm—Gold Still Slipping Away.

Cable Correspondence.

Copyright, 1900, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—All testimony concurs in representing the speculation on our Stock Exchange in your railroad shares as having reached unprecedented proportions last week. Every day and all day long the market was thronged with an excited crowd, one hour bidding madly for shares, and in the next selling them with equal fury.

I have done my best to find out what is behind all this excitement, and am still unable to report that it originates with the solid portion of the British public. Much of the gambling is inside the market itself, among the hungry members who have been deprived of their "Kafir Circus" for more than a twelvemonth, and it is from the old habitués of this same circus that most of the outside buying comes. A broker's house, for example, intimately connected with Witwatersrand finance, has been doing a roaring trade all the week in what one of the partners described as "in and out business"; people buy one day and take a dollar or two profit the next, come back again on the third day and repeat the operation.

Elsewhere, however, all is as calm and listless as before, and I find that a majority of the market people I see are still unanimous in saying that they are hardly touching this gamble except to realize for their clients who wish to get back their money. Therefore I think that the tremendous energy exhibited last week will not lead to the shipment of shares from New York to London, but, on the contrary, oblige your market to continue the importation of and payment for shares sold here to be delivered.

Side by side with the frenzied dealing

ON THE LONDON EXCHANGE.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—On the whole the Stock Exchange last week displayed considerable firmness, and a fair amount of business was done considering the period of the year. Consols and some other gilt-edged securities showed fractional declines.

Americans were very active, and business in this department was on a large scale, with important gains all along the line. Northern Pacific shares were much bought, advancing on the week from 7 to 10 points. Eries also were largely dealt in, gaining from 7 to 8 points; owing to realizations, prices receded somewhat yesterday after the opening, but they recovered, with plenty of buying toward the close.

Among the other increases were Chesapeake and Ohio, which rose 2 points; Southern Pacific, 2; Southern, 1⅛; Norfolk preferred, 1; most others from ¼ to ⅝. On the other hand, Illinois Central fell 2¼ points, and Baltimore and Ohio 1 point. Grand Trunks were largely bought, and closed from 1¾ to 2¼ points higher.

A feature of the foreign market has been Berlin buying of Chinese issues, which closed Saturday ¼ to 1⅛ points higher.

Mines were dull all the week, with a downward tendency, but closed firmer.

Bar silver closed 1-16 better, at 29 9-16d per ounce.

OUR LONDON CABLE.

in your railroad shares we have had a still more unlicensed outburst of gambling in a new class of share recently put upon the market, i. e., the West African mines, so called. At most these shares represent nothing substantial that I can discover, but several South African finance houses have turned to this region for the want of anything better, and we are told that the blanket reef of the Witwaterarand has cropped up again thousands of miles away in the wilds of Ashanti. Gold has been discovered there in rich deposits, in some instances, but the work has hardly begun yet, and many one-pound shares are dancing around at all manner of fancy prices up to 34. Altogether the year ending at our Stock Exchange shows a revelry of gambling unknown there for many months past.

In the money market all continues calm as usual. Wednesday saw the discount houses all on tenterhooks lest the bank rate should go up on Thursday. Some of them went so far as to refuse to buy bills outright under 4¼ per cent. I never saw any reason to expect an advance, and none came. Thereupon the market slipped back again and became calm, with discount at 4 per cent. and money easy enough around 3½ per cent.

People are paying 4 per cent. for the use of credit to the first of January, but there is nothing approaching a pinch, and experienced people now look for none. It does not follow that we are comfortable or that we should not have had a 5 per cent. rate many weeks ago.

Gold still slips away from us on balance, and the bank reserve is quite uncomfortably low, but we simply cannot help ourselves.

Credit is manufactured and poured out continuously on such a scale that it is hopeless for the Bank of England to move up in expectation of a change to produce a good effect.

On Continental markets likewise everything is much quieter than was expected, and the general weakening pressure on finance houses and banks is now attributed to the dullness of trade. Business here is certainly falling away, and in some parts of the country the Winter outlook is not reassuring. A. J. W.

Again last week the market for outside securities showed considerable irregularity, and this was particularly true of the closing days, when trading diminished considerably. The approach of the holidays, as usual, caused a considerable falling off in business, and most of the list was more or less neglected on the last two days of the week. In most parts of the list, however, substantial advances showed, and in some directions business broadened out a good deal, but all told the week was not a very active one. Some few developments of importance affecting outside stocks were announced, but for the most part the course of the market was not due to the news that came to hand. A feature of the week's trading was the increase in activity in several of the steel stocks which are now traded in on the curb. Until quite recently the only one of this group to show much activity was American Bridge, and though this did not lose its place of prominence, several other issues of the group added considerably to the week's business. Nearly all of these issues were strong and several of them closed with large net gains. The announcement of dividends on preferred stocks, including American Bridge and Sheet Steel, considerably helped their advance. Furthermore, the general conditions reported seemed favorable.

Of other industrials some of the most active were Distilling of America, Consolidated Equipment, and Electric Boat. The latter enjoyed the sharpest advance of any, but subsequently a large part of the gain disappeared. The only announcement of any importance in regard to this stock was that the balance due on such of the subscriptions to the stock of the company which have not yet been fully paid had been called and made payable in three installments during the coming month. As a very large part of the original subscriptions have already been paid in full, the call just made by the Directors of the company affects but a small part of the company's capital. The large buying of the common stock which advanced that issue to 32 was accompanied by reports that the company had made arrangements of importance for the increase of its business, but definite statements were lacking. The preferred stock also advanced substantially and retained the larger part of its rise.

Consolidated Equipment was fairly active on several days, and closed with a substantial net gain. Late in the week it was announced that a contract of considerable importance had been made with Vickers Sons & Maxim of England for the introduction in Europe of the Consolidated Company's method of car lighting. Distilling of America became active toward the end of the week, and on fairly large buying by brokers who in the recent past have been large purchasers of both the common and preferred stocks advanced sharply.

The copper stocks showed considerable activity and most of them were traded in at higher prices than those quoted at the close of the preceding week. British Columbia Copper, one of the most active of the group, continued to be bought by brokers acting seemingly for insiders, and this buying served to advance the price substantially. Union Copper was also active. It sold up to 5¾, but reacted fractionally from this price. Progress in the development of the company's property, and in particular in the improvement of the concentrating plant, was reported.

Trading in the bank stocks on the curb was unusually active and a number of them scored very considerable advances. Among the most prominent were National City Bank, which sold as high as 560; National Bank of Commerce, which advanced to 330, and Hanover National, which on Saturday sold as high as 520.

Following are the latest quotations for securities not listed or inactive on the Stock Exchange. These quotations are compiled from reports made to THE NEW YORK TIMES by many of the most active and reputable commission brokers. Information is solicited from all persons interested. KITCHENER GOES SOUTH

Moves to Cape Colony Owing to the Boer Invasion.

Reports of Seriousness of the Situation Not Exaggerated — Krueger Now More Stubborn.

CAPE TOWN, Dec. 24.—Lord Kitchener has arrived at De Aar, Cape Colony, and is taking measures to crush the Boer invasion.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—"We learn," says The Daily Mail, "that the reports of the serious situation in Cape Colony are fully confirmed. The invading Boers are receiving much assistance from the Cape Dutch. Railway communication between Cape Town and the North is almost entirely severed, partly by Boer operations and partly by rains.

"Since the Nooltgedacht affair," says the correspondent of the same paper at The Hague, "Mr. Kruger has become stiff-necked. He now scornfully rejects all private suggestions in the nature of peace overtures."

Lord Kitchener's journey to De Aar is sufficient to explain the absence of official news.

There is no sign of the despondency which characterized "Black December" last year. At the same time, the Christmas editorials find little cause for extreme satisfaction. All express regret that the nation is still at war. Some take the trouble to remind their readers that there are four times as many troops in South Africa now as there were twelve months ago, all engaged in monotonous and wearisome duties against an ever-evasive foe and needing the sympathy of friends at home at this festive season.

The Standard, which says that Christmas finds the British people in a chastened mood, moralizes upon the strange lack of political foresight regarding the character and the wisdom of the operations against the Boers. It confesses that "everything has long since been done that would have been possible to end the war if we had been contending against European powers." It is confident, however, that the settlement is only a question of time.

Elaborate preparations are being made to give Lord Roberts a popular welcome. Ten thousand troops will be gathered in London to line the route to Buckingham Palace.

MORE COLONIALS WANTED.

Inducements to Canadians to Serve as Volunteers in South Africa.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Dec. 24.—The Colonial Office is anxious to get as many Canadians as possible to join Gen. Baden-Powell's Transvaal mounted police.

If 1,000 Canadians volunteer for this service, it is the intention of the Imperial Government to offer ten Captaincies and fifteen Lieutenancies in the force to qualified officers of the Canadian militia.

The pay for men is 5s. a day from the date of landing in Cape Town, with free transportation from Canada to South Africa.

HALIFAX, N. S., Dec. 24.—As a development of the present critical situation in South Africa, it is announced that the Imperial Government, which has asked Australia and New Zealand for fresh corps of mounted men, has made a similar request to the Canadian Government. Military officers here expected that Canada would be called upon to send more volunteers, and no difficulty is anticipated in enrolling the men required.

Grand Rapids Invites Mr. Krueger.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Dec. 24.—The Common Council of this city unanimously adopted a resolution to-night extending to Mr. Krüger an official welcome and the freedom of the city. In accordance with this action the City Clerk sent the following cablegram: "President Krüger, The Hague: We extend greetings and most urgently request you to visit our city and meet more than 30,000 of your countrymen."

Pole Carew to Wed Peer's Daughter.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—Gen. Reginald Pole Carew, who has returned from South Africa, will marry Lady Beatrice Frances Elizabeth Butler, elder daughter of the Marquis of Ormonde. Gen. Carew is fifty-one years of age and Lady Beatrice under twenty-five.

MUCH PNEUMONIA IN CHICAGO.

Hospitals Are Full of Cases, but Disease Is Mild in Character.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Following the epidemic of influenza that has prevailed in the city for the past two or three weeks has come an epidemic of pneumonia, but, like the influenza, the pneumonia is mild in comparison to the epidemics of former years.

Physicians all over the city have all the pneumonia cases they can well handle. The hospitals are full of cases. Many destitute persons have been taken to the county hospital suffering with the disease during the past few days.

Physicians in speaking of the epidemic say the disease is very prevalent, but that in most instances the cases are light.

HARVARD PROFESSOR ILL.

William James, Now in Rome, May Not Return to His Duties.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 24.—It is authoritatively stated that Prof. William James of Harvard is in such poor health that he will not be able to return to his duties at the college. He is at present in Rome, with his family, under the care of the celebrated specialist Dr. Baldwin of Florence.

Prof. James has been a sufferer from heart disease for the past three years. While climbing mountains in California three years ago he first noticed the symptoms of the disorder known as valvular insufficiency. Last year he was invited to deliver the Gifford lectures at the University of Aberdeen, but, owing to ill-health, he was unable to do so, and finally went to Neuheim, Germany, to try a new treatment for his disease. There a diagnosis of his case was made, which showed enlargement of the heart, complicated with catarrh of the stomach.

Prof. James is very dear to the men in his department at Harvard, where, for the past few years, his work has been chiefly with the graduate students. It is hoped at the college he may return, but it is not believed that he will be able to do so next year, and his physicians will make no promises for the future. If he should not be able to resume his work, at least in part, it would be an irreparable loss to the university, as his graduate advanced coures, at least, cannot be replaced.

CURED BY ELECTRICITY.

Nettie Rosch, a Paralytic, Recovers the Use of Her Legs.

Thirteen-year-old Nettie Rosch, daughter of President John Rosch of the White Plains Board of Police Commissioners, given up by eminent New York specialists as a hopeless paralytic, not having had the use of her legs for nine years, returned to her home yesterday, after undergoing treatment in Brooklyn, apparently absolutely cured. She was able to walk from the station to her home, much to the delight of her parents.

When four years old Nettie, with her younger brother, was vaccinated, and to this cause President Rosch attributes the attack of infantile paralysis which almost immediately resulted. The boy suffered for two years and partially recovered, although he is still quite weak. Nettie lost entirely the use of her lower limbs, and for eight years could move along the floor by means of her hands only. From her waist up she was as well developed as any child of her age. Mr. Rosch consulted many specialists in this city, and was told by them, he says, that his daughter would never recover, and that she might live until her eighteenth year, but scarcely longer. She attracted much attention in medical circles as one of the rare instances of incurable infantile paralysis.

Dr. Thomas W. Topham, who has treated Nettie for the past two months, said last night that infantile paralysis is quite common, but is usually curable.

"In two months," said Dr. Topham, "under electrical treatment, Nettie's legs grew four inches. She can now walk quite well, and it is only a matter of muscular development and learning to walk, until she will be entirely recovered. She recently walked out to the Park, went shopping, and was able to walk to her house from the station when she returned home for the Christmas holidays."

Nettie's friends gathered in numbers at the Rosch home last night to congratulate their playmate upon her recovery.

CLUES IN THE CUDAHY CASE.

Parts of Wearing Apparel Unearthed Near Spot Where Lantern Was Found—Pat Crowe Identified.

OMAHA, Dec. 24.—Seven and one-half miles west of Omaha, on Center Street, in McArdle Precinct, and about a quarter of a mile west of the Big Pappio, in the Raddock grove on the south side of the road, the lantern with white and black ribbons attached, which was used to "flag" Mr. Cudahy in his drive, was found Thursday morning. It was found by two sons of a farmer on their way to school. The lantern was immediately placed in the possession of a Constable, who brought it to Omaha this afternoon.

To-day two trouser legs and an undershirt sleeve were found buried beneath the snow near the fence adjoining the road. The finding of the lantern settles beyond all doubt the exact location as to the point where the kidnappers received their ransom. When the lantern was picked up it was filled with oil and the wick showed that it had recently been used.

Near the spot where the lantern was found were a number of ears of corn, a part of the kernels yet remaining on the cob, indicating that a horse had been fed there very recently. Tracks were observable in the soft earth, showing that a horse had been tied near by. On the wire fence was a piece of common white wrapping twine, which had evidently held the lantern in place while being used as a signal to Mr. Cudahy.

A man whose name the police refuse to reveal has identified Pat Crowe as the light-complexioned individual who, in company with a woman, accosted him regarding the ownership of the house to which Edward Cudahy, Jr., was carried by kidnappers last Tuesday night. When shown a picture of Crowe taken from the Rogues' Gallery this man stated positively that it was a perfect likeness of the person he saw at Thirty-sixth and Grover Streets.

Questioned closely as to the man's conduct, dress, manner, and general description, he gave a detailed statement which convinced the authorities that they are on the right track.

COLORADO GIRL ABDUCTED.

Taken from Sister's House Sunday—Feared She Is Murdered.

PUEBLO, Col., Dec. 24.—Maggie Hoel, eighteen years old, who lived with her sister, Mrs. Charles Beattie, in a lonely spot about three miles west of the city, was abducted Sunday afternoon, and it is feared has been murdered. On that day Mrs. Beattie left Maggie in charge of her little child. Upon her return two hours later her sister was gone and the baby was alone in the house.

There were evidences of a struggle about the house, and in the yard were found the footprints of a man. The tracks led toward the Arkansas River, and at some places along the trail appeared the prints of the smaller shoes worn by the girl. At other places the trail indicated that the girl was dragged or carried along by her captor. Near the river bank, where the ground is harder, all traces were lost.

A large number of men have been searching, but the girl has not yet been found. At Mrs. Beattie's home Maggie's hat and the wrap which she ordinarily wore out of doors were found undisturbed.

$1,000 A MINUTE FOR A CHURCH.

Members of Chicago Congregation Raise $30,225 Toward an Edifice.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Members of the Hyde Park Baptist Church subscribed $30,225 yesterday toward a new $60,000 edifice. There are 600 members of this church, with which President W. R. Harper and many of the Professors of the University of Chicago are connected.

It took a little more than thirty minutes to raise the money, averaging more than $1,000 a minute. The speech was largely due to what some of the members jokingly termed the "military operations" of Dr. T. W. Goodspeed. The new church will be erected at Fifty-seventh Street and Woodlawn Avenue, where a temporary structure has been used for several years.

Dr. Goodspeed said he had his lines of battle well laid when he made known the purpose of the meeting after the usual morning sermon by the Rev. J. L. Jackson, pastor of the church. The subscription opened with a heavy artillery fire, which Dr. Goodspeed characterized as those who would subscribe $500 or more a year for five years. The bombardment lasted five minutes, and in that time $10,000 had been raised, four pledges for $2,500 being received.

Bankruptcy Proceedings in Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Ralph E. Brownell, a contractor and Vice President of the Brownell Improvement Company, filed a petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court yesterday, in which he asks the court to relieve him of an indebtedness of $162,799. The money which he has to meet these debts is said to amount to less than $15,000, though he schedules stock in various companies with a face value of $381,750. Most of the liabilities were contracted when the petitioner was in the firm of Eggleston, Malletee & Brownell, several years ago. Mrs. Hetty Green of New York had several claims against the firm, though she is now scheduled as a creditor for only $17,522. George F. Parker of 577 North Hoyne Avenue was also a petitioner in bankruptcy yesterday. His debts amount to $12,900. He is a commission merchant.

WOMAN'S WIT TRAPPED TWO DARING THIEVES

Mrs. McNulty Locked in Burglars While She Called Police.

ROBBERS CAUGHT IN THE ACT

Prisoners Were Trying to Overpower Dr. Louis Cherry When Detectives Arrived and Seized Them.

Through the presence of mind of Mrs. Mary McNulty, janitress of the apartment house at 132 East Seventeenth Street, two daring flat robbers were captured in the rooms of Dr. Louis A. Cherry, on the third floor of the house, early last night. Mrs. McNulty telephoned to Police Headquarters while the two men were pummeling the doctor and his invalid wife, and word was sent from there to the East Twenty-second Street Station, whence three detectives hastened to the rescue. Before the janitress telephoned, however, she had a scuffle with one of the robbers in the hallway, finally vanquishing him and locking the outside door of the house behind her when she rushed out to secure aid.

When the robbers were finally arrested, after the officers had been forced to choke them into submission, they were taken to the station and gave their names as Alfred Ray and William H. Mead, their respective addresses being 118 East Seventeenth Street and 212 East Nineteenth Street. The men looked like respectable traveling men rather than thieves. Inquiries at the addresses that they gave were made, with the result of learning that they had really lived in the places, but had moved out recently. Ray had given his landlady the name of Ryder. Mead had been requested to leave the house in which he lodged more than a week ago.

It was shortly before 8 o'clock that Dr. Cherry heard his bell ring. He pressed the button that opened the street door, and then walked into a back room, leaving Mrs. Cherry to receive the caller. A minute later she saw a strang man (Ray) through the open door of the kitchen, in which she was sitting. "What do you want?" she asked him.

He did not reply, but walked straight up to her and pushed her roughly back into her chair, from which she had half arisen. Then he brushed past and started for the room where the doctor was. As he disappeared, Mrs. Cherry began to scream loudly. She could not follow him, being still very weak from a period of illness that she has just undergone.

The doctor had in his pocket a watch valued at $100 and nearly $100 in cash. Ray rushed into his room and hit him in the face before he hardly knew what had happened. Then they grappled, but in the course of the fight the robber managed to get hold of the watch and chain, which were found on the floor after the whole affair was over.

While the men fought Mrs. Cherry continued to scream. Mrs. McNulty, who was down stairs on the ground floor, heard her and began to ascend the steps in leaps. Reaching the hall on the same floor with the Cherrys, she encountered the second robber, (Mead.) He jumped at her, but in less time than it takes to tell it he found himself rolling on the floor.

Without stopping to look further, Mrs. McNulty left the prostrate Mead and darted down stairs. As she left the house she did not forget to lock the door after her. Putting the key in her pocket, she ran to a telephone at the corner and asked Central to give her "the police." Central was equal to the emergency and without questioning rang up Headquarters.

"There's a murder going on in my house," shouted Mrs. McNulty.

"Where?" came over the wire.

"No. 132 East Seventeenth Street."

Headquarters ranged off. Two minutes later they had notified the Sergeant of the East Twenty-second Street Station. Detectives Burns, Kelly, and Krams were dispatched at once to the scene. They found the plucky janitress waiting for them. She led the way up stairs and entered the doctor's room with the officers. In the kitchen lay Mrs. Cherry, almost fainting. In the doctor's room were the owner and the two robbers.

Ray was still locked in his intended victim's arms, neither of them being able to separate himself from the other. Mead was trying to pull his comrade off the doctor, and occasionally, by way of emphasis, striking the latter on any part of his body that happened to be handy.

The detectives pounced on the robbers and finally mastered them after a tough fight, the captives submitting after being roughly handled.

Mrs. Cherry, besides the shock that was more than ordinarily serious on account of her ill-health, received a bad bruise from Ray when he stuck her just over his entrance. The doctor was cut on the face and head and had innumerable bruises over his body. Mrs. McNulty also had a black spot on her arm, the only souvenir that her defeated opponent had had an opportunity to leave her. The prisoners were locked up on the charges of robbery and assault. Before going to their cells they said that they were salesmen

A GENEROUS SAILOR.

Gunner's Mate Who Fought at Manila Goes to St. Louis to Relieve Distress of Dead Comrade's Mother.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 24.—John Walsh, Chief Gunner's Mate of the cruiser Baltimore, who won a medal for bravery with Dewey at Manila and another for personal courage in rescuing two men in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, came all the way to St. Louis the other day to make Christmas happy for the needy mother of Louis Mitchell, a comrade who was killed on the Nashville at Manila.

Walsh has saved a good part of his prize money, and a large portion of it was devoted by him to relieving the distress of Mrs. Mitchell. Then, having solicited the aid of friends in her behalf, he departed for Chicago, where he will surprise his niece, Irene Walsh, of 304 Grand Avenue, with a whole stocking full of bright new silver dollars.

Walsh has served in the navy for thirty-five years. When he heard of Mrs. Mitchell's distress he was in New York, and he set out at once to aid her, as he says Mitchell would have done had their places been changed.

A NEGRO'S WILD RIDE.

Wounded Deer Carries Virgina Darky Into a Millpond.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 24.—Neal Hill, colored, of New Kent, in his efforts to secure a Christmas deer, had a startling experience which he will never forget. The young huntsmen of the county, early in the morning started up a magnificent deer. One of them soon fired a shot at it, which caused the animal to drop. Hill, supposing the buck to be dead, jumped on his back and drove his knife into him. With new life the deer started off on a mad run with the negro on his back. The old man clung for dear life and cried out for help.

It was not a minute's run to a mill pond, which the infuriated animal entered with the darky still hanging to it. Some fishermen in a boat made for the scene. The deer and the old negro had sunk. The young men, though, stood ready on the prow of their boat to strike the buck's head when it should appear above the water. In a moment a dark object shone in the water, and with terrific force the boatmen struck the old negro on the head, supposing it was the deer.

The old man quickly went to the bottom of the pond and the deer made his escape. When the darky was rescued he expressed his regret that he had lost his Christmas meat.

THE SULTAN MUST SETTLE.

Diplomats Say Germany Has Made a Shrewd Move.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—No diplomatic inquiries have been made of the State Department by Germany or any other European power regarding the truth of the reported settlement of the Armenian claims by the Sultan's offer to buy a warship from the Cramps. It is therefore assumed that if Germany has protested against the purchase of the warship until the Sultan has paid his bill to Herr Krupp, this action is taken on information received from Constantinople.

The reported German action is considered exceedingly shrewd. When it was reported that Great Britain would attempt to make the Sultan settle up, in view of "the success attained by the United States," it was declared by diplomats that the Sultan's position was impregnable and that Great Britain's attempt would end in failure. The Sultan could claim that he had not made any settlement with the United States, but had simply bought a ship from the Cramps because he needed it for his navy, and it would have been impossible to disprove his claim, at least until he had paid the Cramps an excessive sum.

The German action, however, anticipates any such defense by the Sultan. It makes the demand, not for the payment of the money owed to Germany, but for the money owed to Krupp. Diplomatic observers are unable to see any way out for the Sultan. He must either settle with Krupp or give up the Cramp purchase. It is surmised that if he attempts to settle with Krupp he will have to tack on whatever he owes the German Government to Krupp's bill.

The immediate outlook for payment to the United States is made rather gloomy by the German action. The State Department, however, has done absolutely nothing which will prevent it from taking stringent action against the Sultan at any time it sees fit to do so. It could adopt a stern policy to-morrow if it chose, unhampered by any agreement with Abdul Hamid.

It is positively asserted at the State Department that this Government has made no compact or agreement whatever for the payment of the claims under cover of the purchase of a warship. The Sultan has announced his purpose of paying the claims in this way, but the United States has never intimated to him that this mode of payment will be either satisfactory or unsatisfactory. It has been simply waiting to see what the Sultan will do.

If the money is paid into the Treasury the Government will not decline it, but neither will it conceal the source of payment if diplomatic inquiries are made, as they surely will be. It is difficult, therefore, to see what the Sultan expects to gain by his roundabout way of payment.

SULTAN AND THE PHONOGRAPH.

Instrument Played an Important Part in the Signing of the Sulu Treaty.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—According to Capt. S. E. Smiley of the Fifteenth United States Infantry, who passed through Chicago today on his way to Washington, the phonograph played an important part in the negotiations which preceded the signing of a treaty between this country and the Sultan of the Sulu Archipelago.

Capt. Smiley was a member of Gen. Bates's staff, Military Commander of the Department of Southern Luzon, and accompanied that official on the tour of the islands under the jurisdiction of the Sultan, which resulted in the execution of the celebrated treaty.

"We made the trip from Manila to the islands on the cruiser Charleston, which has since been lost," said Capt. Smiley. "It happened that we had a phonograph along. It was more a matter of chance than anything else that it was taken, but it came in useful before we got through with our work. When we reached the home of the Sultan we invited him to come aboard our ship, and sent a cutter and guard to escort him. The Sultan accepted the invitation, and after everybody had taken his position on deck under an awning Gen. Bates stated the object of the conference, and formal negotiations were begun.

"We succeeded in making the Sultan understand our mission in a measure through the services of an interpreter, but he seemed suspicious and acted as if he wanted us to do something to convince him of our power. Then we let him marvel at the phonograph, and that seemed to settle the business."

MAY PUNISH GOV. PINGREE.

Summoned to Court for Alleged Contempt in Attack on Michigan Judge and Prosecutor.

LANSING, Mich., Dec. 24.—On petition of members of the Ingham County Bar, Judge Wiest of the Ingham County Circuit Court to-day ordered Gov. Pingree to appear in court next Saturday and show cause why he should not be punished for contempt.

The accusation is based on an interview which was published in The Detroit Tribune Dec. 7, in which the Governor bitterly attacked Judge Wiest and Prosecutor Luttle of Ingham County. Attached to the petition for an order is an affidavit by The Tribune reporter who secured the interview, which affirms that it was given for publication, and that the following day the Governor informed him that the interview as printed was all right and commended its fairness.

YALE BOY RESENTS "GUYING."

Punishes Every Man of a Theatrical Company in a Railway Car.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., Dec. 24.—William Matthews, a Yale student residing in this city, proved that he could take care of himself while coming up from New York on an early train yesterday morning. He got on a private car occupied by a company of actors. Upon entering the car he perceived at once that it was private, and after excusing himself was about to leave when the members of the company proceeded to "guy" him. This made the young man angry, and in a few minutes he had punished every man in the car.

So thoroughly and expeditiously was the job accomplished, it is said, that the show people are ready to recommend Matthews for a position on the football team.

TO COMPETE WITH STEEL TRUST.

Sharon Company to Double the Capacity of the Tin Plate Plant.

Special to The New York Times.

SHARON, Penn., Dec. 24.—At a meeting to-day of the Directors of the Sharon Steel Company it was decided to double the capacity of the tin plate plant, making it the second largest mill in the world. With this enlargement the company will enter the market as the direct competitor with the American Tin Plate Company, the American Steel and Wire Company, and the American Steel Hoop Company.

The enlargement of the tin plate mill will increase the number of hands to 1,500, making a total of 6,500 men employed at the works. The cost of these improvements will be $1,500,000.

John Stevenson, who sold out his New Castle interests to the trust and invested his capital in the Sharon Works, said today: "Even if we lose our money, it is better to do something, but I figure that if the trust can make $1 of profit we are smart enough to make 75 cents, and it will pay dividends. We can pay our expenses and have something to divide among our associates."

When the Steel Trust absorbed nearly every mill in the Shenandoah Valley millions of dollars were released in Sharon and New Castle, and capitalists with a thorough knowledge of iron and steel making were thus deprived of employment. The trust had hardly been formed when these same capitalists began the erection of mammoth works in this city. The company was capitalized at $4,000,000 and this was increased to $5,000,000.

WOMAN KILLED IN A TROLLEY COLLISION

Brooklyn Cars Leave the Track, Imperiling Many Lives.

VICTIM CRUSHED BY WHEELS

Two Others So Badly Injured that They May Die—Pedestrians Panic-stricken.

As a result of a collision between two trolley cars in Williamsburg last evening one woman was instantly killed, two others probably fatally injured, while several persons received slight cuts and bruises. The accident happened at the foot of Broadway, the terminus of the Metropolitan Avenue and Grand Street lines.

The dead woman was horribly mangled and had not been identified up to a late hour last night. She was about thirty-five years old, dressed in black, dark complexion, gray eyes, about 5 feet 5 inches in height, and wore black stockings, with a black waist, black skirt, black gloves, black sack coat, and black hat. There was nothing found on the body to lead to identification. If she had a pocketbook in her hand at the time she met death it was picked up by somebody who carried it away.

The women severely injured were Mrs. Elizabeth Warren of 10 Ten Eyck Street, who has three fractured ribs and internal injuries, and Mrs. Emily Tonnemann of 334 South First Street, who received internal injuries. Both women are in the Eastern District Hospital.

Car 1,378 of the Metropolitan Avenue line, in charge of Motorman John Fagan, reached the terminus at the northwest corner at 6:20 o'clock, just the time traffic was at its height. The car due next, and five minutes behind, was Newtown Car No. 1,557, known as the Grand Street line. Motorman Benjamin Allen was in charge of this car. Allen's car reached the terminus to the north of the other cars at 6:25. It is customary for the motorman of the last car reaching the terminus to wait for the first car to move out when the starter designated it. Then the last car moves ahead. Conductor Christopher Miller was in charge of Allen's car. When the car reached the terminus the conductor pulled down the trolley pole in order to reverse it. At the same time Allen reversed his power and pulled the handle bar out of its socket. The conductor, for some reason, could not let the trolley pole touch the trolley wire, and the motorman having failed to reverse the switchboard, the current which it formed caused the Grand Street car to shoot ahead at a terrific rate of speed, and it crashed into the Metropolitan Avenue car.

Both cars jumped the tracks and ran across the footwalk on the street and across the wide roadway where the wagons pass down to the Grand and Twenty-third Street ferryboats. They went clear across the roadway, crashing into wagons and imperiling the lives of hundreds of people who were disembarking from ferryboats. Many were knocked down and trampled upon in the mad rush to get out of the way.

The woman who was killed was just stepping on the curbstone near where the Metropolitan Avenue car was, at the terminus. She was knocked down and carried beneath the car and crushed to death under the motor box. The two other women were about to board the car, when they were thrown down and jammed between the rear platform of the car and the Grand Street car. Christopher Brennan of 147 Throop Avenue, the conductor of the Metropolitan Avenue car, was on the platform when the crash came, and saved his life by jumping. He was struck on the neck by a piece of flying timber, but not seriously hurt. The half dozen persons in the Metropolitan Avenue car were badly shaken up, and some were slightly cut by the flying glass.

Word was sent to the Bedford Avenue Police Station, and Capt. Short hurried with the reserves to the scene, while calls were sent to the Eastern District, St. Catharine's, and the Williamsburg Hospitals for ambulances. They all responded quickly. So intense was the excitement which followed the collision that the police had difficulty in keeping the crowd back. At least 5,000 persons gathered. In order to get at the body of the dead woman the car had to be jacked up. The body was taken to the Bedford Avenue Police Station.

Both motormen were arrested. Allen was overcome by emotion, saying that he wished it had been he instead of the poor woman who was killed.

SAYS BANKER HUGGED HER.

So Montana Girl Swears Out Complaint Against the Man.

Special to The New York Times.

RED LODGE, Mon., Dec. 24.—W. F. Meyer, Republican State Senator-elect, last week had his seat contested by the Democrats and this morning Dora Fullerton, a highly respectable young woman living on a ranch a few miles from town, swore out a complaint charging Meyer with assault in the third degree.

The filing of this complaint is the climax to a scandal which has been the talk of the town for the past week. The details of the affair have been told with various additions, said to be more or less true. Last Monday the father of Miss Fullerton came into town from his ranch determined to execute dire vengeance on Meyer, but was dissuaded from his purpose by friends.

Miss Fullerton says that at the time the alleged assault was made she went into Meyer's bank, near his office, to have a deposit. Meyer, she charges, called her into his office, saying he had a note to send to her sister in regard to a homestead application. Meyer being United States Land Commissioner in addition to banker, lawyer, merchant, and financier. Miss Fullerton declares that no sooner was the door closed than Meyer, without a word of warning, threw his arms around her and demanded a kiss. Being a strong girl, she asserts, she managed to break away and run from the office.

Matters simmered along with little but talk until some of Miss Fullerton's brothers interested themselves in the matter. The primary hearing will held to-morrow.

HEIRS AT LAW GIVE UP CLAIM.

Convey Interest in Estate of C. W. Fullerton to Miss Mattie Hill.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Heirs at law of Charles W. Fullerton have conveyed their interest in his estate to Miss Mattie Hill, daughter of his father's second wife. This fact became known to-day, when the deeds conveying the interest to Miss Hill were put on record. It is understood that Miss Hill will make liberal provision for the Art Institute and for other institutions in which Mr. Fullerton was interested. The heirs at law, all of whom are non-resident and distant relatives of the decedent, are Silas P. Hubbell, Sidney B. Hubbell, uncles of the half blood, and Emma M. Childs, Grace F. Hadley, and Susan N. Wiley, distant cousins. The matter was kept secret during the hearing of the case before Judge Cutting to-day.

The relinquishment of the claim to Miss Hill was, it is understood, arranged by Attorney Frank H. McCulloch, who made a trip to New York State recently for that purpose. According to Mr. McCulloch, the conveyance is permanent and is no part of a plan either to simplify or to complicate the distribution of the estate.

In the petition filed by the heirs at law the value of the estate is estimated at $1,280,000. Of this $780,000 is in real and $500,000 in personal property.

PENNSYLVANIA ROAD CHANGES.

Report that A. J. Cassatt Will Resign and Become Chairman of Executive Committee.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Dec. 24.—Sweeping changes among the officials of the Pennsylvania lines, East and West, will be announced on Wednesday it was authoritatively stated here to-day after a meeting of the Pennsylvania Board of Directors in Philadelphia.

It is claimed that A. J. Cassatt will retire as President, and that S. M. Prevost, now Third Vice President, will be elected to the Presidency. John P. Green, First Vice President, will retain his present position, but with this exception there will be promotions all along the line.

Mr. Cassatt's retirement is to enable him to accept a new office to be created. This will be the Chairmanship of an Executive Committee to direct the management in the properties that have recently come under the control of the Pennsylvania through purchase of stock or lease. The Pennsylvania recently purchased enough stock of the Baltimore and Ohio and other roads to obtain a representative on the boards of the former rival companies.

The Vanderbilts are said to have become similarly interested in the same roads. Mr. Cassatt will also resign the Presidency of the Pennsylvania Company of Pittsburg, and the vacancy will probably be filled by the election of James McCrea, now First Vice President. This will permit of the advancement of the Second and Third Vice Presidents of the lines west, and the vacancy in the Third Vice Presidency will be filled, it is said, by the promotion of L. F. Loree of Pittsburg, now General Manager. Mr. Loree's successor will be either A. M. Schoyer, Superintendent of the Eastern Division of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Road, or G. L. Potter, General Superintendent of Motive Power.

CREW'S FEARFUL EXPERIENCE.

Six Men on Schooner Marcus Edwards Clung to Capsized Vessel All Day—Were Rescued at Last.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Dec. 24.—The crew of six men of the three-masted schooner Marcus Edwards, brought into this port at 10 o'clock to-night by the United States lighthouse tender Cactus, tell of the fearful experience of clinging to the side of their capsized vessel in the icy waters of Long Island Sound from the early morning until 6 o'clock to-night, when they were discovered and their rescue effected.

The Marcus Edwards, of 185 tons burden, sailed four weeks ago from Port Grenville, N. S., for New York, with a cargo of tile. In weathering a recent storm, a leak was sprung, which increased in size until, at 1 o'clock this morning, the pumps were worked at the rate of 600 strokes a minute to keep the vessel afloat. No danger was anticipated, however, until 1:30 o'clock, when the Edwards began to fill, at the same time listing to starboard.

All hands rushed to the deck, and superhuman efforts were made to cut away the rigging, but they were of no avail, and in a few minutes the schooner went over, settling on her side in the water. The crew were all thrown clear when the Edwards capsized, and with some difficulty succeeded in working their way back to the vessel, to cling there until daylight should bring them assistance. But at daybreak the fog was so dense that all sight of land, and even of the sky, was shut out, and not a sound penetrated the deadened atmosphere.

For sixteen hours the men clung there soaked by the waves and by the no less drenching mist, until they were sighted by the Cactus.

Capt. V. C. Bagley of the Marcus Edwards explains the disaster on the theory that the constant leaking had so weakened the centreboard that it finally gave way, causing the schooner to fill immediately.

The Edwards was owned at Jonesport, Me., and to-morrow an attempt will be made to tow her into port.

BONES OF PERE MARQUETTE?

Remains Found Near Frankfort, Mich., Believed to be Those of the Famous Jesuit Missionary.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Dec. 24.—Announcement is made by Ann Arbor railway officials that what are supposed to be the remains of Father Marquette, intrepid missionary and explorer, have been exhumed by workmen near Frankfort, Mich. Only the skull and some imperfect bones remain, and experts declare them to be those of a white man. Rust and small remains close to the head are believed to have been the father's beads and cross.

The find was made at a considerable depth while excavating for a big Summer hotel. The Michigan Historical Society claims to possess the proof that Father Marquette was buried at this point in the year 1675 in the bed of a small stream.

It was in clearing the course of a stream that the remains were found. Great interest is being taken in the find by Michigan historians. A thorough investigation is being made.

TO TEACH NEWSBOYS TO DANCE.

Kansas City Professor Offers to Give Them Cultivation Free.

Special to The New York Times.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 24.—The newsboys of this city are to have a chance to make gentlemen of themselves, as far as the polish which goes with dancing, deportment, and etiquette is concerned.

This is to be brought about by Prof. H. A. Franzmathes, who has announced that, commencing with Jan. 9 and regularly each Monday thereafter, he will "devote his full time and attention to teaching newsboys free the art of dancing, deportment, and etiquette."

In his announcement, Prof. Franzmathes says: "It should be the aim of every newsboy to achieve a higher position in life as he matures into manhood. Some of the most intelligent and wealthy men of to-day started in early boyhood selling papers, but watching every opportunity which presented itself and grasping it, rose higher and higher, finally wearing the laurels so eagerly sought. We believe the newsboys of Kansas City, if given a chance, would make a mark as business men. To do this they must cultivate themselves, beginning at a point which we think very necessary, the art of dancing, deportment, and etiquette."

$30,000,000 RUBBER CONCERN.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 24.—The International Crude Rubber Company, with an authorized capital of $30,000,000, was incorporated here to-day to manufacture and deal in rubber goods of all kinds. Of the capital stock $10,000,000 is to be preferred, with 6 per cent. cumulative dividend.

The incorporators are H. M. Sadler, George Pope, George F. Brown, W. A. Towner, C. A. Kidder, J. F. Charlton, E. H. Warren, C. G. Palmer, Alden S. Snow, all of Jersey City.

$50,000 CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Dr. D. K. Pearsons has sent his check for $50,000 as a Christmas present to Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Col.

Within the last seven weeks Dr. Pearsons has given $200,000 to one other educational institution, but declines to state the name of the recipient, who gave a pledge that the donor's name should never be divulged during his lifetime. These two gifts, together with $30,000 said to have been given by Dr. Pearsons for the erection of a woman's dormitory at Northwestern University, bring the actual total of his known benefactions during the past ten years to the sum of $2,489,000, though these figures fall far short of the complete list. The money tendered anonymously probably reaches $500,000, making the whole amount very close to $3,000,000.

JUDGES WANT NEW HOME

Would Erect Big Structure On Site of New Hall of Records.

County Court House Proposed as Substitute for the Latter—Architect Thomas Calls Plan Absurd.

A proposition is on foot to change the new seven-million-dollar Hall of Records Building, at Chambers and Centre Streets, into a County Court House, to accommodate the various parts of the Supreme Court and the offices of the County Clerk, Surrogate, and Sheriff, and to put the offices of the Register, the Controller, and Corporation Counsel in the present County Court House.

This plan was originated by Justices of the Supreme Court who are interested in changing the conditions now existing in the County Court House. A committee of three of the Justices has been for some time arranging for better accommodations for the courts, and under a bill passed at the last session of the Legislature the city was authorized to issue bonds to pay for these changes. The committee, consisting of Justices Dugro, Truax, and Scott, have found that the changes would cost over $1,000,000, and that while these changes were being made the courts would have to seek other quarters. It was Justice Scott who suggested the new plan of turning over the County Court House to the departments mentioned, and for the keeping of records. While no official action has been taken by the Building Committee, the plan will come up at its meeting at the beginning of the year, and then provisions will be made by the committee to have a bill introduced in the Legislature authorizing the change.

As the final action of the Municipal Assembly on the $22,250,000 bond issue to provide for the interior decorations of the Hall of Records, as now planned, is scheduled for to-morrow, there is some fear on the part of the friends of the new building that the making public of the project of the Justices of the Supreme Court may cause delay.

Justice Francis M. Scott of the Building Committee of the Supreme Court Justices, when seen yesterday, said:

planned, these were to cost $2,500,000. The basement was to be of mingled white and dark-green Lake Champlain marble, Montferrati Sienna marble to be used in the corridors of the other floors, while each room was to be elaborately decorated. Fine statuary and marble stairways were to be used all through the building, and the other decorations were to correspond.

There was considerable argument over these plans in the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. Controller Coler declared that the whole building would cost more than $7,000,000. In fact, all in the board, except the Corporation Counsel, stood against the architects' plans, and Horgan & Slattery, the architects, were called in in an advisory capacity, and they recommended iron stairways instead of marble and other changes to reduce the interior cost to $1,500,000. Finally some modifications of the plans were agreed to and the interior cost placed at $2,250,000.

The Hall of Records structure is to hold the Register's office, the Finance Department, the Corporation Counsel's office, the Tax Department, the County Clerk's office, and the Surrogates' Court. This mixing up of departments is one of the things objected to by the Justices. They argue that by their plan the County Clerk, Sheriff, Surrogate, and the courts can be under one roof and greatly facilitate the transaction of business in the courts.

On the other hand, it is argued that, as the contracts have practically all been let, the cost of changes as proposed by the Justices of the Supreme Court will be very great, as compensation will have to be paid to the contractors and additional fees will have to be paid to architects for preparing the new interior plans and arranging for the additional work on the building.

The discussion of the changes has disclosed the fact that the plans for the new Hall of Records were originally those for one wing of an immense building, which had the project been carried out, would have extended on Chambers Street from Centre Street to Broadway, and in which all the city departments and courts would have been housed, all other buildings in City Hall Park being done away with.

ITALIANS IN A FIERCE FIGHT.

One Dead, Another Dying After a Knife and Pistol Affray.

MAMARONECK, N. Y., Dec. 24.—There was a desperate fight inside and outside the hotel known as the "Foot-and-a-Half House" here last night, and as a result one man is dead and another is dying. Several others are suffering from knife and pistol wounds which are more or less serious, and fully a score have cuts and bruises. The affray started with a duel. Both principals were wounded and then the fight became general. The man who is dead is said to have acted as a peacemaker.

All the participants in the brawl were Italians, and Coroner Banning of Mount Vernon, who worked on the case all day, had a difficult task in ascertaining just what did occur. From what he had learned the facts were these: A number of the Italian residents of this place and the neighboring villages held a Christmas dance at the hotel Saturday night, the dance going on peacefully until early on Sunday morning. About 1 or 2 o'clock this morning a young woman, who accompanied Vito Naraglano to the dance, refused to waltz with Antoni Dori, and the latter becoming angered, abused Naraglano and the young woman. Naraglano became angry and replied. Dori then challenged Naraglano to a duel.

The challenge was promptly accepted, and the two left the hall to fight outside. The dancers and musicians followed. Dori was armed with a stiletto and Naraglano with a revolver. Dori plunged his knife into Naraglano's chest a little below the heart, inflicting a serious wound. Naraglano fired two shots at Dori. One passed through Dori's arm.

The bullet which missed Dori hit Antonio Giuseppi, one of the musicians, in the right eye, and passed upward and backward into the brain. An instant later the entire gathering was in a free fight, in which knives play'd an important part. When it was over Dominico Chippi and Giuseppi Cortex had been seriously cut, and about two in every three of the others bore marks of the affray. The injured musician was removed to the hospital at New Rochelle. He lay their unconscious until tonight, when he died.

Naraglano also was taken to the hospital, where he is still, and he is unable to make an ante-mortem statement. It is expected he will die. Early yesterday, before the authorities became aroused, many Italians left for New York, so that when the authorities began their investigation it was almost impossible to learn anything. The Coroner has three witnesses when he has had locked up for safe keeping.

HOSPITAL TAKES LOEFFLER BACK

Man Turned Out Suffering from Burns Befriended by a Clergyman.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 24.—Charles Loeffler, who with his son Joseph, was turned out of the City Hospital early yesterday morning after their burns had been dressed, is back in that institution to-day.

The Rev. Dr. Fisher of the Bruce Street Mission, when he saw the pitiable condition of the Loeffler's, especially the father, went to the City Hospital late last night and demanded as an act of humanity that the other Loeffler at least be admitted.

The man was at the time in the house of a poor neighbor. He was sent for and is now resting comfortably in the hospital.

JANITRESS ROBBED IN CELLAR.

Knocked Down and Her Pockets Rifled of Forty Dollars.

Mrs. Ellen Buckley, janitress of a flat-house at 180 Adams Street, Brooklyn, was assaulted and robbed by an unknown man in the cellar of the building at 10 o'clock yesterday morning. The house is about two blocks from the Adams Street Police Station. According to the story told by Mrs. Buckley, she descended to the cellar to start a small pumping engine there, used for pumping water to the upper floors of the building.

The cellar was very dark, and as she was groping her way to the pumping engine she suddenly received a blow on the head which stunned her and knocked her down. She felt some one tugging at the pocket of her dress, and recovering, she screamed loudly for help.

The tenants heard her cries, but none of them would go into the cellar. One of them, however, ran to the Adams Street Station and Detectives Toman and Keelan were sent to the house. Upon entering the cellar the policemen came upon Mrs. Buckley moving about in the darkness half dazed.

The woman's assailant had escaped through a doorway leading from the cellar into an alley on the side of the building. The man had ripped out Mrs. Buckley's pocket and stolen her purse, containing $40 in rent money, which the janitress had collected from the tenants.

DADY CONTRACT DISPUTE.

Havana's Mayor Suspends the Ayuntamiento's Action.

HAVANA, Dec. 24.—Mayor Rodriguez has suspended the Ayuntamiento's action in connection with the contract of Michael J. Dady for paving and sewering. He gives five reasons for his course:

First—That the Ayuntamiento allowed Mr. Dady to bid without a guarantee.

Second—That Mr. Dady is not the author of the present plans.

Third—That the price was estimated on the original project, whereas the proposal of the Engineering Department was different and cheaper.

Fourth—That public competition has been virtually forbidden, to the disadvantage of the city.

Fifth—That the project was voted down by the Ayuntamiento a year ago by a resolution, not rescinded, to consider Mr. Daly simply the owner of the project without a concession.

The Mayor also points out that the resolution of the Spanish Ayuntamiento of Dec. 19, 1898, did not even give Mr. Dady a right; that nothing is now due him from the city; that the present plans of the Engineering Department are not modifications of Mr. Dady's in any way, and that Mr. Dady is entitled to no right whatever in the premises. Mr. Dady's plans call for $10,600,000 and Col. Black's for $9,135,000, the latter covering the contractor's profit. The difference in favor of the city is $1,500,000. The matter will now go to Civil Gov. Nunez for ten days. In Government circles it is considered that Mr. Dady is completely beaten.

Clover Leaf Stock Changing Hands.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 24.—A source of railway information in this city, hitherto reliable, is authority for the statement that the stock of the Clover Leaf is being purchased by heavy holders of Canadian Pacific interests and the Canadian Pacific will soon have possession of the road.

PHILBIN IS NOW IN OFFICE

New District Attorney Sworn In by Justice O'Brien.

OUTLINES HIS POLICY IN PART

Col. Gardiner Waits All Day, but He Does Not Meet His Successor.

Eugene Ambrose Philbin, appointed District Attorney of the County of New York by Gov. Roosevelt to replace Col. Asa Bird Gardiner, removed, took the oath of office before Supreme Court Justice Morgan J. O'Brien in the latter's chambers in the Appellate Division at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Owing to the failure of District Attorney Philbin's commission to reach him until 4:20 o'clock, Col. Gardiner was compelled to await in vain his successor's arrival all day.

Bearing Gov. Roosevelt's order of removal, Special Messenger Amos M. Knapp arrived at the Criminal Courts Building about 12 o'clock. He did not serve the order on Col. Gardiner, as Mr. Philbin had not yet received his commission, and it was said that if the order was served there legally would be no District Attorney until the new one was sworn in. Col. Gardiner left the District Attorney's office at 4 o'clock, the end of the official day. Accompanied by Mr. Knapp, he went to the Waldorf-Astoria. John F. McIntyre was designated as Acting District Attorney. Mr. McIntyre remained in this capacity just thirty minutes. At half-past 4 Mr. Knapp received word at the Waldorf that Mr. Philbin's commission had been received. He then served Col. Gardiner with the notice of his removal. Notice was also filed with County Clerk Sohmer.

Col. Gardiner reached his office shortly after 9 o'clock yesterday morning, nearly two hours earlier than his usual time of arrival. He would say nothing for publication. Hurrying into his private office, he spent his last official day in putting the affairs of his office in proper shape for his successor, cleaning out his desk, and conferring with his assistants concerning the business of the office. All of the twenty-three Assistants and Deputy Assistants were on hand much earlier than usual, speculating as to the probability of changes among them. Numerous applicants for positions were in the corridors to see the new District Attorney. These were accompanied by their friends and backers. All were sent to Mr. Philbin's house, 333 West Seventy-seventh Street. Many letters also came and were forwarded to Mr. Philbin's office.

It was understood by the Colonel, after Messenger Knapp arrived, that Mr. Philbin would meet him at 3 o'clock, and that at that hour both the order of removal and the certificate of appointment would be served on the outgoing and incoming District Attorneys, respectively. The train upon which Deputy Appointment Clerk John A. Waldron, bearing Mr. Philbin's commission, was a passenger was two hours late, and Mr. Waldron reached the new District Attorney's law office, at 111 Broadway, at 4:20. Mr. Waldron also bore John Proctor Clarke's commission as Supreme Court Justice. Immediately upon receipt of the commission Mr. Philbin hurried to the chambers of the Judges of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, where Justice Morgan J. O'Brien had been awaiting him for an hour. Mr. Philbin, bearing his commission and the order of removal of Col. Gardiner, was shown at once into Justice O'Brien's private room. Besides the Justice and Mr. Philbin, there were present Court Clerk Lamb, Joseph Treanor, the Justice's officer, and three newspaper men.

Justice O'Brien handed Mr. Philbin a blank oath of office, which the latter signed. Both gentlemen then arose and stood with uplifted right hands.

"Do you solemnly swear to support the Constitution of the United States, the Constitution of the State of New York, and to faithfully discharge the duties of the office of District Attorney of the County of New York?" asked the Justice.

"I do," said Mr. Philbin.

Justice O'Brien then signed the oath, and Eugene A. Philbin was duly inducted into the office of District Attorney of New York County.

District Attorney Philbin's first official interview was given to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

"My policy has already been outlined in THE TIMES," said he, "and I have little to add at present. I do not deem it consonant with the dignity of the District Attorney's office to talk too much before I familiarize myself with the duties of my office. It is sufficient to say that I will endeavor to do my duty, and, where the law is violated, endeavor to punish, when possible, the violators. I repeat I shall try to conduct my office on the same general lines as characterized the administration of Mr. Roosevelt as Police Commissioner and Col. Waring as Street Commissioner."

An alleged interview in an afternoon paper, in which Mr. Philbin was quoted as saying his administration would be a "strenuous one," was pronounced unauthorized by the District Attorney. "I hope I have too much sense to talk in that way," said he. "I have never criticised Col. Gardiner personally, and I have made no comment on the rapidity with which certain cases have been disposed of. It is true I know but two assistants in the office—Messrs. Osborne and Hennessy—but I did not intimate that there would be sweeping changes."

"What are your sentiments concerning the crusade against vice?"

"I am naturally in sympathy with any citizen who is working for the betterment of the moral condition of the city. The District Attorney's office will stand ready under my administration to assist in every way possible such movements. If there are pigeon-holed indictments in the office, it will be my duty to take them out and, where evidence may be obtained, prosecute the persons named in them. No District Attorney, I think, ever came into office so free from obligations as I am, and I feel the responsibility accordingly. I am under no obligations to either the Republican or Democratic organization. I don't want to appear as talking too much, because I think the public is practical and prefers men who act much and talk little."

Mr. Philbin is a member of the law firm of Philbin, Beekman & Menken, at 111 Broadway. The name of John Henry Hammond, who brought the charges against Col. Gardiner, appears on the door of the law offices, and Mr. Hammond occupied a room there until he was appointed Deputy Attorney General.

Col. Gardiner, after stopping at the Waldorf, left for Garden City to take Christmas dinner with his family. He will be at his former office Wednesday morning to introduce Mr. Philbin to the Judges and to the Assistant District Attorneys, after which the Colonel will take final leave of his former staff.

ACCUSED NOTARY CLEARED.

Charges Against Bernhard Moral Dismissed by Gov. Roosevelt.

S. D. Epstein of 220 Broadway, counsel for Bernhard Moral, a money lender of 244 West Twenty-ninth Street, announced yesterday that Gov. Roosevelt has dismissed charges of improper and dishonorable conduct as a notary public preferred against Mr. Moral by Judge Stiner of the Eleventh District Municipal Court.

William Ficklen, an asphalt contractor living at the Hotel Vendome, borrowed $100 from the People's Storage Company, which is managed by Mr. Moral, and, according to the Copartnership Directory, owned by Mrs. Moral, pledging a quantity of furniture and carpets as security.

At the end of two months a demand of $204 was made for the return of the property. Mr. Ficklen thereupon sued for the recovery of his goods. Judge Stiner in his decision ordered that they be returned forthwith, and that Moral lose his original loan and all interest, and pay the costs besides.

Investigation into the matter of the notary's commission was held at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, testimony being taken by William J. Youngs, Gov. Roosevelt's secretary, as Commissioner. His report was that the facts alleged in the Judge's complaint did not exist.

Christmas Packages Kept from Hobson.

Lieut. Hobson, who has been very ill at the Presbyterian Hospital for several weeks' past, is reported to be steadily improving. A number of packages arrived at the hospital for him yesterday, in fact they were coming all day. They will not be sent up to him now, but will be taken care of and given to him when he is convalescent.

PENITENTIARY THEIR REFUGE.

Magistrate Says There Is Lack of Provision Elsewhere for Homeless Men.

Magistrate Brenner was greatly interested yesterday in the case of a young man who was arraigned before him in the Adams Street Police Court, Brooklyn. The young man was Francis McDonald, twenty-two years old, and he was charged with vagrancy. McDonald applied at the Bridge Police Station on Sunday night for shelter and was locked up at his own request. In court yesterday he told the Magistrate that he had come to this city from Buffalo seeking work. He obtained employment in a restaurant but was discharged when the working force of the place was reduced. Since then, he said, he had walked the streets vainly looking for work. Reduced to a starving condition, he was at last forced to go to the police.

"I would not steal," said McDonald, "yet I could not starve, and had myself locked up for vagrancy."

Magistrate Brenner was very favorably impressed with the young man and tried to secure work and shelter for him in the Home of Industry, on Willoughby Street. The institution and its branches were crowded, however, and the Magistrate was able to obtain shelter for McDonald for only a day or two.

"It seems to me," said Magistrate Brenner, commenting on the case afterward, "that there is something wrong when a charity like this cannot find room for more men. The fault, I think, lies with the public, which should more generously support an institution of this character. There are scores of men in the city, honest and industrious, who cannot get work. They cannot starve, and yet their only recourse is to get arrested as vagrants if they want shelter. There is positively no place for them in this enlightened age but the penitentiary."

HELD FOR PULLING WHISKERS.

Frederick Suder Tells How He Lost a Luxuriant Beard.

Charged with uprooting and destroying a luxurious crop of whiskers grown by a neighbor, Charles Kunhold, a restaurant keeper of 21 Second Avenue, was held in $300 bail in the Yorkville Police Court yesterday, the Magistrate holding that this wanton destruction amounted to an assault. Frederick Süder, a saloonkeeper of 136 First Avenue, was the complainant in the case. He told the Magistrate that four weeks ago Kunhold came into his place and, after a few words of argument, began beard pulling. It was Suder's beard that suffered.

Suder explained to the Court that he had possessed a beautiful flowing hirsute appendage before the little argument, but that when Kunhold got through with it there were gaps and ravines in it to the extent that he was ashamed to wear it, and he had his face and chin dehirsuted. Kunhold in his defense stated that Suder had stigmatized him as a dishonest man, and that he merely slapped his face. Suder had witnesses to prove the beard disaster however.

NATIONAL GOSPEL CAMPAIGN.

Headquarters Will Probably Be Opened To-morrow.

The Nominating Committee of the National Central Committee of the National Gospel Campaign met yesterday at the Lawyers' Club, 120 Broadway, to complete the organization of the Central Committee for the twentieth century crusade for the evangelization of America. The Nominating Committee decided upon the officers of the National Central Committee and upon additional members of that body, but decided not to give out the names until they had received acceptances from the men chosen. The committee also considered several offers of quarters for the general offices and National headquarters of the movement, and hopes to open its offices to-morrow.

"Little can be said now as to the plans of the National Central Committee," said a member of that body yesterday, "but it can be said that the work will be interdenominational rather than non-denominational. It is hoped to organize churches and religious societies for special evangelistic work in their own fields and according to their own methods, and to give them such aid as they desire, besides the stimulus of organized effort."

"KING DAVID" FINED $10.

Yule Tide Saved the "Heir to the Earth" from a Term in Jail.

"I am King David, the descendant of King David and King Solomon, the heir to the earth and the fullness thereof, sah," replied David Hill Jenkins, colored, of 249 Sixth Avenue, in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday. Magistrate Zeller had merely asked the man his business. "King David" had been arraigned for beating his common law wife.

"Yes, sah, I am a doctor of metaphysics and a thirty-fourth degree Mason, Judge, sah," continued the prisoner, modestly.

"Where was the thirty-fourth degree conferred on you?" asked the Magistrate.

"At my palace, 249 Sixth Avenue," replied the King. "I have the original grant, signed by King Solomon, and here is a true copy of it, sah."

The credentials which "King David" handed up to the Magistrate read in part as follows:

Know all men by these presents and by the presence of these presents—Amen.

That David Hill Jenkins is hereby herein hereafter and heretofore qualified and authorized. And all men also that the said Jenkins is deeded, tithed, and decreed, improvised, and endowed, commissioned, appointed, anointed, prepared and declared executor with all rights pertaining to and of a doctor of metaphysics in all its phases.

Therefore be it understood that King David and King Solomon, being authors, founders, and promoters of this sacred secret and having conferred same with highest honors of thirty-fourth degree masonry upon David Hill Jenkins aforesaid. Any deviation or inconsistency by undue presumptions upon the part of those to whom this document is addressed will be met by as well as incur our utter displeasure and disfavor.

Signed, KING DAVID and King SOLOMON.

The Magistrate said he felt as if he ought to send "King David" to the workhouse, but as it was so near Christmas he would merely impose a fine of $10.

Theatre Crowds at a Fire.

Fire was discovered at 11:20 o'clock last night on the second floor of the building occupied by Rogers, Peet & Co., clothiers, at 1,268 Broadway. The blaze, which was caused by defective insulation of electric light wires, was extinguished with little difficulty by the firemen, but the damage by water and the firemen's efforts to get at the seat of the trouble was about $1,500. The principal Broadway theatres were just dismissing their audiences when the alarm was sent in, and theatregoers crowded about and caused much excitement by blocking up the streets.

Visitor Took Mrs. Gheist's Jewelry.

Mrs. Henry Gheist of 168 West Eighty-first Street is minus jewelry valued at $100 as the result of a visit yesterday from an unknown woman, who called when Mrs. Gheist was out. The servant said that a tall, dark woman called, and on being told Mrs. Gheist was not at home said she would take a seat and wait for her. In a few minutes, however, she declared she could wait no longer, and the servant let her out. When Mrs. Gheist returned the jewelry was missing.

Postal Clerks Caught Stealing.

Four dishonest Post Office clerks who were convicted last week in the United States Circuit Court of stealing letters from the mails and abstracting the contents were sentenced by Judge Thomas yesterday. Arthur S. Hunkele and Robert J. Lusk were each sentenced to two years and six months in Sing Sing. Edmund J. Bell and John J. Prior were sentenced for the same term to the Elmira Reformatory.

Child Run Over by an Ice Wagon.

John Schreiber, five years old, of 353 East Fifty-second Street, while playing in the street in front of his home yesterday, was knocked down by a wagon driven by Samuel Pringle and belonging to the American Ice Company. The child's skull was fractured and he was taken to Flower Hospital, and Pringle was arrested and locked up in the East Fifty-first Street Station.

HER HAIR TURNED GREEN

Actress Only Wanted to Change Its Hue from Golden to Auburn.

She Blames a Druggist and Sues for $5,000—How Druggists Insure Themselves Against Mistakes.

Because John Kiehl, druggist of Third Avenue and Thirteenth Street, sold to Miss Lillie Verona a chemical that turned her hair green instead of auburn she is now suing him for $5,000 damages. If she wins, however, Mr. Kiehl will not be out of pocket, for he is insured to the amount demanded against the consequences of possible mistakes.

Miss Verona has appeared with various theatrical companies as a soubrette. Now she is afraid that her career is blighted, for the vaudeville managers are not producing many plays, if any at all, in which there appear impersonators of mermaids.

Until three weeks ago the hair of the soubrette was of a golden hue. She wanted it changed to auburn. According to her story, she went to a professional hair changer and asked his advice. He told her that the very thing to do the job was a solution of water and powdered henna leaves. Henna leaves, in their pulverized form, are used for making paints and the like, but the soubrette did not know that. Accordingly she repaired to the drug store of Mr. Kiehl and asked for ten cents' worth of the powder.

As to whether she told the clerk what use she intended to make of the drug is a matter of contradiction. The clerk says no; the actress says yes.

In any case, she went away from the store and, after reaching her room, which is at 132 East Seventeenth Street, she mixed the solution as directed by the professional hair changer. This was in the evening. Early the next day she awoke, and her first thought was of the lotion applied on the previous night. What was her astonishment, on looking into the mirror, to find that her flaxen tresses were streaked with brilliant green. Not the same hue of green had spread all over her head, for in some places the wash had taken a darker color than in others. Yet the general effect was decidedly verdant.

As to what happened after the discovery her counsel, M. Strassman, tells this story:

"When my client found that she was green on the hair she tried every kind of a wash to bring back the original golden tint. No use. Then she went to consult hair specialists. They examined her head by the aid of chemicals, they washed it much, they did everything they could think of to drive away the green. At last all of them declared that the color was there to stay, and that the only color they could substitute for it would be a jet black. If they should apply any other color of dye, they said, the green would be bound to show itself in some shade. Now, Miss Verona does not want black hair. She is a natural blonde, and black hair would not be becoming to her.

"One thing that will aid her in winning the case is the fact that opinions have been given by several eminent hair specialists, as they are willing to testify, that the lotion she applied caused such injury to her hair as to make it all fall out, besides turning it green. Our claim is that Mr. Kiehl sold her a bad quality of the leaves, or something that was not the leaves at all."

Mr. Kiehl, when the statement of the lawyer was repeated to him, said that the article he sold to Miss Verona was the genuine powder of henna leaves, of the best quality. He said that he had no reason to know that she wanted to apply it to her hair, and that, if he had known, it would have been none of his concern. He added that he had nothing to do with the defense of the suit, this being the duty of the Fidelity and Casualty Company.

Mr. Kiehl has a policy with this company by which the latter agrees to undertake the defense and liquidation of such lawsuits as he may incur through the mistakes of himself and his employes, providing the amount of the suits shall not exceed $5,000.

It appears that the druggists of this city have been for two years in the habit of insuring themselves against the results liable to follow mistakes in the putting up of prescriptions and errors incidental to the general sale of drugs and chemicals.

It was explained yesterday, both by Mr. Kiehl and by an official of the Fidelity and Casualty Company, that the policy thus offered to druggists only protects them against losses due to errors, not serving as a safeguard to any who might criminally transgress the laws in the dispensing of drugs. Up to the present time there has been little attempt on the part of the company to sell the policies outside of New York, although a few druggists elsewhere have taken them.

"We have been doing this for two years now," said Mr. Lee of the Fidelity and Casualty Company. "The policy is simply a civil indemnity. Our limit is $5,000, and in suits up to that amount we have to be responsible for the defense of those who insure with us. As yet we have not tried very much to get subscribers outside of the city, but we have a large number here."

From a druggist it was learned that the terms of payment on the policies are as follows: The proprietor of a store pays $10 for himself, $2 for every full-fledged clerk in his store, $2 for each junior clerk, and $1 for every boy in the establishment, if he wants to take out a policy for $5,000. For lower policies the rates are proportional. So it is arranged that the amount which a dealer has to pay for the indemnity is proportionate to the extent of his business and the consequent chances of mistakes in his store.

Speaking of how the plan of this kind of insurance had its beginning, a druggist said:

"About two years ago a society of druggists in this city voted as a body to suggest the idea to some insurance company. One of the members of the society had thought of the plan and laid it before the members in meeting. After the suggestion was made to the Fidelity and Casualty Company that concern was not slow in putting it in practical use. I think that almost every druggist in town is insured, certainly most of the proprietors of the houses that have a large trade."

TAMMANY REVOLT OVER A JOB.

Fight in the Thirty-fifth Assembly District for Patronage.

A revolt is threatened in the Tammany General Committee in the Thirty-fifth Assembly District, of which Louis F. Haffen is leader. William R. Spear, a Republican, is clerk in Justice Tierney's court at One Hundred and Fifty-eighth Street and Third Avenue. His term will expire on Dec. 31, 1900. The appointment is for six years, at an annual salary of $3,000, and Justice Tierney, it is said, recently announced that he would appoint to the vacancy any fit person recommended by Mr. Haffen.

The latter, it is reported, did not follow the usual custom of learning the wishes of the General Committee of the district, but privately recommended for the place Thomas Maher, Superintendent of the Forty-second Street crosstown railroad.

Members of the committee learned of the recommendation and held a hurried meeting on Sunday, when it was decided by an almost unanimous vote to recommend three names, with the preference in the order named. These are Joseph Farley, who for years was clerk of the Jefferson Market Court; ex-Assemblyman Charles Marrin, and Michael Hecht.

These names were presented to Mr. Haffen yesterday with the information that if he did not select one of them before Thursday next, a majority of the committee will resign. Mr. Haffen has not intimated what he will do.

Woman Charged with Defacing Records

SOUTH NORWALK, Conn., Dec. 24.—Miss Anna Fitch of Norfield Church Parish, Weston, has been arrested charged with defacing the church records. It is alleged that during a recent trial in Bridgeport, when the Rev. C. M. Arthur sued the church for salary, said to be due him as pastor, the records were introduced in perfect order. They were turned over to Miss Fitch, and a second allegation charges that when she submitted them to the Court three pages has been torn out in an important part of the book.

FRAUD IN THE PHILIPPINES

Hundreds of Illegal Mining Claims Are on File.

Entered In Last Days of Spanish Rule —Ex-Consul Williams Said to Have Been Interested.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—It is due to an investigation set on foot by Gen. Otis, now in command of the Department of the Lakes, that a conspiracy to acquire vast mining claims in the Philippines has been exposed.

Major Murray, aide de camp to Gen. Otis, who served in the same capacity in Manila, explained the situation to-day in Army Headquarters, in the Pullman Building. According to the officer, the Spanish officials in charge of the mining office, evidently fell in with the plans and objects of the adventurers, for a great number of fraudulent claims were admitted to registration.

"Between the time that Dewey sank the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay and the time when the city surrendered to Gen. Merritt," said Major Murray, "the Spanish registration office did little else than record deeds to mining lands. During the few weeks between those dates 1,618 claims were admitted to registration, although in the centuries of Spanish occupation preceding the entrance of Dewey's fleet in Manila Bay only 481 concessions had been granted.

"Oscar J. Williams, who was Consul at Manila before the American occupation, seemed to be interested in the affair in some way, but if he has any connection with the affair it is as an individual and not as United States Consular official. He was anxious that Gen. Otis and the American representatives recognize the legality of the mining concessions, but whether he had any interest in the matter I do not know. That will come out in the investigation.

"There is one thing of which I am confident, however, and that is that the claims registered during the last days of the Spanish occupation will be thrown out."

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—Inquiry at the State Department discloses the fact that no official notice ever was taken by the department of a statement affecting in some measure Oscar F. Williams, who had been Consul to Manila before the Spanish-American war. Capt. Burritt was the author of this statement, and, being in charge of the Mining Bureau in the Philippines, in the course of his annual report to Gen. MacArthur, commenting upon the filing in an irregular fashion of an enormous number of mining claims, said:

"The record discloses an undefined but apparently close relation of Oscar F. Williams as United States Consul, with the Inspectorate of Mines, that is of such a nature as to seem to require a statement of the facts appearing in the records of this bureau."

Capt. Burritt then recites some cases where the Consul had certified to certain claims some time after the claims already had been allowed by the Spanish mining officials. The general statement of the report is that certain designing men, foreseeing the overthrow of Spanish sovereignty in the Philippines, had filed claims upon everything in sight in a mining way.

But Consul Williams is no longer United States Consul, nor is he an official of the United States Government, so that it has no longer any authority to call upon him in connection with this matter. The mining claims filed in the irregular fashion referred to are, however, yet within reach, and it is said at the War Department that the Philippine Commission is about to take them up with a view to passing upon their validity. Mr. Williams is now at his home in Syracuse, N. Y.

MR. WILLIAMS MAKES DENIAL.

ROCHESTER, Dec. 24.—When ex-Consul Williams was shown the dispatch in regard to that portion of Capt. Burritt's report to Gen. MacArthur concerning Mr. Williams, the latter seemed but indifferently interested. He said, however:

"For some length of time previous to May 1 there were no Americans in Manila, and on May 3, when it has been said the plan was devised and put into operation to embarrass the Government and reserve to friends a large control of the best mining region of the archipelago if Spain should be obliged to yield the islands permanently, I was with Admiral Dewey's fleet, having come with him from Hongkong, and did not go ashore for several days after the memorable battle of Manila Bay. The Spanish officials to whom Capt. Burritt refers in his report are unknown to me, and I most emphatically deny the whole story."

Condition of Guam Islanders.

MANILA, Dec. 24.—Officers of the United States cruiser Newark, which has returned from the investigation into the circumstances into the disaster that befell the United States auxiliary cruiser Yosemite off the Island of Guam, say there were supplies enough available when the Newark left to last three weeks, and that the inhabitants would then be dependent upon supplies sent from Cavite. They also report that the soil will produce rice and corn by April, although at present everything wears a forlorn aspect.

"DYNAMITE" DRISCOLL DEAD.

Succumbs to Cancer of the Tongue in a Boston Hospital.

BOSTON, Dec. 24.—John D. Driscoll, better known as "Dynamite" Driscoll, died to-day at the City Hospital. Mr. Driscoll went to the hospital last Thursday to be treated for cancer of the tongue, walking there from his home.

Mr. Driscoll was seventy years old, and was born in this country. He was a great friend of John Mitchel, O'Donovan Rossa, Charles S. Parnell, Michael Davitt, and all the prominent Irish patriots. During the civil war he served in Company F, Ninth Massachusetts Volunteers. He had held several minor city offices.

RARE BOOKS FOR COLUMBIA.

Holland Society Will Deposit Its Entire Collection with the University.

The Holland Society of New York has decided to deposit with Columbia University its entire library, consisting of a collection of books and pamphlets, most of them in the Dutch language, and many of them old and valuable. The nucleus of the library is a collection of 258 volumes of the works of Grotus, the famous Dutch jurist, theologian, statesman, and poet, and of books relating to him, which were presented in 1890 to the society by Robert B. Roosevelt, who was at that time its President. Prof. William Henry Carpenter of the Columbia Germanic Department says the collection is unique in America. It contains numerous first editions of great rarity. Among the books are some beautiful examples of Dutch typography of the seventeenth century, when the printing art stood high in the Netherlands, and there are several Elzeviers. This collection, of which there is a special printed catalogue, covers the whole period from the beginning of the seventeenth century down to the present time, and will prove of distinct value in the work of the students in the Germanic Department of Columbia.

WON'T FORGIVE HIS WIFE.

Foisting of a Stranger's Baby on Him Too Much for Goodheart.

Joseph Goodheart, the expressman whose wife, Gertrude, last week tried to deceive him by passing off another woman's baby as her own, was again in the West Side Court yesterday and still refused to live with his wife or have anything more to do with her.

Mrs. Goodheart stuck to her story, originally told to Magistrate Mayo, as to her having taken the baby from an unknown woman on Eighth Avenue. At the last hearing of the case the Magistrate had advised the expressman's wife to take the infant to the Out Door Poor Department. Yesterday she told the Magistrate she had not taken the baby there, because on last Saturday afternoon the mother of the child had called and taken it away. Mrs. Goodheart had just told the reporters, however, that she had taken the baby to the Out Door Poor Department, as advised by the Court.

Goodheart will pay his wife $3 a week for living expenses.

LONGEST WAY THE CHEAPEST.

Steamer Therefore Abandons Short Route from Tacoma to Liverpool.

TACOMA, Washington, Dec. 24.—The British ship Glenlochy, now in the harbor, is to establish a precedent in the exportation of Pacific Coast wheat. She is to load with 221,160 bushels in sack, and will sail for Liverpool via the Suez Canal, being the first steam vessel to go from Tacoma to Europe over that route with wheat.

There is a difference in favor of the Cape Horn route of 1,800 miles, but the price of fuel at the coaling ports in South America is so much higher that it is believed it will be economy to steam the additional 1,800 miles. The Glenlochy will coal in Japan and at Port Said, which it expects to reach in sixty-five days or less.

FOUND TRACES OF NEPHITES.

Mormons Discover Ruins in South America Upholding Their Traditions.

PHOENIX, Ariz., Dec. 24.—Three months ago a party of Mormon students began a three years' trip into South America, to search for traces of the last survivors of the Nephites, believed by the Mormons to have been the first people of this country.

Benjamin Gluff, President of the Brigham Young Academy, in Provo, Utah, who is in charge of the expedition, in a letter to a friend here, states that many prehistoric ruins have been examined by the party and evidences unearthed which tend to uphold the Mormon traditions.

Nephite, according to the Book of Mormon, was one of the associates or descendants of Nephi, a brother of Laman. The Nephites were exterminated by the Lamanites about A. D. 385.

CASUALTY COMPANY COMPLAINS.

Wants Nebraska Auditor Restrained from Revoking Its License.

LINCOLN, Neb., Dec. 24.—Attorneys for the Maryland Casualty Company of Baltimore to-day filed a petition in the United States District Court for an order to restrain State Auditor Cornell from revoking its license to do business in Nebraska, and publishing a report which it says is calculated to do it injury.

The Casualty Company alleges that for an examination of its affairs made by agents of the Auditor's office a claim for $670 in fees was made. Later the Auditor reduced this claim to $450, both of which sums are declared to be unreasonable and extortionate. The company further alleges the Auditor threatens to revoke its license and publish a report showing it to be in unsound condition unless the claims of the examiners are satisfied.

The hearing is set for Jan. 2, one day before Auditor Cornell's retirement from office.

COMMITS SUICIDE IN HONOLULU.

American Scout Shoots Himself a Day After a Woman Friend's Death.

HONOLULU, Dec. 17.—Frank P. Bennett, the well-known American scout, committed suicide here by shooting himself in the head last Thursday. His suicide followed the death by poisoning of Miss Clara Schneider, an intimate friend. Bennett was an Indian fighter of National reputation, having been one of three surviyors of the famous company of which Buffalo Bill is best known, and having taken a prominent part in running the Apache Geronimo to earth.

Miss Schneider was a domestic in tha family of Paul Neumann. A post-mortem examination showed that her death had been due to morphine poisoning. On the night before Miss Schneider's death she left her home, it is said, for the purpose of meeting Bennett. She did not come home until early the next morning, and was not seen alive again except for a few moments at the last. The post-mortem indicated that morphine had been taken with some food.

Bennett shot himself the day after the girl's death. His body was not found until three days later.

IS "RIGHT UP TO DEVERY"

Chairman Nixon Blames Police for Violations of Law.

SAYS CHIEF IS RESPONSIBLE

Satisfied that Every Disorderly House in the City Could Be Closed Within a Few Hours.

The Tammany Committee for the Suppression of Vice met yesterday afternoon in the Germania Bank Building, the Bowery and Spring Street, in what they said was the most important meeting held since the committee was appointed. At the close of the meeting Chairman Lewis Nixon gave out a statement that, after full investigation on the part of the committee, it had been found that every gambling house and poolroom and every disorderly house in the city could be closed within a few hours if Chief Devery so desired.

The committee met shortly after 3 o'clock and, as usual, held its "open meeting" behind closed doors. A number of ward men, representing Police Captains, were in an anteroom. As was later given out, these men were present to protest that certain numbers of houses, which were specified as being disorderly on the list which the committee sent to the Police Department, were in reality decent and respectable places, suffering only from evil reputations of the past. What these men testified to before the committee is not known, except from the statement given out by Mr. Nixon, for the men were called into the room from which reporters were excluded.

At the close of the secret session the committee came into the anteroom where the reporters were.

"The committee will please come to order," the Chairman said. Then Mr. Nixon said:

"The committee has been waited on by representatives of the Police Department in relation to the list of disorderly places which were furnished the department. I use the term 'disorderly' in its fullest sense. They make the claim that the supposed disorderly places were found, upon investigation, to be either closed or places that are perfectly respectable, suffering, possibly, only from the odium of a former reputation. In short, the police disclaim knowledge of disorderly conditions in these places.

"It is the intention of this committee to take its testimony before the Grand Jury, if necessary. We are not here to supply evidence for the police, which they can procure for themselves.

"All of the places that were reported to the police have been open for some time, even after the list was submitted to the Chief. This evidence could have been obtained by the police as well as by the committee. As a matter of fact, a sub-committee had to wait on the Chief of Police, who read the list submitted and issued orders to all his Captains to close the disorderly places. The list was given to the police merely to leave no loophole out of which to escape."

Mr. Nixon then asked whether there were any complainants who desired to be heard, and there being none, on motion of Commissioner Keller, the meeting was adjourned until next Monday. After the meeting, Mr. Nixon gave out the following interview with himself, which he read from notes:

"The list of suspicious places handed to the police is by no means complete, and we shall be guided by developments as to how and when we shall make our list public. My object is to close such places, and by so doing to demonstrate to their owners that those who took money from them for protection, lack the power to protect.

"No matter what party is in office, about the same set of men will be found farming out immunity. But the great majority of Democratic voters are not willing to see their party sacrificed to the greed of a few corrupt men. Every department in the City Government, except the Police Department, is doing good work.

"I am satisfied by what I find that the Chief of Police could close up every disorderly house in the city within a few hours if he so desired. Our motive now is to show that these places are not only not protected by the Tammany organization, but further than that, to show that a system which has existed during this and previous administrations can be stopped if the Police Department can be induced to act.

"A single-headed Commission, with power, can remedy the evil of existing abuses, not only for a time, but permanently. A bi-partisan Police Commission and Excise Department are the sores of the body of cities, and they should be reformed jointly, and they will be when the people come to a full knowledge of the iniquities which owe their existence to them."

"How is it that the Committee of Five has been able to discover all the disorderly houses within three weeks, when the entire police force of 7,000 men has not been able to see corruption within as many years?" was asked.

"That is exactly what we are trying to find out. As to our methods of discovering vice, we rely almost solely on letters that are sent us naming the places in question. The writers of these letters do not wish their names published, but usually the sources of information are reliable, we find upon investigation. Some of the letters are senseless, others are trivial, and others groundless, but for the most part the communications come from representative and solid citizens. The letters include some sent by employers who protest that their clerks have lost money in gambling houses, some from parents who complain of the losses of their sons, and some even from parents who say that their children, far under age, have lost money in poolrooms in different parts of the city."

"How is it that the meetings which Mr. Croker said would be public are held in secret session?" was asked.

"The early part of our sessions is always taken up with the consideration and discussion of letters which, as already said, must be treated as confidential, as otherwise the people would refuse to write and enter upon the notoriety of the crusade."

"What is your opinion of Chief Devery at this stage of your investigation?"

"It is enough to say that we have put it right up to Mr. Devery, and that it is for him to act. It is the Police Department that is at fault. As far as Tammany is concerned, after a careful investigation I have found just about fifteen unscrupulous men who are in the organization and in the party simply for what money they can make out of it. Men of this kind will creep into any party, and the pity of it is that they cannot be found out before they have done the mischief."

A delegation of reporters then called at Police Headquarters to inform Chief Devery of what Mr. Nixon had said, and to get his opinion on the fact that Tammany had evidently cut clear of the Police Department, and would have nothing more to do with it. Commissioners Sexton and Ahearn were with the Chief, discussing the situation of which they had been informed by telephone. Neither of the Commissioners would talk. When Chief Devery was asked if he had anything to say, he stated:

"I have not a word to say. Positively, I decline to discuss the situation."

The Chief went on duty yesterday, after a vacation, remaining on duty until after 6 P. M. Among his callers during the day were Senator Thomas F. Grady and Registrar Isaac Fromme. "I have come back to do police duty," he said, "and I am glad to be back."

In the early afternoon there was a rumor that another shake-up of Police Captains had been decided upon by Chief Devery. "Nothing very dreadful is going to happen; wait," was Chief Devery's reply when asked about it. At 6 P. M. the following transfers were announced:

Capt. Richard Walsh, Wakefield to Eldridge Street.

Capt. Stephen O'Brien, Eldridge Street to Wakefield.

This puts Capt. Walsh in command of the Pro-Cathedral district and ex-Chief Detective O'Brien goes back to the suburb of Mount Vernon. Capt. O'Brien is on a vacation which ends with the year. Chief Devery authorized the statement that the transfers were designed to put a commander of full rank in the "Red Light" district, as he did not feel safe with it under the charge of a Sergeant.

The Commissioners were anxious to make Christmas gifts of Captaincies to Sergeants who are eligible for promotion, and waited until late in the afternoon before deciding that if promotions were made this year they would be New Year's gifts. It was explained that the eligibility of Sergeants from which eighteen Captains could be made—there are, however, only fifteen vacancies—was "held up" partly by the Municipal Civil Service Commission and partly by the Corporation Counsel.

Commissioners Sexton, Abell, and Hess denied yesterday that any plan to prefer charges against Chief Devery had been discussed by them or in their presence or that they knew of such a plan. "Any such action," said Mr. Abell, "would have to be before and done by the Police Board. Nothing of the kind has been considered."

"It's Christmas Day to-morrow," said President York, smiling, "and I will not talk of police business in any way. I have nothing to say, and shall have nothing to say on any subject relating to the police situation."

Ex-Judge W. M. K. Olcott, who is to prosecute Capt. Herlihy on charges growing out of the condition of the Pro-Cathedral district, said that the trial would start with the examination of the prosecution's witnesses on Friday and that he did not care to discuss the trial in advance.

HAD TRUANT FIANCE ARRESTED.

Miss Hattie Hohne Says Clark Defrauded Her Out of $1,000.

According to evidence brought out yesterday in the Jefferson Market Police Court John Garfield Clark, now of 246 West Twenty-fourth Street, was the star boarder at the establishment of Miss Hattie Hohne, at 127 Madison Avenue. He made love to his landlady, and about a year ago they became engaged. Yesterday Clark was arraigned in court charged by Miss Hohne with having defrauded her of $1,000 as a result of their plighted troth.

The complainant, who is thirty years old and good looking, testified that shortly after the engagement of herself and Clark, the bridegroom-to-be said he wanted to purchase a certain hotel at a cost of $15,000. He told her he had $10,000 and knew where he could get $4,000 more. The extra $1,000 was what was keeping him up nights worrying. He asked her, she said, to let him have the money.

She raised the $1,000 by mortgaging her furniture. Her brother came back with the required amount in his packet, but objected to surrendering the money before the marriage took place. Clark insisted that everything would be all right and that they would get married on the following day. Miss Hohne, thoroughly convinced that he was sincere, took the $1,000 and went out with Clark to purchase the new hotel.

They drove in a cab to a lawyer's office, as she thought, and signed some sort of a paper. Clark got the $1,000 and, according to her charge, as they were driving home Clark excused himself on some pretext or other and sent her home in the cab minus the $1,000.

She never saw her sweetheart again until yesterday, when she met him in court. He had been served with a warrant after an exceedingly lively race with detectives. He was held in $2,000 bail.

ACCUSES BOY WHO SAW KRUEGER

Kelly Says Young Has "Swelled Head" Since He Went to Pretoria.

"Ever since this fellow returned from his visit to the Boer President at Pretoria he's been troubled with swelled head," declared Michael Kelly, a billiard parlor keeper, appearing yesterday in the Adams Street Police Court, Brooklyn, as complainant against Frank Smith, an American District messenger, whom he charged with malicious mischief.

Young Smith, who lives at 117 Congress Street, Brooklyn, is the messenger who went from this country to Pretoria with the message of the Philadelphia schoolboys to President Krüger. The lad is now a clerk in the service of the Western Union Company, having been promoted after his return from the Transvaal. Kelly accused the boy of throwing a paving stone through one of the show cases at his billiard room, Atlantic Avenue and Clinton Street.

Smith voluntarily appeared in court and denied the charge of malicious mischief. He was paroled pending a hearing on Friday.

LODGING KEEPER SENTENCED.

Bartel Gets Thirty Days for Violation of the Sanitary Code.

The first conviction under the lodging house division of the Sanitary Code was obtained yesterday in Special Sessions in the case of Otto Bartel of 4 Bowery, who was sentenced to thirty days in the City Prison. Chief Sanitary Inspector Michael B. Feeney of the Board of Health was the complainant. It was shown that Bartel, who keeps a lodging house at the address given, lodged from 225 to 250 persons nightly, and that many of his guests were put in the cellar.

Examination of the lodging house, it was shown, proved the facilities to be inadequate for the accommodation of one-third the number kept there nightly.

BROOKLYN WATER QUESTION.

Mayor Will Give a Public Hearing on Thursday Morning.

Mayor Van Wyck has sent to J. Hampden Dougherty a letter apprising him that on Thursday morning he will give a hearing to all those who desire to be heard on the matter of the Brooklyn water supply. This action of the Mayor is in answer to a letter sent to him by Mr. Dougherty urging a hearing when the Commissioner of the Water Supply, the Engineer of the Water Department, the Deputy Commissioner for Brooklyn, and the Borough engineers might be present, and efficent measures concerted, as Mr. Dougherty says, to save the borough from disaster.

The agitation has been carried on by the Manufacturers' Association and the Brooklyn League, and they request the citizens of Brooklyn to attend the hearing and make the meeting a representative one.

A POLICEMAN'S RUSE.

Sent Drunken Woman to the Hospital to Avoid Appearing in Court.

Policeman William Burns saw an unidentified woman, supposed to be Mary Smith, fall to the sidewalk early yesterday morning, and, running to her assistance, found her unconscious from alcohol. He first thought of taking her to the station, but changed his mind and called up an ambulance.

When the surgeon arrived Burns explained that he was going to be married today, and if he took the prisoner to the station he would have to attend court this morning, and his wedding would be delayed. The doctor offered his congratulations and drove off with the patient.

DR. HAMILTON'S CHARGES.

Commissioner Keller Says He Believes They Are Unfounded.

Regarding the published charges against two of Bellevue's physicians—Dr. Fitch, one of the examiners in lunacy cases, and Dr. Austin Flint—by Dr. Allen McLane Hamilton, Commissioner of Charities Keller said yesterday:

"Dr. Hamilton came to me and said there was a combination existing between Dr. Fitch and Dr. Flint, whereby patients coming to the ward for insane persons at Bellevue who had money were turned away from the hospital and into the private practice of those two gentlemen. Of course, what those gentlemen charge in their private practice is no concern of mine, nor do I personally stand for the charges made against Drs. Flint and Fitch. I am merely repeating what Dr. Hamilton told me. I don't think there is any foundation for them. Dr. Flint is not the sort of man to engage in that sort of work.

"A few days ago a Swede came to me and made a charge of extortion against Dr. Wildman, Dr. Fitch's associate in the examination of insane patients at Bellevue. Investigation disclosed the fact that the complainant had a brother at the hospital, and that Dr. Wildman charged him the regulation fee of $25. The complainant had been told by Dr. Wildman that the patient was an alien and consequently could not be received at the Manhattan State Asylum. There was nothing in the charge and I let it drop."

Commissioner Keller said he had not and would not ask aid from the State Board of Charities in the matter of investigating the alleged abuses in the hospital.

To Build Two Battleships.

QUINCY, Mass., Dec. 24.—The Fore River Iron Company to-night received a substantial Christmas gift in the shape of a letter from Secretary of the Navy Long to Manager O. F. Wellington of the company, formally notifying him that the contract for building two first-class battleships for the Government had been awarded to the concern.

PERRY TIFFANY BANKRUPT

Son-in-Law of Theodore Havemeyer Owes $83,897.

Nominal Assets $66,200, but Value Unknown—Owes for Clothing, Wine, Cabs, and Theatre Tickets.

Perry Tiffany of 152 Madison Avenue has declared himself a bankrupt, and in a petition filed by him yesterday, he places the amount of his liabilities at $83,897 and his nominal assets at $66,200. Mr. Tiffany was formerly Vice President of the Sterling Supply and Manufacturing Company, railway supplies, the stock of which, at unknown values, figures largely in his assets.

Of the liabilities there are secured $41,400, unsecured $8,211, and there is accommodation paper to the amount of $34,277. Among the secured creditors are D. M. Swaney of 117 Wall Street, $25,000, secured by 250 shares of stock of the Sterling Company, value unknown; First National Bank of Hoboken, $9,130, secured by stock of the Sterling-Meeker Company, value unknown, and Isabella B. Tiffany of Hempstead, $2,557, secured by stock of the same company.

Of the accommodation paper there was a note for the Metropolitan Register Company of $25,000, made by J. Henry Carson, and indorsed by C. Albert Stevens, O. H. P. Belmont, and Mr. Tiffany. One of the holders of the note was the Knickerbocker Trust Company. It is stated that Messrs. Belmont, Carson, and Stevens have paid the note in part, and they may have a claim in subrogation thereon in place of the Knickerbocker Trust Company. Another piece of accommodation paper was a note for the Sterling Company of $5,500.

Mr. Tiffany places among his assets stock of the Metropolitan Register Company, par value, $20,500; stock of the Bonita Mining Company, par value, $45,500; equity in 420½ shares of common and 210¼ shares preferred stock of the Sterling-Meeker Company, and 250 shares of the Sterling Supply and Manufacturing Company, all pledged for loans, with no equity remaining; two shares of the Manatee Fullers' Earth Mining and Manufacturing Company, nominal value, $200; one-third interest in the Standard Drop Forging Company of Boonton, N. J., said to have been sold out at receiver's sale, and one-quarter interest in the estate of William Tiffany, (insolvent.)

Among Mr. Tiffany's personal debts appears $2,069 which he owes for books, $887 to five creditors for clothing, $100 to three creditors for furnishing goods, $223 for shoes, $326 for flowers, $410 for wines, $690 owing to seven restaurant keepers, $101 for theatre tickets, $32 for cab hire, and $315 for jewelry. He owes the Waldorf-Astoria $195; Delmonico's $83, the Hoffman House $102, Rector's $17, and the Casino in Central Park $114.

Mr. Tiffany is a grandson of Commodore Perry, and the son of George Tiffany of Baltimore. He married Marie, a daughter of the late Theodore Havemeyer. His brother William, who was with the Rough Riders, died in Boston after his return from Cuba. Mr. Tiffany is a member of the Country, Knickerbocker, Calumet, and Meadow Brook Hunt Clubs.

IT WAS LUIGI'S SWAN SONG.

Tenor After Midnight Serenade Under His Lady Love's Window Sent a Bullet Into His Brain.

It was the swan song of Luigi Lombarti, first tenor, and his whole sad heart was in his voice. Under the window of the woman he loved the last notes of a Sicilian serenade trembled on his lips, and broke, and then the listening girl behind the lattice was startled by a shot and a cry of pain. The serenade had ended, and with it the life of Luigi Lombarti. He had sent a bullet into his brain.

It was shortly after midnight yesterday morning when Luigi, a young carpenter, living at Third Avenue and Thirty-first Street, Brooklyn, visited the home of Giovanni Deparlo, at 207 Thirty-second Street, that borough. With him were three friends, the four forming a quartet with a reputation locally. Luigi, the first tenor, loved Josephine Deparlo, the nineteen-year-old daughter of Giovanni Deparlo, and she had loved him in return, but there had opened a gulf between them when she learned that in Italy he had a wife and child, and Luigi was inconsolable.

With his friends he went to her home early yesterday morning. Giovanni Deparlo had long retired. The quartet began their serenade and Giovanni awoke. He was in no mood for serenades and he told the serenaders plainly that they should seek their beds.

"Let us sing but one song to Josephine," begged Luigi.

"No; the girl is asleep, and you must go away," returned Papa Deparlo, firmly.

Slowly Luigi and his friends walked away. Luigi did not speak. He was more depressed in spirit than ever.

"I shall go back," he said suddenly at the corner, a strange light in his eyes. "I shall sing to her one song, and she will hear me. It will be the last that I shall sing to her."

The significance of his words lost upon them, his compatons, seeking fun, went back with him.

"Shall we sing with you?" they asked when the Deparlo house was reached.

"No," said Luigi, "it shall be a solo," and he laughed in a way that chilled the others.

His voice brought Josephine to the window, but she did not gratify his gaze with a sight of her face.

As he concluded his song his horrified companions saw him draw the revolver and place the muzzle to his temple. Before they could get to him he had pulled the trigger. They summoned an ambulance surgeon, but on the way to the Norwegian Hospital Luigi died.

WILLIAM FRANCIS SAGE DEAD.

Author and Critic, Stricken with Paralysis, Expires at His Home.

The career of William Francis Sage, a playwright, dramatic critic, and journalist, ended in a sudden and tragic manner yesterday, when he was stricken with paralysis at his home, 231 East One Hundred and Tenth Street, and died a few moments later. Before breathing his last he asked that his body be cremated after his death. Interment seemed to have more terrors for him than death, for he gasped "Cremation!" with his last breath.

Shock caused by the news of the death of his sister, Mrs. Abby Sage Richardson, the authoress, who died in Rome twelve days ago, is believed to have been active in causing the fatal stroke.

Mr. Sage arose at the usual hour yesterday morning and prepared to start down town. While bending down to put his rubber overshoes on he was seized with a violent pain and called to his wife for help. He managed to regain his feet, but fell back into a chair, crying out: "Cremate! cremate!" A physician was summoned, but he could do nothing, as death had been almost instantaneous. The body will be cremated at Fresh Pond.

Mr. Sage was born in Manchester, N. H. After his education he was for a time in the stationery business with his father, in Boston. Twelve years ago he came to this city. Since that time he has been engaged here and elsewhere in writing plays, composing operas, and as a dramatic critic.

Mr. Sage had done dramatic work for The Chicago Chipper, The Dramatic Mirror, The New York Clipper, and at the time of his death was employed by the Evangelist Publishing Company of 156 Fifth Avenue.

Hanged Himself in a Cell.

Obrecht Reiber, arrested last night on complaint of his wife Mary, who said he had fired two shots at her, hanged himself in a cell in the West Twentieth Street Station. When Reiber was taken to the station he said he had not been living with his wife for some time, and that she was in the habit of coming around his house and annoying him in various ways, and that he had no intention of killing her, but hoped to frighten her away. Half an hour later he was found dead in his cell.

Arrested While in Bed.

John Meyers, alias August Muller, was arrested in bed in the lodging house at 37 Bowery last night on a charge that he had stolen about $200 worth of goods from Frederick B. Guerber of 1,070 First Avenue, about a year ago. He had in his possession eleven pawn tickets and a pocket knife with a blade five inches long.

Died While Sleeping Beside Husband.

Bridget O'Brien of 563 First Avenue died in bed last night while sleeping at the side of her husband, William. Her husband said that she had been drinking very hard for several days, and was intoxicated when she went to bed.

WANTED TO KILL MR. BOLDT.

A Bloodthirsty Waiter Falls Among Detectives and Is Locked Up.

Charles D. De Lambertre, a waiter, called at the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday afternoon and asked for the manager, George C. Boldt. He told the clerk at the desk that he was going to kill Mr. Boldt, for whom he said he had worked in Philadelphia ten years ago, and whom he declared to be a very bad man. The clerk told him to call again at night. This the man did, and there were waiting for him in the hallway two detectives, who told him that they would show him where he could find Boldt.

They then hustled him into a cab and took him post haste to the West Thirtieth Street Station, where he was locked up. On him was found a corkscrew, and he kept his hand continually in the pocket where this implement was hidden. He had a wild look in his eyes, and appeared to be either insane or laboring under the violent effects of some stimulant.

HEALER COMMITS SUICIDE.

Station Agent at Northfield Farms Kills Himself.

GREENFIELD, Mass., Dec. 24.—E. A. Read, station agent at Northfield Farms, a small place on the New London Northern Railroad, facing arrest at his home last night, fired a bullet through his head, killing himself instantly.

Deputy Sheriff E. J. Pratt had called at Read's home to arrest him on a charge of practicing medicine without being registered.

Read, who was about fifty-five years old, formerly lived at Yonkers, N. Y. He had advertised widely as a magnetic healer. The warrant for his arrest was issued at the instance of Mrs. Bodwell of Manchester, N. H., who claimed that she had forwarded money to Read, but that she failed to receive any return.

BUSINESS MAN HELD FOR MURDER

E. H. Knight of South Berwick, Me., Charged with Killing Woman.

SOUTH BERWICK, Me., Dec. 24.—Edwin H. Knight was arrested at his home at South Berwick Junction to-day on a warrant charging him with the murder of Mrs. Fannie Sprague at South Berwick, last May, and arraigned before Trial Justice Lord. Counsel for Knight announced that he would offer no defense. Accordingly the prisoner was bound over to the January term of the Supreme Court at Saco and committed to the jail at Alfred without bail.

The murder was one of the most horrible in the history of York County. The mutilated body of Fanny Sprague was found in a heap of rubbish in a barn on the Knight farm at South Berwick Junction. An attempt had been made to burn the body, but the smoke was seen and the fire extinguished by two men who were sent to the barn on an errand. After putting out the fire the men found the body. Knight is forty-one years of age, a native of South Berwick, and a successful business man.

SUCCUMBS AFTER AMPUTATION.

Train Conductor Dies as Result of the Loss of a Leg.

SUSQUEHANNA, Penn., Dec. 24.—William Carter of Paterson, N. J., a passenger conductor on the Erie Railroad, is dead as the result of the loss of one of his legs, which occurred in this place a week ago. He was injured while escorting an Oswego lady who had taken the wrong train at Binghamton to the train which would take her home. He had been in the employ of the Erie Railroad for thirty years and was very popular.

He was a veteran of the civil war and leaves a widow. The remains have been taken to Paterson.

LABOR LEADER LOCKED UP.

William Warner and Five Others in the Maryland House of Correction.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 24.—William Warner, organizer of the United Mine Workers and leader in the recent miners' strike in the Georges Creek District, entered the Maryland House of Correction yesterday to serve a term of six months' imprisonment imposed upon him by the courts of Alleghany County for participation in an assault upon non-union men during the strike. With him were five others convicted and sentenced for the same offense and six others are behind the bars of the Alleghany County Jail for shorter terms. Warner and his companions were shaved, their hair was clipped short, and stripe clothes were put upon them, as is the case with ordinary malefactors.

WILL OPPOSE KERR'S DEMAND.

PATERSON, N. J., Dec. 24.—Judge Dixon of the Supreme Court, who will preside at the trial of McAlister, Kerr, Death, and Campbell, indicted for the murder of Jennie Bosschieter, will hear argument in Jersey City on Wednesday on an application made by Kerr's counsel for a separate trial in his case. Counsel, it is understood, will claim that Kerr could not have a fair trial jointly with the other men accused on account of the confessions made by one or more of them. The counsel further alleges that Kerr was not present in the saloon at the time the drug was given to Miss Bosschieter.

Prosecutor Emly will oppose the application on the ground that separate trials would put the county to an enormous expense and entail much more work on the Prosecutor's office.

Gets Three Years for Manslaughter.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Dec. 24.—After hearing and denying a renewal of the motion for the discharge of the prisoner, Judge Phillips of the County Court to-day passed sentence on Peter Austin, who was convicted ten days ago of manslaughter in the second degree for killing his farm hand, Charles Brower, and throwing the body into an old well, fourteen years ago. Austin was sentenced to three years in Sing Sing Prison. At the same time the Judge granted a certificate of reasonable doubt and a stay of sentence, pending the action of the Court of Appeals on the question of the legality of his conviction.

Justice Beekman's Will Filed.

The will of Justice Beekman was filed for probate yesterday in the office of the Surrogate. The petition does not mention the value of the real estate, and places the value of the personalty at $20,000. Justice Beekman leaves all his estate to his wife, Isabella L. Beekman, to receive the income for her life. On her death the principal is to be divided between their four children. Mrs. Beekman, John N. Beekman, the brother of Justice Beekman, and David B. Ogden are appointed executrix and executors of the will.

Unidentified Man Found Dead in Bed.

About a week ago a young man rented a furnished room from Annie Johnson, at 310 East Twenty-fourth Street. He did not give his name. Monday night he was found lifeless in bed, and an ambulance surgeon, summoned from Bellevue, said that the man had evidently been dead for about three days and that the cause of his death was a hsmorrhage of the lungs. There was nothing among his effects that would serve to identify him. The body was taken to the Morgue.

Committed Suicide in Tompkins Square.

George Deppert, an expressman, who has made his stand near the East Fifth Street Station, killed himself last night by taking acid in Tompkins Square. Policeman LeRoy found the man writhing in the agonies of death. He told LeRoy that he had taken carbolic acid. LeRoy called an ambulance, but the man died just as the ambulance reached him.

Woman Accuses Man of Beating a Dog.

Miss Jenn. Ballard, living at 275 West One Hundred and Fortieth Street, caused the arrest of Alfred Patta of 183 West Twenty-sixth Street last night at Twentieth Street and Seventh Avenue on a charge of beating a dog. The woman said she saw the man strike the animal. Patta was bailed later, but the dog, which had been taken to the station, was kept there.

Robbers Burned Their Victim.

BONHAM, Texas, Dec. 24.—At Gober, a few miles south of here, J. J. Johnson, a prominent farmer, was murdered by robbers. His body was found in the yard badly bruised and the flesh burned from his breast and arms. It is supposed the bandits burned their victim in an effort to force him to tell where his money was hidden. Two arrests have been made.

FILIPINO PARTY FOR PEACE

Federals Ask Natives to Work Toward That End.

Want Philippines to Become States of the Union—Send Expression of Good-Will to Mr. McKinley.

MANILA, Dec. 24.—The Federal Party has decided upon a new organization, and to-day published in the Spanish and Filipino evening papers an address to the Filipinos.

"The number of Filipinos who are convinced that the time for peace has come increases daily," says the address. "The object of the Federal Party is the reunion of all Filipinos who truly wish for peace, and who are disposed to work for it. It appeals to those who will attempt to attain for the Philippines the greatest number of liberties under the application of the American Constitution.

"We call ourselves the Federal Party because, under American sovereignty, the righteous aspirations of the Philippines will be to form a part of the American federation as States of the Union."

Copies of the address have been sent into the provinces.

The Executive Committee has cabled President McKinley announcing that the organization has been perfected, and tendering an expression of good-will.

The new paragraph in the platform declaring for American recognition of the legality of some acts done by the authorities of the insurgent Government is in conformity with precedents established during the reconstruction period following the civil war in the United States.

RETURN OF TROOPS DELAYED.

Failure of Congress to Pass Army Bill Will Postpone Movement of Soldiers from the Philippines.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—As a result of a conference between the Secretary of War and Quartermaster General Ludington, it has been decided that no further action can be taken with regard to the return of the volunteers from the Philippines until Congress shall make provision for their replacement.

The War Department is considerably embarrassed by the failure of Congress to make provision before the recess for the relief of the military situation in the Philippines. Acting upon representations made by Gen. MacArthur, the department has concluded that it is absolutely necessary to maintain an army of 60,000 men in the Philippines until the current policy of establishing municipal governments throughout the archipelago has been executed. It is stated at the department that any reduction of the military strength below that figure, under existing conditions, would undoubtedly prove most disastrous to the interests of the United States.

It is expected that Congress will act promptly on the Army bill soon after it reassembles in January, but even in that event, it is said at the War Department, it will not be possible to get the fresh troops to the Philippines inside of two months' time. The general homecoming movement of the mass of the volunteers, therefore, will have to be postponed until about the first of February.

Recent cable advices from Gen. MacArthur indicate a strong desire on the part of the volunteers generally to return to the United States, and that comparatively few of them are likely to re-enlist without the most liberal inducements are offered. It is understood that Gen. MacArthur has recommended that a bounty of $250 be allowed to each soldier in the Philippines who re-enlists for another term, and the plan is said to meet with the favor of the officials of the War Department.

STILL FIGHTING IN LEYTE.

Several Americans Killed and Wounded on the Island.

MANILA, Dec. 24.—Advices from the Island of Leyte show that there is still considerable turmoil on the west coast, but that the east coast is quiet, the leaders having retired to the mountains. Lieut. Frank E. Lynch and three men of the Forty-fourth Volunteer Infantry were wounded near Ilongas, on the west coast. Two men of Company L, Forty-third Volunteer Infantry, were killed, and three of Companies L and K, together with Lieut. Louis H. Lacy, were wounded Dec. 13 near San Miguel, Northwestern Leyte.

No decided results have yet been secured by the 2,000 United States troops distributed among the coast towns of Samar.

FILIPINOS KILL A "WITCH."

Murder Woman Because They Thought She Had Occult Powers.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—News has been received at the War Department of a peculiarly atrocious murder in the Philippines, the circumstances of which were developed at the trial of six natives before a military commission at Capiz, Panay, Philippine Islands.

It appeared from the testimony that two of the prisoners were responsible for the death of the wife of one of their neighbors. With seven or eight other men, they went to the house of a native named Victor Pere and forcibly took him and his wife to the Panay River, where they bound their hands behind them and told them that their last day had come." The woman was struck with a bolo and her dead body thrown into the river. Her husband witnessed her murder, and, anticipating similar treatment, sprang into the river, and, notwithstanding his arms were pinioned, managed to reach the opposite shore.

According to the witnesses, the motive for the crime was a superstitious belief that the murdered woman was a "witch" possessed of occult powers, whereby she had, in some mysterious way, brought about the death of a neighbor's child. The two men were sentenced to be hanged, but Gen. MacArthur mitigated the sentence in each case to confinement at hard labor for twenty years, out of consideration for the exceedingly low order of intelligence and blind superstition of the accused.

Currency for the Philippines.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—President Taft of the Philippine Commission has come forward with another suggestion for the settlement of the Philippine currency question, which is now pressing urgently for adjustment. He discards the two former plans of coining something like a trade dollar and maintaining by the credit of the United States, a fixed ratio between the Mexican dollar and American gold, and proposes to adopt United States money, pure and simple, as the money of the Philippines.

WILL REFUSE TO PAY GERMANS.

United States Denies Responsibility for Losses in Cuba During the Insurrection and War.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—The German Embassy has laid before the State Department the claims of a number of German subjects for damages to their interests in Cuba as a result of the Spanish-American war and the insurrection which led up to the war itself. This action of the German Government has raised a most important issue, and the Department of State has given it the closest consideration. It has been concluded, however, that the United States Government cannot accept responsibility for the claims. They are regarded as practically the same in principle as the claim of Porto Rico against Cuba for $2,500,000 on account of a war loan.

Although in that case Gov. Allen of Porto Rico represented the United States Government in preferring the claim, that Government was obliged to deny its liability or the liability of Cuba under present conditions. The answer to the German presentation will be based upon the reply to Gov. Allen recently made.

It is known that other Governments besides Germany have claims aggregating a very large sum, all based on the Cuban insurrection and succeeding events. They will not be abandoned on account of the attitude of the United States Government, but, on the contrary, probably will be held in abeyance until such time as Cuba shall have become independent, when they will be presented directly to the Government of the island.

SUFFERING IN PORTO RICO.

Gen. Davis Denies Condition Is as Serious as Dr. Williams Says.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—Gen. Davis, when seen at the War Department concerning the report made public to-day by Dr. Williams, a contract surgeon in the Department of Porto Rico, setting forth an appalling state of affairs among the coffee planters of the island, said that from his knowledge of affairs in that section of Porto Rico, he should characterize Dr. Williams's statement as much overdrawn and exaggerated.

That there was suffering in the coffee-planting section of the country, the General said he had no doubt. The heavy losses incurred by the big hurricane, he said, could have had no result other than to greatly reduce the means of the planters who had $12,000,000 worth of coffee swept away by the big storm.

When Gen. Davis was Military Governor of the island the War Department issued rations to the people of Porto Rico, in order to help them to tide over the evil effects of the hurricane. When the Government passed under civil administration, however, the issuance of the rations was discontinued, as it was believed the islanders had sufficiently recovered.

The General said that Dr. Williams was an Acting Assistant Surgeon in the department, and accompanied a small expedition under command of Major Watt, Fifth Cavalry, which, on a march across the island, traversed the coffee-planting region. The doctor reported a bad state of affairs in this section in the way of sickness and want of food, and was asked for a fuller report by Gen. Davis. This was turned over to Gov. Allen.

MRS. DUNCAN QUITS HOME AGAIN

Thinks Rhode Hall Too Dull, New York Too Gay, So Goes to Perth Amboy.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Dec. 24.—Mrs John Duncan of Rhode Hall, who two weeks ago ran away with a farmhand named Matthews and her husband's check book, but returned after three days' absence, and was forgiven by Mr. Duncan, has again gone away.

Rhode Hall is a dull, unpicturesque, and uneventful place down in the sand dunes of Middlesex County, where rainy days are the only excitement. The monotony of existence appears to have been too much for her. Mr. Duncan, it is said, offered to sell the farm and move to New York, but his wife thought it unwise to go to extremes, and wanted to move to Perth Amboy, N. J. The dispute over the merits of these two cities resulted in the final disagreement, and Mrs. Duncan left, taking her baby girl with her and leaving her two sons with their father.

She is now in Perth Amboy, where, it is said, she will apply for a divorce.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST.—Fair and colder.

During the past twenty-four hours there has been rain in the Atlantic Coast States and light snow in the upper lake region, the Upper Mississippi and Missouri Valleys; elsewhere east of the Rocky Mountains the weather has been fair. Temperatures are ten to twenty degrees lower in the lake region and along the western slope of the Alleghany Mountains. In the extreme West they are somewhat higher. Generally fair weather is indicated Tuesday and Wednesday over all districts, except portions of the lake region, where light snow will probably continue. It will be colder Tuesday in the Middle Atlantic States, New England, and warmer in the northern portion of the Central West. It will be warmer Wednesday in the Upper Mississippi Valley and western upper lake region.

On the Atlantic Coast the winds will be light to fresh and mostly westerly.

	—Weather Bureau.— 1899.	1900.	TIMES. 1900.

Corresponding date for last twenty years	33

The maximum temperature yesterday was 56 degrees at 2:30 P. M. The minimum temperature was 46 degrees at 10 P. M. The barometer at 8 A. M. registered 29.86, and at 8 P. M. 29.89. The humidity at 8 A. M. was 100 and at 8 P. M. 66.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

JOLIET, Ill., Dec. 24.—The Fox Pressed Steel Car Works, one of the largest industries in Joliet, was nearly destroyed by fire early to-day. Two hundred men will be thrown out of work. It is impossible to get definite figures on the loss and insurance, but it is thought all the machinery, valued at $100,000, is ruined. The burned building can be replaced for about $25,000.

HAY-PAUNCEFOTE TREATY

Two Copies of Amendment Will Be Sent to England.

British Foreign Office Says Recent Editorials Are Unauthorized and Uninspired.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—The State Department has decided to send the amendments to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty to the British Government through two channels, one copy being transmitted to Lord Pauncefote, and the other through Ambassador Choate at London, who will present it to the Foreign Office.

It is the understanding that the State Department will make no representations whatever as to the changes made in the treaty; the Senate amendments will be allowed to speak for themselves, and the action of the department in notifying them to the British Government will be purely formal. As the papers leave New York on to-morrow's mail steamer, they should reach London about New Year's Day, so that the negotiations certainly will extend over into the next century.

It can be authoritatively stated that there has been no change whatever in the shape of written notes or oral communications between the State Department and the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica that has developed a threat on the part of those Governments to refuse assent to the construction of a canal, in view of the action of the United States Senate upon the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. All that is officially known of the attitude of the two Governments mentioned is that their representatives here, Señors Corea and Calvo, thoroughly approved of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty as the basis for the canal construction. Whether or not the changes made in that convention will affect their attitude is unknown.

The impression prevails that, not being called upon to come to a decision on this point, until the British Government shall have passed upon the Senate amendments, the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica will not anticipate that action by any declaration at this stage.

The British Government has not up to this time given the slightest indication as to its purpose on the amended treaty, and it is understood that the subject will not be taken up by the British Cabinet until the draft of the amended instrument and the advices of the British Ambassador at Washington are received. The general results have been briefly summarized in cablegrams to the London authorities, but in a matter of this magnitude they would not act until they were in possession of all the data by mail.

Under these circumstances it is evident that to-day's utterances of the London press to the effect that Great Britain will stand firmly on the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, while indicating the popular, and to some extent the official trend of opinion, do not announce a policy which has assumed any definite sanction thus far on the part of the British Government.

The Nicaraguan Minister was asked today as to the report that he had protested in behalf of Nicaragua against the amended form of the treaty. He said he did not care to discuss the matter in its present stage. But he pointed out the unlikelihood that Nicaragua or Costa Rica would protest while the matter was one of domestic policy. Later on, if it assumed the concrete form of a proposition to be submitted to Nicaragua and Costa Rica, it would be for them to say whether it was acceptable or not, but in the meantime it was hardly likely that there would be any protest or other action concerning a subject still in its creative stages in this country and in Great Britain, and not yet before Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

It also can be stated, not on Mr. Corea's authority, but as a fact, that the Nicaraguan Government has not up to this time defined its attitude on the amended document. Mr. Corea forwarded it with full advices, but as the Senate acted only a few days ago, there has not yet been time for the papers to get before President Zelaya's Cabinet.

It appears to be the accepted view, however, in Central American diplomatic quarters, that the Senate confined its consideration to the interests of the United States and other maritime powers, and failed to take into much account the interests of those countries most vitally concerned by having the waterway through their territory,

---

LONDON, Dec. 24.—It was asserted at the British Foreign Office to-day that all the editorial comment in The London Times today and other English papers on the Nicaragua Canal treaty is entirely unauthorized and not inspired by the Foreign Office. To use official language:

"England has two many irons in the fire to take up the Nicaragua Canal matter at present. She has received no official communication on the subject, nor has she given it as yet any official consideration.

The London Times, in an editorial this morning on President McKinley's decision to submit the Hay-Pauncefote treaty to Great Britain, reproached him with "shifting a dangerous responsibility on the British Government," and said:

"The President must bear the responsibility for any friction that may ensue. The amended treaty is a bargain to which we cannot agree and to which no reasonable American who takes the trouble to reflect upon our side of the question can expect us to agree.

"When Senator Lodge announced that Americans expect Europe to 'keep out' of America, he forgot that England is a great North American power, and means to remain such a power.

"If the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is not adopted in a form acceptable to us, we shall stand quietly upon our indubitable rights under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, rights which cannot be affected by any action the American Senate may choose to take."

MORE BRITISH PRESS COMMENT.

Daily Chronicle Says Dangerous Dilemma Confronts the Government.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—The Standard, referring to the canal difficulty, this morning expresses a hope that President McKinley will "show himself wiser than the inconsiderate Senate."

The Daily Chronicle bluntly admits that "the Nicaragua cloud has become very serious." It sees no compromise course between allowing things to slide, thus "causing another miserable loss to our honor and reputation," and an unconditional refusal of the new amendment. Assuming the latter alternative to be adopted, The Daily Chronicle asks:

"What force has Lord Salisbury to back up a refusal? Our army is shut up in South Africa and China, and our navy is needed to protect communications with both. Seldom in its stormy career has the Conservative Government been placed in a more dangerous dilemma."

German Opinion of Senate's Action.

BERLIN, Dec. 24.—The National Zeitung, a journal usually friendly to the United States, discussing the rejection of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty in its original form by the Senate, says: "The incident means such a slap at the Executive as can scarcely be found not only in the history of the United States, but in the Parliamentary history of the world. Presumably the treaty is not now acceptable to Great Britain."

THE UNITED SERVICE.

Army.

Special to The New York Times.

Lieut. Col. Henry G. Sharpe, Assistant Commissary General of Subsistence, and Major John Van R. Hoff, Surgeon, are detailed as members of the examining board convened at the War Department, Nov. 15, vice Major Charles Bird, Quartermaster, relieved, and Major George E. Bushnell, Surgeon, heretofore relieved. Capt. Barrington K. West, Commissary of Subsistence, will report to Lieut. Col. Sharpe, President of the board, at such time as he may be required by the board for examination to determine his fitness for promotion.

Capt. Edwin B. Babbitt, Ordnance Department, is detailed as a member of the board of officers appointed Sept. 6, vice Capt. Ira MacNutt, Ordnance Department, relieved.

Movements of Naval Vessels.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—The Hartford has sailed from La Guayra to Curacoa.

The cruiser Albany has sailed from Cavite for Hongkong to be docked, for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the injuries, if any, received by the ship through touching bottom in Subig Bay last week.

AFFAIRS IN TUTUILA.

Samoans Ask for the Passage of Laws—Mataafa Wants Chiefs to Give Him Presents.

TUTUILA, Samoa, Dec. 9.—Gov. Tilley has gone to New Zealand with the Abarenda to get supplies of coal and to have the ship repaired. Lieut. Commander E. J. Dorn of the Abarenda is now in charge of the station. Previous to leaving for New Zealand Gov. Tilley made official visits to all the districts. He was accompanied by Judge E. W. Gurr, Secretary for Native Affairs. District meetings were held at the leading centres. At these meetings all the native officials, native chiefs, and talking men were present. Highest tributes of praise and thanks were unanimously given by the people to Gov. Tilley and to the United States Government for the protection now afforded them. At each district meeting the Samoans passed resolutions recommending to the Government the passage of the following laws:

1. The raising of revenues by taxing the Samoans for native affairs.

2. The abolishment of the custom of presenting large numbers of fine mats and property at marriages and deaths for distribution among the friends attending the marriage or a funeral rite.

3. The prohibition of the custom of a whole village or district taking a malaga (journey) and billeiting themselves on other towns and districts for an indefinite period.

Some trouble has been caused by the differences and disputes between the local missionary societies, one of which is the Mormon. It became necessary to enact a law enabling a settlement of disputes and a Sunday ordinance is now in force.

Mataafa of Upolu does not seem to realize that the German Government has supreme control of the Government of Upolu and Savii and that the United States has that of Tutuila. He has written a letter to the chiefs of Tutuila inviting them to attend a gathering of the whole of the Samoan Government at his place on Mulinuu, in Upolu, and to bring presents which may be construed as tributes. The Tutuila chiefs have strongly resented the invitation.

The German Government is collecting all the back taxes prior to the hoisting of the flag at Apia.

The money for the guns surrendered by the Malietoa and Mataafa factions is in Apia, and the Samoans are awaiting payment, but there are some disputes as to the manner of paying out. The German Government wishes to do the whole through their Treasury, but there are many natives who are to receive a considerable share of the money now under America's protection.

FRENCH AMNESTY BILL.

Amendment Adopted in the Senate by Big Majority.

PARIS, Dec. 24.—The Senate this evening adopted the amendment to the Amnesty bill by a vote of 201 to 11, after an exhortation by the Premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, to pass the measure and "deliver the country from the nightmare of the Dreyfus affair."

THE FRENCH SHORE QUESTION.

Newfoundland Cabinet May Refuse to Renew the Modus Vivendi.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Dec. 24.—The Colonial Cabinet has decided to await action by the Imperial Government before determining upon a policy with respect to the renewal of the French shore modus vivendi, when it expires next Monday.

The initiative will lie with Joseph Chamberlain, Imperial Secretary of State for the Colonies, who must either make another treaty with France or call upon the colony to renew the modus vivendi.

Should the latter course be adopted by Mr. Chamberlain the colony's opportunity will come; for by refusing to renew Mr. Bond will force Mr Chamberlain into an impossible position or be able to dictate ample concessions.

OFFICE IS NOT FOR QUIGG.

He Says He Is Not a Candidate to Head Republican County Committee.

Lemuel Ely Quigg will not be the next President of the Republican County Committee. He is in no sense a candidate for the place, and two of his closest friends told a TIMES reporter yesterday that he would not accept the position under any circumstances. When Mr. Quigg gave way to Gen. Francis V. Greene last Summer, when there was a good deal of criticism of Mr. Quigg's acts, ex-Senator F. S. Gibbs remarked:

"In less than six months the men who have been clamoring for the retirement of Quigg will be begging him to resume the place." In a measure that prophecy has been fulfilled, because a poll of the County Committee by TIMES reporters shows more than 75 per cent. of the membership in favor of the re-election of Mr. Quigg.

John Proctor Clarke, one of the members, declared in the Fifth Avenue Hotel: "I want no office, but I have friends I want to favor, and when it comes down to patronage seeking, Lem Quigg can get there oftener and sooner than any other man I know of. He seldom sought anything for himself or his district, but he could find places and fill them. There are other men on the committee who would want to log everything for themselves. I am for Quigg if he will take the place."

A TIMES reporter saw Mr. Quigg yesterday, and called his attention to reports in circulation. Mr. Quigg, who is greatly improved in health, said:

"I do not want the position of President of the County Committee. I am in no sense a candidate. It is true that I saw Senator Platt at his office, on Broadway, to-day, but the subject of the Presidency of the committee was not even broached. Senator Platt well understands that I don't want the place. It is equally true that I was down town earlier than usual, but it should be remembered that I only returned from Cuba on Saturday, and that to-morrow is Christmas Day."

Mr. Quigg declined to further discuss the matter, but his friends say that he feels that he would not care to fill an executive office, such as President of the County Committee, while the Republican organization is under the control of up-State politicians.

It is the opinion of the best-informed local Republicans that William H. Ten Eyck, Chairman of the Executive Committee, will be elected to succeed Gen. Greene at the meeting of the County Committee on Thursday. He does not want to, but the exigencies of the situation may demand his compliance.

Should Mr. Ten Eyck succeed in not being forced to accept, ex-Surrogate James M. Varnum is the most probable selection.

Senator Platt said last night that Mr. Quigg would not be Gen. Greene's successor, but he would not say that Mr. Quigg's re-election had not been considered.

WILL SEE ODELL INAUGURATED.

Many of His Fellow-Townsmen Intend to Go to Albany.

NEWBURG, Dec. 24.—Fully 1,000 Newburg people will go to Albany Jan. 1 to see their fellow-townsman, Benjamin B. Odell, Jr., inaugurated Governor. Among the organizations that will take part in the parade are the Governor's Guard, Washington Steamer Company No. 4, the Tenth and the Fifth Separate Companies of Newburg, and the Twenty-fourth Separate Company of Middletown.

The Governor's Guard is a civic organization and numbers about a hundred men, many of whom are the personal friends of the Governor-elect. It is commanded by Capt. Joseph M. Dickey, Shipping Commissioner of New York, and Hiram B. Odell, a brother of the Governor-elect.

Bryan to Answer Cleveland.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—William J. Bryan will answer ex-President Cleveland's criticism of the Democratic Party at the annual banquet of the W. J. Bryan League of Chicago on the anniversary of the battle of New Orleans, Jan. 8. It will be Bryan's first public speech since his second defeat for the Presidency. His subject will be "Democracy."

Craving Gifts, He Hanged Himself.

William Farropp, twenty years old, employed as a coachman by William Kogel of Secaucus, N. J., hanged himself in his employer's barn yesterday. Mr. Kogel says that early in the day Farropp was called into the house, and was present during a conversation relative to Christmas presents. When his work was done he remarked to one of those in the house that no one ever gave him any Christmas presents. He cried, and then went out to the barn. A little later he was found dead. He was a confirmed smoker of cigarettes, and twenty-five empty boxes were found in his room after his death.

POPE CLOSES HOLY DOOR

Eighty Thousand People Witness Ceremony in St. Peter's.

A MAGNIFICENT SPECTACLE

Golden Trowel Used by His Holiness Was Subscribed for by the Catholics of the World.

ROME, Dec. 24.—The closing of the Holy Door took place to-day amid the utmost pomp of the Church. The entire Pontifical Court participated in the ceremonies.

The spectacle inside the vast Basilica of St. Peter was superb. The pillars of the central nave were draped with gold-embroidered scarlet cloth, and the porch under which the function took place was transformed into a magnificently decorated hall. On the left of the Holy Door was erected the Pontifical Throne, covered with red and gold. On the right hand of the door stood tribunes for royal personages, Princes, Knights of Malta, prelates, representatives of the Roman nobility, and other distinguished persons.

Inside the church every inch of space was occupied by the throng, which gathered early in the morning. A strong detachment of troops, stationed in the square in front of the Basilica, controlled the incoming crowds, who literally raced to secure the best positions.

The Pope left his apartments at 11:45 A. M., borne in the Sacred Chair, preceded by clergy with lighted candles, Bishops, Archbishops, and Cardinals, and escorted by the Pontifical Noble Guards. On his arrival at the portal of St. Peter's he alighted and entered the church through the Holy Door. As he appeared on the threshold, the solemn and silvery tones of the trumpet echoed through the edifice. The Chapter of the Vatican met him and presented to him holy water, which he sprinkled upon the congregation. Applause being forbidden, a religious silence was observed, which heightened the grandeur and impressiveness of the moment.

Borne now on the Sedia Gestatoria to the High Altar, his Holiness stepped to the ground and knelt before the most precious relics of the Catholic Church, which were displayed on the altar.

Then the procession reformed and proceeded to the Chapel of the Sacrament, where the Pontiff again knelt for some time, while the choir of the Sistine Chapel chanted psalms.

The Pope was then borne to the Holy Door, where he alighted from the Sedia Gestatoria and waited until the entire procession had passed out through the door, he leaving the church last and walking to the throne, where he seated himself. A number of sacred songs were sung by the Papal Choir, after which Leo rose and blessed all the material employed in closing the door. Then he descended from the throne, knelt before the door, and laid with the golden trowel, subscribed for by the Catholics of the world, a layer of cement, on which he placed three silk bricks bearing commemorative inscriptions. Beside the bricks he placed a casket containing gold, silver, and bronze medals and bearing the head of Leo and inscriptions recording the opening and closing of the Holy Door.

The Pope having reascended the throne, Cardinal Bishop Vanutelli, Great Penitentiary, and four other Cardinals, performed a similar ceremony of laying cement and three bricks, after which the masons employed by the Vatican closed the doorway with a canvas screen, painted to represent marble, with a cross in the centre.

The candles borne by the clergy were extinguished, the "Te Deum" was sung, and the Pontiff, having given solemn benediction, was immediately carried back to his apartments.

It is estimated that 80,000 persons were spectators of the ceremony, which lasted two hours.

The Pope was apparently not fatigued. He intoned the "Te Deum" in a resonant voice, and throughout gave evidence of being in excellent health and spirits.

The Pope on Dec. 24, 1899, solemnly inaugurated the Holy Year by performing the impressive ceremony of opening the Holy Door of St. Peter's.

The ceremony was performed in the vestibule, which was handsomely decorated, in the presence of the Papal officers, the members of the Diplomatic Corps, leading representatives of the Roman nobility, and a number of invited guests.

LORD DORMER IS DEAD.

Title Passes to Roland J. Dormer, Who Married a Native of Cairo.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—Lord Dormer died to-day.

Sir John Baptist Joseph Dormer, twelfth Lord Dormer, was born on May 22, 1830. He entered the army as a subaltern of the Royal Horse Guards, and also served in the Grenadier Guards and the Seventy-fourth Regiment of Foot. He rendered distinguished service during the Indian Mutiny and the Crimean war, and was later Inspector of Musketry for Madras and Burmah. He succeeded his father in the Baronetcy in 1871.

Lord Dormer was married three times, first to Miss Louisa Tenison, who died in 1868, and in 1871 to the Comtesse de Bueren. She died in 1883, and two years later Lord Dormer married Miss Emily Bald, daughter of a Perth landowner. There were children by his first wife only, one son and one daughter.

The son died the year of his birth, and the title passes to the late peer's nephew, Roland John Dormer, Sub-Director of the Egyptian Finance Ministry, who three years ago startled English society by marrying Mlle. Marie Eywaz, daughter of a resident of Cairo, Egypt.

Lady Antrim Coming Here.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—The White Star line steamer Cymric, bound from Liverpool for New York, will have among her passengers the Countess of Antrim and her son, Viscount Dunluce.

AMERICAN FOREMEN UNPOPULAR.

Serious Trouble Between Them and Jamaican Laborers in Ecuador.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Dec. 24.—Letters just received here from Ecuador report increasing trouble between the American foremen and the Jamaican laborers who are constructing the railroad in that country under the concession obtained by James P. McDonald & Co. of New York. As a result of the disturbances several Jamaicans have been shot and one of the American foremen had to take refuge elsewhere.

The laborers are now arming, and more serious trouble is expected.

Armenians Want America's Aid.

BOSTON, Dec. 24.—At a convention of representatives of the Armenian Revolution Federation held here to-day a resolution, which was telegraphed to President McKinley, was adopted. It called the President's attention "to the deplorable condition in which our people in Armenia are perishing," and added that they "will soon be exterminated, if a powerful hand does not come to the rescue of such a nation, which has been the champion of civilization for centuries in Asia Minor." The resolution stated that "the United States is the only nation that has been unselfish and neutral in Oriental affairs, and yet a friend of suffering races; the only nation which can terrorize the great assassin and his bloodthirsty fanatics to save the remainder of their victims from imminent bloodshed."

Oleomargarine Cases Dismissed.

SYRACUSE, Dec. 24.—Justice Frank H. Hiscock of this city to-day handed down an order granting the motion recently made by the defendants in the Armour penalty cases (the oleomargarine suits) brought by the State, to dismiss those actions because of the failure of the plaintiff to prosecute the same. Counsel for the people appeared upon the motion, and were virtually forced to consent to this granting of the motion, because with the utmost diligence which they had been able to exercise they had not been able to obtain sufficient evidence upon which to successfully prosecute the actions, and in their judgment never could.

Board of Regents Appoints Inspector.

ALBANY, Dec. 24.—The Finance Committee of the State Board of Regents has decided to appoint on Jan. 1 E. J. Peck, Principal of the Owego Free Academy of Owego, as an Inspector in the department of that board, at an annual salary of $2,400.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

"There goes a man," said the manager of the café in one of the Broadway hotels near Forty-second Street, "who, to my knowledge, has not paid for his dinner on any day this month, nor during the months of October or November, and I doubt if he did in September. Yet he lived on the best in New York all the time. His luncheons cost him only the price of a glass of beer, and his breakfasts—well, that is a matter of conjecture on my part, but I'll venture to say 10 cents is the limit of their cost. I don't believe he has expended to exceed $6 monthly for food. Yet he has dined at the Waldorf, the best chop houses, Delmonico's, Sherry's, the Holland, in fact everywhere in New York where the best there is to eat is to be had. He is a professional story teller, and it pays him."

The story teller is a tall man of fine presence, stylishly yet quietly dressed, with the face of an actor and a delightfully rich and sonorous voice, whose inflections vary with the skill of an elocutionist as he tells his yarns.

"Wait a few minutes," said the café manager, "and you will see how easy it is to get a dinner without paying for it."

Shortly afterward a party of four men entered the café. They had finished business for the day, and were just mellow enough to be willing listeners to stray anecdotes well told. One of them recognized the man of stories, and, walking up to him, invited him to join the party at a table for a drink. The story teller politely demurred, yet edged nearer and nearer the table. Under protest, of course, he sat down, and refreshments from decanters were ordered. Within a quarter of an hour the story teller had everything his own way. With glib tongue and finished style he spun yarn after yarn, numerous drinks arriving at the table for the merry quintet.

An hour afterward the party agreed that it was time to dine. Each of the four insisted on the storyteller being his particular guest. He assented modestly, and apparently with some reluctance, and the party drove away in a cab to a well-known hotel further down town.

"What did I tell you?" gleefully remarked the café manager. "Wined and dined and not a penny out of pocket!"

"Holiday business been up to the mark?"

"I'm not making a word of complaint," answered the proprietor of one of the uptown drug stores Monday afternoon, when the last of the belated buyers were making their purchases. "Fact is that I never had such a sale for the minor trinkets on which there is the largest per cent. of profit as I have had this year. If I can have two more years of such trade as I have had during the year now ended, I will be able to do that which I have always looked forward to and been working for. That is to retire to a little place in the country, where I may live out the last years of my life in quiet and content, with enough to keep the wolf a long ways from the door. All looks promising now. Yet I have a strange dread of reaching that point I have aimed at. Don't you know if is very often the case that when a man gets enough together so that he can retire and enjoy it, death comes to rob him of his enjoyment and the rest he has earned. It has been so often the case with friends of mine that I almost dread to see the day approach that I have set for the close of my business career."

"Isn't it a bit singular," remarked the merchant just back from a trip through the South, "that both Arkansas and Mississippi, which are to have new State Houses to cost about a million dollars each, should have selected as the sites for the buildings those formerly occupied by the penitentiaries of the two States? I don't know that there is a moral to be drawn from the fact. It is, however, a curious coincidence."

Miss Clara Clemens, daughter of "Mark Twain," has been invited by the people of Hartford, Conn., where the Clemens family formerly resided, to sing to them in February next. Miss Clemens is ambitious to enter on a career as a concert singer, and the people of the town who knew her in her childhood are anxious she should enter on her professional career in the city of her birth. If she accepts the invitation, her appearance will be at a grand concert, to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, and under auspices that will be most encouraging and stimulating.

"In spite of the fact that you are selling more guns and more ammunition than ever before it seems to me that the old-time hunter is rapidly disappearing from the face of the earth." Thus the veteran of many years in the woods as he sat gossipping in one of the big establishments where sporting goods are sold. "It is true that we have vast game preserves now and that a generation ago such things were practically unknown in this country. Moose, elk, deer, pheasants, partridge, quail, and other game flourish in those preserves because they are protected. Every section of the continent has these big private hunting grounds. But the game is half tame. Fenced in as it is, it has no chance against the man who goes out to kill, as it has in its natural state. Hunting has been turned into a series of slaughtering sprees. These may be pastime, but they are not sport in the true sense of the word. It is the sort of thing that goes for sport in Great Britain and in parts of Europe, whence we have imported the custom. But your true hunter wants no batteau, no abattoir where he can sit or stand and kill whatever a beater may drive toward him. He wants to get out where he can pit his skill against the cunning of the game he seeks; to match his knowledge of woodcraft against the cunning of the bird or the beast he is trying to run down. He wants to get right out and rub hard against nature; to let the savage instinct that is in him have full play, and at the same time he wants his game to have a chance for its life. That is the way the boy was taught to hunt in my boyhood days. Your true hunter wants no guide and no dog when he is after big game. His rifle and possibly his horse are the only companions he needs or cares for. That is the man who is more comfortable to go away to the wilds in a parlor car all fitted for hunting parties. It is also easier, if all you wish for is to kill, to go to some preserve with a big retinue of cooks and guides and beaters and dogs, and sit and blaze away at the game when it is chased toward you. But you lose the true spirit of the thing, even though you save a lot of time. You fail to get that thorough tiredness that makes absolute rest and a renewal of life to follow in its train. You don't get the mental cobwebs brushed away in the new-fangled hunting as you do in the old way. There is nothing in the world that will so surely kill an attack of the blues or drive away the worries of business as to get out in the wilderness, where you can tough it, and where nature gets right hold of you and makes the blood run anew through your veins. It adds years to the man's life who does this for a few days every year. He shakes off business cares and social frivolities and gets back into his system some of the sturdiness of his ancestors. You can't do that with parlor car hunting and with the conventionalities of life chasing you into the woods and obtruding themselves in your communings with nature. No! No! If you want rest and health you must seek it in the way our forefathers found it. Parlor car hunting over well stocked and well guarded preserves retains too much of the inertia of city life; it is too effeminate. To be a true hunter and to imbibe the true sporting spirit you must rough it; get right close to the heart of nature, and pit your best wits against those of the beasts. Thus alone will you get that which you seek. Thus alone can you be a hunter."

It was in one of the recently erected apartment houses near Central Park that this little incident happened. Tenants had been complaining of the lack of heat. The janitor protested that he had done all in his power to furnish the heat the tenants required. The fault was with the boilers, he was sure. So the manager was appealed to by the chilled occupants of the apartments. Oh, yes; he would find a remedy and have things in proper working order within a day. Those troublesome boilers would be overhauled and the rooms made so warm that the complainants would have to keep windows open even when the temperature was below zero in order to be comfortable. He who had installed the boilers was summoned. It took him but a few moments to make the inspection demanded in chorus by the tenants. Then came his report. It was terse and to the point.

"There's nothing so serious the matter with the boilers but it can be remedied in a half hour. There is not now and there never has been fire enough under them."

It was the universal cold-weather trouble. Orders from the owner to the janitor to "be economical in the use of coal" from a parsimonious landlord.

FRENCH EMBARGO ON UNITED STATES GOODS

Transfer of Part of National Exhibit to Cruiser Prevented.

CLAIM BY RAILROAD COMPANY

May Be Paid Under Protest and the Company Sued—Trouble with Frenchman Who Built the Pavilion.

PARIS, Dec. 24.—Thirty cars, containing part of the United States Government's exhibit at the recent Paris Exposition, were suddenly laid under embargo to-day at Havre, the railroad company declining to surrender them pending payment of a claim of 5,710 francs. This extraordinary action, seriously delaying the departure of the United States auxiliary cruiser Prairie from Havre for New York with the Government exhibits, was made the subject of a formal protest to the French Government by United States Ambassador Porter.

The company bases its claim on demurrage charges on freight in the cars when the goods were brought to the exposition for installation. Some time ago the claim was submitted, and Major Brackett, Secretary of the American Commission, investigated it and concluded that it had no foundation, as some of the cars charged against the American Government never contained official exhibits, while the others were cars utilized by private exhibitors, and not, therefore, chargeable to the United States.

Major Brackett thereupon endeavored to secure a settlement, but without avail. The matter dragged along through the Summer, the Secretary of the American Commission repeatedly expressing his willingness to settle any just claim against the United States. The company left the case in an unsatisfactory condition and finally embargoed the cars.

When Major Brackett was informed of to-day's action by the United States agent at Havre, he wired him instructions to pay to the company 500 francs in the presence of the legal authorities, and at the same time to enter a claim against the company for 10,000 francs as damages for obstruction and delay.

"Last Summer the company submitted a bill of 32,782 francs for freight charges against the commission," Major Brackett said to-day, "and pressed for payment. Pending an explanation of certain items, I paid 25,000 francs on account, at the same time asking for details. When these were furnished I discovered that the commission had been charged with 4,193 francs which should have been charged to the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, while 4,110 francs should have been charged to private exhibitors. The company is, therefore, obliged to make a rebate."

To-morrow being a holiday, there will be no loading of the Prairie. Should Wednesday not bring a satisfactory solution, Major Brackett will probably pay the rest of the claim under protest in order not to delay further the sailing of the Prairie. At the same time he will enter an additional claim for damages.

Some trouble has also arisen with Philip Lazies, the contractor who built the United States National Pavilion. He wrote to the American Commission on Dec. 16 saying that the last letter from Commissioner General Peck was not satisfactory, and asking when the building would be turned over to him for demolition. Two days later he notified the commission that he intended to take possession and begin destruction immediately. He, in turn, was informed that the building would be placed under his control on Dec. 20, and at a formal meeting he was notified that the commission would remove certain furnishings not supplied by him, a proposition to which his representative did not object.

On Saturday night, while the American custodian of the building, assisted by two workmen, was removing material belonging to the United States, a force of police arrived and arrested all three, on the ground that they were taking goods which did not belong to them. It is said that M. Lazies brought about the arrests.

Major Brackett secured their release today. M. Lazies served him with a legal notice that he would not accept the pavilion in its present shape, and would demand damages for delay. The Frenchman will now be held to the strict terms of his contract, which included demolition; and a counter claim will be entered of a forfeit of 200 francs daily from the date when the contract called for completion up to June 23, together with a portion of 2,000 francs for defective construction, as the roof leaked and certain furnishings were ruined. More than this, there will be a special claim of 2,000 francs if it can be proved that M. Lazies brought about the arrests, making a total of 26,800 francs.

Another bone of contention may be the settlement of the restaurant concession in the American pavilion, which has not been paid for.

NEW DESTROYER LAUNCHED.

The MacDonough, with a Speed of Thirty Knots, Represents a New Type of Craft.

EAST BRAINTREE, Mass., Dec. 24.—The torpedo-boat destroyer MacDonough was successfully launched at the works of the Fore River Iron Company at noon to-day amid the ringing of bells and the blowing of whistles. Mrs. Lucy Charlotte MacDonough Reade of Philadelphia christened the vessel with champagne. The new boat was taken down the river to the Quincy Works of the company.

The MacDonough has aroused great interest among naval men, because she is one of a new type and is to be one of a fleet of fifty craft of the same kind. Viewed from above the boat looks like a huge knitting needle, its length being 242 feet, while the entire breadth of beam is only 22 feet. The vessel is 14 feet deep from deck to keel and has a displacement of 470 tons. She draws 6 feet 6 inches of water.

No part of the MacDonough is armored save the forward conning towers, which are covered with three-quarter-inch nickel steel of a tensile strength of 120,000 pounds to the square inch, as any broadside armor which would withstand the concussion of large projectiles would greatly detract from the speed. The engines are only protected by the coal bunkers, which extend for 100 feet amidships on either side, and which have a capacity for 150 tons of coal, sufficient to provide a speed of 14 miles an hour for 4,000 miles.

The outer hull is of half-inch steel plates. This shell would be pierced if struck by a projectile. The vessel, however, is built with twelve separate water-tight compartments, the only communication between which is by means of bulkheads and conning towers from the main deck. Accommodations are provided for a crew of eighty officers and men.

The ship presents the innovation of having the officers' quarters forward and those of the crew aft. The quarters of the officers take up the entire width of the ship. The crew's quarters are in two apartments, each being filled with twenty-six berths.

The machinery and boilers are situated amidships, in four separate water-tight compartments. The engines, which will give the MacDonough her speed of 30 knots per hour are of 8,800 horse power, of the four-cylinder type, and are two in number.

The so-called turtle-back protection from seas runs from the stern, intersecting the conning tower and extending in the form of a bulwark twenty feet abaft the tower. The conning towers are of nickel and afford protection to the hand and steam steering gear inside.

A clever device of the MacDonough is an arrangement of telescopic masts mounted on the forward bridge, to which the searchlight is fixed. These masts can be shot up in a second, and as quickly lowered, making it possible for those on board to take observation in any direction without exposing any part of the craft to the light.

The armament of the MacDonough will consist of 4 fourteen-pound three-inch rapid-fire guns and 3 six-pounders. The two eighteen-inch torpedo tubes are situated in the stern, one forward and one aft of the after conning tower. The after one will be used to discharge the torpedo when the vessel is swinging away from the object of attack and the forward one will be more for a broadside fire. Two spare torpedoes will be stored in water-tight cases, with water-tight covers, one on each side of the deck, situated so that they can be lifted by cranes to the torpedo tubes directly from the cases. Two torpedoes will always be kept in the tubes.

The cost of building was $281,000, and the company has guaranteed a speed of 30 knots. The MacDonough was named in honor of Commodore Thomas MacDonough, United States Navy, who was born in Delaware Nov. 16, 1783.

ARMY OF VACCINATORS

Wholesale Work by Marching Corps from Health Office.

BOWERY LODGINGS INVADED

Inspectors, Backed by Sanitary Police, Have Met with No Resistance—Smallpox Checked.

Vaccinators of the Health Department are carrying on a systematic course of work to stop the spread of smallpox everywhere in the city, and it is the intention of Dr. Alonzo Blauvelt, Chief Inspector of the Bureau of Contagious Diseases, that every lodging house or boarding house sheltering any considerable number of patrons shall be visited before the week is out. Hitherto the men with the vaccine points have confined their labors to the neighborhoods where the disease has already appeared, or have gone to great stores and factories where a large number of persons could be treated at once. The new campaign of general vaccination throughout the city was quietly inaugurated Saturday night, the field first chosen as the one most liable for the malady to gain a footing being the Bowery. There were fifty-six inspectors detailed for the work, with fifty-four members of the sanitary police, and the start was made in the evening, when the dwellers in the lodging houses were most likely to be in. It was kept up all day yesterday and Sunday night, the workers drawing off only long enough to get a little to eat and brief naps. The result was that early yesterday morning Dr. Blauvelt announced that within forty-eight hours this itinerant corps had vaccinated no less than 4,500 persons, and he was more than greatified by the fact that there had been no serious objection raised anywhere.

He naively admitted that the sight of the policemen's night sticks might have been something of a persuader, but still, when it comes to the point, nobody need be vaccinated unless he or she wishes. The expedition was not announced, and in this way many who perhaps would have absented themselves were reached, for once the officials appeared in the room it was easier to submit, as the others were doing. The vaccinating corps was followed by two large wagons loaded with vaccine points and fresh virus, and disinfecting materials, which latter were applied in every place the general condition of which was such as to suggest that it was likely to become a point of attack for the disease.

Despite the constant streams of humanity that have been flowing through the Health Department's free vaccination bureaus at the main office at Sixth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street and at 68 Elm Street ever since the present outbreak, few of the denizens of the Bowery were found with fresh vaccination scars on their arms.

New cases of smallpox reported by the Health Department yesterday were Richard Mason, colored, twenty-six years old, of 319 West Sixty-first Street, and Jennie Temple, seven years old, of 257 West Tenth Street.

Another case was discovered last night at 2,704 Broadway. It was that of Carlton Potter, six years old, who was sent by the Board of Health to the Reception Hospital.

Dr. Blauvelt was in consultation with the management of the Metropolitan Elevated Railroad system yesterday concerning a wholesale vaccination of their employes because one of the ticket agents at the Twenty-eighth Street Station of the Third Avenue line recently was discovered to be a sufferer and was removed to North Brother Island. No plan was decided on, however, for it is hard to get a large number of these employes together at one time, as they are constantly coming and going with their trains. All the employes stationed at that part of the line where the disease appeared were promptly vaccinated, and Dr. Blauvelt thinks there is little danger of the disease spreading on the elevated through the employes, especially since a large proportion of them, mindful of their moral duty, have taken the initiative and already have been vaccinated.

The only serious opposition to the department vaccinators so far met with has been in the big retail stores and in fashionable homes, where the occupants expected better treatment.

A girl employed in the department store of D. M. Williams & Co., who recently failed, at Third Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, developed the malady last week, and late Saturday the vaccinators appeared there to treat the employes. Deputy Receiver Allen opposed their entrance, but finally yielded to the authority of the policemen. After they got to work in the store, however, he went with them and told each employe that he didn't believe in vaccination, and they needn't be vaccinated if they didn't wish to.

Dr. Blauvelt was very angry when he received the report of this performance yesterday morning. "There were 400 employes, and instead of vaccinating them all we only got 129 of them," he said. "We can do nothing more now, but if another case develops there I will close the store and station policemen at the doors."

Persistent rumors have been abroad that the department has been concealing the real prevalance of the disease in order not to interfere with the Christmas shopping.

The officials say that these rumors may do good if they drive people to be vaccinated, but they reiterate over and over again that every case that has developed has been made public.

Another Revolt in Venezuela.

CURACOA, Dutch Guiana, Dec. 24.—Celestino Peraza, formerly the Secretary General of President Castro of Venezuela, has revolted against the Venezuelan Government, near Lezema, in the Guarico District. A force of 2,500 Venezuelan troops, under Gen. Aristides Fandeo, has been sent against Peraza.

Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar Ill.

WEIMAR, Dec. 24.—Some anxiety is felt regarding the health of the aged Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar. He is suffering from influenza. A bulletin issued by his physicians says his condition is satisfactory, that he slept well in spite of repeated spasms of coughing, and that his temperature is 99.7.

Lord William Beresford Ill.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—Lord William Leslie de la Poer Beresford is ill. He is suffering from peritonitis. To-day his condition is reported as slightly improved. In consequence of Lord William's illness the Christm

"Explanatory Statement" by Mr. Conger to Peking Envoys.

Note Not an Ultimatum as Far as This Country Is Concerned—Earl Li In Serious Condition.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—Secretary Hay has received a cablegram from Minister Conger, at Peking, announcing that he has signed the agreement reached by the foreign Ministers, but has done so with a written explanatory statement setting forth the exact position of his Government.

Nothing can be definitely learned about the explanatory statement. Mr. Conger has not forwarded it. The best information attainable is, however, that his statement is to the effect that the United States disapproves of much that is in the agreement, but refrains from placing obstacles in the way of a settlement. It also makes clear that the United States can take no part in enforcing the execution of these objectionable provisions by force of arms.

This reduces the position of the United States to a simple assent in the interest of harmony, and deprives the signature of much of the force of an ultimatum, so far as this country is concerned.

The signature of the agreement by the Ministers closes what is regarded here as the first, the most important, and the most difficult phase of the negotiations as to China, for it is not doubted that the Chinese envoys will subscribe to the agreement without amendment.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 24.—The Novoye Vremya sharply criticises the joint note of the powers to China as being too long to produce effect. It says the accusations against the Emperor and Dowager Empress are unfounded, and that the accusation that Prince Tuan is alone responsible for the treachery is ridiculous. The paper adds:

"Rulers sometimes betray their own country, but treason toward foreign powers is a new conception. The statement in the ultimatum that the troops will not be withdrawn before the conditions are accepted cannot mean Russia, whose troops have already vacated Pe-chi-Li, whereas Manchurian affairs do not concern the powers. The note will net bring peace. The powers, possibly, repent not having imitated Russia's example."

LONDON, Dec. 25.—Dr. Morrison, in a dispatch to The Times frum Peking, dated Sunday, says:

"Prince Ching alone will be able to receive the joint note to-morruw. Li-Hung-Chang is in a condition of great prostration, which causes grave anxiety; for, even if he recovers, it is doubtful whether he will be able to undertake negotiations after the acceptance of the note."

THE MANCHURIA RAILROAD.

Russian Government Reported to be About to Take Over Its Management—Official Denies the Story.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 24.—A special dispatch to the Novoye Vremya from Vladivostock says the exploitation of the principal Manchurian railroad line and the construction of a branch line to Port Arthur will be turned over to the Government.

Russia has always carefully insisted that the Manchurian railroad enterprise was purely the affair of a Russian private corporation. This news, if true, is of great importance politically, although the dispatch asserts that neither the railroad nor Russia would gain much by the move. However this may be, a high official denied the whole story to-day when the matter was broached to him.

The Novoye Vremya's correspondent wires that the demobilization is ending everywhere in Manchuria. Baron Kaulbars is distributing the railroad protective guard along the route.

The Chinese population along the railroad is suffering from famine. The Russians, up to the present, have had plenty of supplies.

FREE ENTRY FOR CONGER'S GUEST

Treasury Takes Favorable Action on Miss Condit-Smith's Appeal.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—Assistant Secretary Spaulding to-day took favorable action on the appeal of Miss Condit-Smith from the action of the customs authorities at New York in seizing her trunks on her arrival from China. The basis for the action is set forth in the following statement made by Mr. Spaulding:

"Regulations provide for free entry of the personal effects of United States Ministers and their families returning from abroad. It appears that Miss Condit-Smith was at Peking at the time of the siege, a guest of the Minister of the United States. Her entire wardrobe with the exception of the clothes she wore, was either destroyed or used to clothe others who had lost everything, or torn up for bandages and otherwise used for the wounded confined in the legation; that the clothing contained in her two trunks brought by her to New Y are duplicates both in number and value of the clothing purchased abroad for the necessities of her journey, and to replace that which she lost or charitably donated during the siege.

"As she was a guest of the Minister and a member of his household during the siege, the privilege of free entry of personal effects accorded to the immediate members of the family of a United States Minister is accorded to her."

New Japanese War Minister.

YOKOHAMA, Dec. 25.—Gen. Kodama, Governor of Formosa, has been appointed Minister of War, replacing Gen. Kathura, who has resigned.

WEDDED AS SISTER LAY DEAD.

Miss Carroll Donned Her Bridal Gown that the Dying Woman Might See Her in It.

Joy and sorrow were strangely mingled at the wedding of Sarah Carroll and Thomas J. McGuri in Westchester Sunday afternoon, for while the bride and bridegroom with their close relatives sat at their wedding supper Mary Carroll, an elder sister of the bride, who had done perhaps more than any one else to promote the union, lay dead up stairs, having passed away shortly before noon of that day.

The wedding was announced for Sunday evening in the St. Raymond's Roman Catholic Church at Westchester. Many invitations had been sent out and work had begun on elaborate decorations of the interior of the church edifice before it was known that Miss Mary could not live to witness the ceremony. When it was seen that she was dying Sunday morning all the invitations were hastily recalled and the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Father McKenna, the pastor of the church, in the rectory adjoining.

The Carrolls live at 240 East One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street, while Mr. McGuri is the son of a well-known hotel keeper on Main Street, Westchester. Mary Carroll had been greatly interested in the wedding, and many of the gowns in the bride's trousseau were made by her own hands. She was taken sick two weeks ago, and after a very few days it was seen that the doctors' efforts would be in vain. Almost her last words expressed the desire to see her sister in her bridal dress. Her wish was gratified.

FAMILY FOUND UNCONSCIOUS.

Janitor Tried to Kill Himself, Wife, and Son with Gas.

John Flynn, a laborer living in the basement of 143 East Ninety-seventh Street, his wife and himself being janitors of the building, tried to commit suicide yesterday afternoon by inhaling illuminating gas, and at the same time to kill his wife Celia and their seven-year-old son, William Flynn.

The family was discovered by Mrs. Catharine Reardon, a tenant, the woman stretched on the floor, while Flynn was lying on a sofa with the boy clasped in his arms. They were unconscious, but Dr. Levy succeeded in reviving all save the little boy, whom he took in an ambulance to Harlem Hospital, where the child, too, recovered. Flynn was arrested.

Before the gas was turned on the family had drunk a pint of beer, and it is believed that Flynn may have drugged it.

MANY SEAMEN DROWNED.

Dense Fogs on British Coasts Cause Disasters to Shipping—Steamship Brunswick Sunk.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—Dense fogs on the coasts are greatly interfering with navigation, and several wrecks have occurred.

Reports that several Shetland fishing boats were in great peril from the storm and had probably been lost are confirmed. Only one boat out of five has been found, and it is known that no fewer than twenty-two fishermen have perished.

The British steamer Brunswick grounded in the Bristol Channel, keeled over, and sank. Seven of her crew were drowned.

MISS MARION GREENLEAF DEAD.

Succumbs to Typhoid Fever at Her Parents' Home in Lenox.

Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., Dec. 24.—Miss Marion Greenleaf, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Richard C. Greenleaf, died at 3 o'clock this afternoon of typhoid fever at the country home of her parents.

Her death will be a great shock to her friends, as it was generally supposed the disease was taking a favorable course. She had been ill a little over three weeks.

Miss Greenleaf had been staying with her parents at Windyside ever since early last Summer. In fact the family have been living here most of the time for nearly two years, since their return from Europe, where Miss Greenleaf went especially to study vocal culture. She had a beautiful voice and often sang at private musicales. She had taken lessons of Mrs. Emma Eames-Story, and was an intimate friend of the singer's. She was fond of outdoor life, a member of the golf club, the archery club, and the Mankeenac Lake Boat Club, where she spent much time in rowing and sailing.

She was much attached to Lenox, where she had spent her Summers with her parents ever since her early girlhood. She was especially intimate with the young people of the Stokes, Sloane, Barnes, Parsons, and Burden families, many of whom will come on to Lenox to attend her funeral, which will be held at Trinity Church on Thursday morning next at 11 o'clock. The Rev. Harold Arrowsmith will officiate. Miss Greenleaf was twenty-nine years old and the oldest of the Greenleaf children. Her younger sister is the wife of William Adams of New York.

FUNERAL OF ROGER WOLCOTT.

Trinity Church, Boston, Crowded—Burial at Mount Auburn.

BOSTON, Dec. 24.—Ex-Gov. Roger Wolcott was buried to-day at Mount Auburn Cemetery after services at Trinity Church. The latter consisted of only the simple Unitarian ritual and a few hymns which were the favorites of Mr. Wolcott.

Hundreds of eminent citizens gathered in Boston's most beautiful religious edifice to do honor to the distinguished dead, while outside the church were thousands who were unable to gain admission. The service was read by the Rev. Howard N. Brown of King's Chapel. The funeral would have been held from King's Chapel had that edifice been more capacious, but in view of its limited proportions, the use of Trinity was tendered to the family and was gratefully accepted.

There was no eulogy, but tribute was paid by the silent presence of statesmen, jurists, National, State, and city officials, and numerous delegations from patriotic, historical, and charitable institutions of which Mr. Wolcott had been a member. The body was borne by eight members of the Class of '70 of Harvard University—Mr. Wolcott's own class.

During the hour of the funeral, business at the State House and the City Hall was suspended and the church bells were tolled.

UNKNOWN PERSON WRECKS TRAIN

Passengers Badly Shaken and Employes Injured Near Rome, Ga.

ROME, Ga., Dec. 24.—A passenger train on the Chattanooga, Rome and Southern Railroad was wrecked by an unknown miscreant at Miller's Nurseries early last evening. Some of the train employes were injured and the passengers badly shaken up, but nobody was fatally hurt.

The wreck occurred one and one-half miles below Rome. The north-bound passenger train between Carrollton and Rome, due here at 4 o'clock, was running at full speed through Miller's Station, when the train suddenly took the sidetrack and crashed into a dozen boxcars.

The engine of the passenger train was almost demolished. The engineer and firemen saved their lives by jumping, but the fireman received internal injuries. Several of the passengers were thrown from their seats and bruised. It was ascertained this morning that the switchlock had been broken and the switch purposely turned. The matter will be investigated by the county authorities and railroad people at once.

FELL THROUGH THE ICE.

Drowned in the Passaic River Near Paterson.

PATERSON, N. J., Dec. 24.—Peter St. Amand, twelve years old, who lived at 45 Manchester Avenue, lost his life in the Passaic River this afternoon.

In company with another boy, he ventured out on the ice, and when he was about fifteen feet from shore, broke through and disappeared. All efforts to reach him were unsuccessful, as the ice would not hold the would-be rescuers. A life preserver was thrown to him, but the boy's fingers were so numb that he could not retain his hold. His body was recovered.

LOUIS F. PAYN WEDS.

Former State Superintendent of Insurance Marries in Albany.

ALBANY, Dec. 24.—At the residence of her mother, 537 Western Avenue, at noon to-day, took place the marriage of Miss Marian K. Heath of this city to Louis F. Payn, formerly State Superintendent of Insurance. The wedding was a very quite one, only members of the family being present. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Ralph Birdsall, rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church.

Miss Heath is the daughter of the late John E. Heath, a lifelong friend of Mr. Payn, who resided in this city for several years, and who died in Washington in 1896.

SECOND RUNAWAY WAS FATAL.

Horse Injured One Owner in First, Killed One in Next.

Robert Gnam, thirty-one years old, a bottler, of 347 East Thirty-third Street, died in Roosevelt Hospital from a fractured skull last night. He was thrown from his wagon by a runaway horse last Tuesday night in front of the New York Athletic Club house, at Fifty-ninth Street and Sixth Avenue.

Gnam's horse was frightened in the afternoon of the same day while being driven down Central Park West by a man named Werner. Werner was thrown out by the runaway and taken to Roosevelt Hospital, which he left later. The horse was taken back to the stable by a policeman. Gnam and a friend named Schriller got the horse and wagon again that night, when the fatal accident happened to Gnam.

Charged with Robbing Adams Express.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Dec. 24.—Ernest L. Mayer, the cashier of the New York and Eastern News Company, a concern owned by the Adams Express Company, was arrested this afternoon on the charge of embezzling $1,500 of the company's funds, and has been committed in default of $3,000 bail. The charge is the result of the periodical disappearance of sums of money for some time past. Until lately the officials of the company have entertained no suspicions against Mayer's honesty. Mayer belongs to several well-known organizations in this city, and was at one time Assistant Superintendent of the Boys' Club.

Boy Killed Between Freight Cars.

Samuel McGibney, sixteen years old, of 1,405 Third Avenue, while playing with some other boys at 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon on a freight car of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad at Seventy-fifth Street and Twelfth Avenue, fell between two cars and was fatally crushed. A call was sent to Roosevelt Hospital, and he was removed there, suffering from internal injuries. The injured lad died later in the night.

Women's Tailored Coats, Skirts.

A Thousand---Half and Less Than Half of Present Prices.

Two noted makers—one takes longest risks of great loss or great gain—made all these garments within the past fortnight—most within a week. Styles have every mark of freshness, yet the makers missed their mark, found retailers with heavy stocks that must be sold before these newer garments could be bought.

Of necessity, they turned here where no quantities are too great if prices are right. TWELVE PAGES.

RESPONSIBILITY NOT SHIFTED.

The London Times takes a curiously wrong and untenable position in regard to the canal treaty. It somewhat hastily assumes that it is the habit of President McKINLEY never to take upon himself responsibilities which he can devolve upon others, and proceeds in this vein:

> He now devolves upon us the responsibility of dealing from an international point of view with a proposal he might have kept within the domain of domestic affairs by the exercise of a little firmness.
>
> The fact is to be regretted, for questions which may be settled without serious consequences in that domain not infrequently afford mischiefmakers an opportunity when treated between nations, however friendly they may be with each other. Mr. McKINLEY doubtless is conscious of this truth, but has chosen, nevertheless, to send us the treaty and must bear the responsibility for any friction that may ensue.

These opinions are apparently based upon the belief that the President has in some way washed his hands of the business and is going to let the Senate and her Majesty's Government fight it out between them. There is no constitutional warrant for such a procedure on the part of the President, nor is it possible for him to adopt it. It ought to be plain to our London contemporary that when the President sends the amended treaty to the British Ambassador it becomes, with all its amendments, his treaty as much as the Senate's treaty. He accepts and sanctions the amendments. If he had wished to disapprove of them he would have retained the treaty—buried it. It is plain that a President has the authority to do this, for it is no more competent for the Senate to force unacceptable amendments upon him than it is for him to compel the Senate to accept and ratify without change a treaty that he has negotiated. The instrument goes to the British Government as an expression of the views, wish, and policy of the treaty-making power of the United States. That Government is not called upon to inquire whether there was a difference of view between the two branches of the treaty-making power. Nor is it asked to consider any of our unsettled questions. The questions raised by the Senate amendments have not only been kept strictly within the domain of our own affairs; they have been settled. The President settles them by surrendering his own judgment and accepting that of the Senate.

The questions now to be considered by Great Britain pertain exclusively to her own interests and affairs. Is she satisfied with the amended treaty, well enough satisfied to exchange ratifications? It is for her to say whether she is content to let us construct, own, manage, and operate the canal, and do what we please with it for our own defense. It is for her to say whether she is content now to abrogate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. We should think she would jump at the chance. If that convention stands, it binds us and binds her. But she has just consented to waive that part which binds us. It is to be inferred that she does not value that part of it. But how can she put any value on the part that binds and restrains her? Those are her questions, however, not ours.

The conclusion might be easily reached that she would never consent to let us construct and own a canal with power to close it against her whenever we happened to be at war with her, a deplorable contingency which both Nations will pray may never arise. It is not impossible that she may take the view that the Davis amendment gives us no powers or rights not practically conferred by ownership and control. That is, she may conclude that the Senate has taken a great deal of trouble to beat down an open door. In that case the British Government may ratify and accept the treaty—with a smile. But the Senatorial enemies of the treaty will not smile when they get the news that ratifications have been exchanged.

THE YELLOW CLOUD.

The cloud that overhangs Christendom at the end of the nineteenth century of the Christian era is not black, but yellow. The Chinese question has assumed great and formidable proportions. Doubtless, it is formidable, in great part, simply because, according to the Latin saying, it is unknown. We cannot know what the effect will be upon the Chinese public, if we can even assume that there is such a thing, of the peremptory demands of the Powers. We can only be sure what would be the effect of such demands upon any nation, big or little, which was worthy to be so called, which had any civic virtue, any patriotism.

We have all along insisted upon dealing with China in a very different spirit from that of the joint note. However feeble and corrupt her Government, and whatever atrocities have been committed in spite of it, or even because of the connivance of its actual members, we have insisted that an adequate punishment for them would be preferable to the establishment of anarchy throughout that vast empire and that teeming population. In this we have been joined by Great Britain. In fact, the most epigrammatic and memorable statement of our position was that made by Lord SALISBURY, at the Lord Mayor's banquet, that one of the primary conditions of the settlement should be that the Powers should not attempt to govern China, but should leave it to be governed by the Chinese themselves. But, if we leave to his Lordship the credit of having most neatly and accurately stated our intentions, it remains true that it is we who had first and most consistently acted upon the principle thus stated. The intelligence with which the State Department has been conducted, ever since Mr. HAY's accession to it, has been so conspicuous in nothing else as in the leadership we have taken upon this Chinese question, ever since it became acute, by mere dint of superior understanding. It has been a lead which all the other Powers have in turn been driven in one way or another to follow. In Great Britain, as we showed the other day by a quotation from the debate on the Queen's Speech, and in Japan, as has abundantly appeared, this has been freely and abundantly acknowledged. As this journal has frequently pointed out, from the time of our first lodgment in the Philippines, these are the two Powers which, by their interests and their committals, are our natural allies in the Pacific, and with the support of which we can dispense with that of other Powers whose interests there are either hostile or infinitesimal.

Why should we have yielded the main point of our wise contention? Apparently it was simply because our Minister at Peking made haste to misinterpret his instructions and to promulgate his misinterpretation. A cautious and loyal Minister, receiving incoherent instructions which it would have suited his personal sentiments to interpret into an abandonment of the position upon which his principals had been insisting for months, would have taken pains to ascertain that his interpretation was the right one before promulgating it. Great Britain showed prudence in eliminating the "personal equation" of Sir CLAUDE MACDONALD, a man presumably of like passions, and certainly of like experiences, with those of Mr. CONGER, before beginning the peace negotiations. We would have done well to imitate this prudence. And, in view of the present muddle, which he has brought about, it must be clear to those whom it concerns at Washington that Mr. CONGER has outlived his diplomatic usefulness at Peking.

About the extreme annoyance and confusion of the muddle itself there can be no question. Our signature to the joint note "lets us in" for all the troubles we have been avoiding. And we confess we do not know why it should have been affixed. The insertion of the word "irrevocable" makes the note, not a basis of discussion, but an ultimatum. It binds us to the appalling attempt to coerce China into the acceptance of the terms which we had insisted she should not be asked to accept. They are, at half a dozen points, terms which we should not think of laying down to a European Power. They are terms absolutely incompatible with the sovereignty of China. They are thus incompatible with the contention which we have so earnestly carried on. They are terms which every patriotic and self-respecting Chinaman, if any such person there be, would die rather than yield. The greater possibilities of reform and rehabilitation there are in China, the more fatal are these peremptory demands. And these demands we have now associated ourselves with, "even to the shedding of blood." That is the meaning, and the only meaning, of an "ultimatum." "Do this or we will fight you." Why should we have put ourselves, through the blunder of a telegraph cable, in the position which we have so steadily, so honorably, and so influentially refused to occupy? Why should we have consented to abandon sure ground for unsafe? What could have happened to us if we had held our own? The very worst would have been a rupture, in which we should have had the support of the Powers which are naturally with us, and which, together, form, in the Pacific, a force which is quite irresistible. Now, we have bound ourselves to enforce by arms propositions the unsoundness of which we have officially devoted ourselves to demonstrating. We have bound ourselves to take part in the "punitive expeditions," under the lead of a commander not responsible to us, for abstaining from which we have received the thanks of the sober and considerate men of all the Christian world.

> Through what varieties of untried being,
> Through what new scenes and fortunes must we pass?

We do not know. We do not pretend to understand the sudden reversal of our policy in China. But we are very sorry for it.

THE DEVERY SCAPEGOAT.

The following remarkable statement was made yesterday for publication by Mr. LEWIS NIXON, Chairman of the Tammany Committee for the Suppression of Vice:

> I am satisfied by what I find that the Chief of Police could close up every disorderly house in the city within a few hours if he so desired. Our motive now is to show that these places are not only not protected by the Tammany organization, but further than that, to show that a system which has existed during this and previous administrations can be stopped if the Police Department can be induced to act.
>
> A single-headed commission, with power, can remedy the evil of existing abuses, not only for a time, but permanently. A bi-partisan Police Commission and Excise Department are the sores of the body of politics, and they should be reformed jointly, and they will be when the people come to a full knowledge of the iniquities which owe their existence to them.

It is undoubtedly true that a bi-partisan Police Commission is a convenient and facile instrument for promoting the sale of protection to the lawbreakers. But how does Mr. NIXON explain the use that has been made of this instrument by Tammany? Who is responsible for the intrigue by which DEVERY was placed in power? Who changed the commission in order to bring this about? Was it not Mayor VAN WYCK, and did he not act in this, as in all other matters, in accordance with the wishes of the boss of Tammany Hall? And could not the Mayor at this moment, if he wished to do so, remove the Police Commissioners who have permitted and aided DEVERY to carry out his outrageous policy, with entire certainty that his action would receive the approval of the Governor, and, in all human probability, the sanction of the courts? In any case on whom rests the responsibility for the fact that DEVERY has not been reproved or checked or called to account if it be not on the Mayor who made his appointment possible, and deliberately prostituted the powers of his office for that purpose?

In his statement Mr. NIXON also says:

> As far as Tamany is concerned, after a careful investigation I have found just about fifteen unscrupulous men who are in the organization and in the party simply for what money they can make out of it. Men of this kind will creep into any party, and the pity of it is that they cannot be found out before they have done the mischief.

Will Mr. NIXON say, on his knowledge, that RICHARD CROKER is not one of the fifteen?

THE REMOVAL OF GARDINER.

It is easy to imagine that Gov. ROOSEVELT rose from the reading of the papers of yesterday with a feeling that his action in regard to the District Attorney had failed to impress the public mind as he supposed that it would. The World approved the action on general principles, and with little reference to the facts adduced in evidence. The Tribune explained the want of leniency in this case by the District Attorney's bad record in the past, on which the Governor had already expressly refused to remove him. The Herald attributed the removal to the fact that the District Attorney "did not treat with proper respect a telegram from the Governor." The Mail and Express described the hearing as a "drumhead court-martial." The Post called the removal "an act of persecution and an insult to the people who elected" GARDINER. Only The Press gave unstinted praise to the course of the Governor.

It is to be noted that all these papers agree in the opinion that the late District Attorney has been a very poor officer, that he has failed to perform his duties, and that the office is likely greatly to be improved under the new appointee. These are admirable reasons why he should not be elected were he before the people. It is generally recognized that they are not sufficient reasons for reversing his election, after it has been made, and depriving him of an office which the people had conferred on him. This was the view taken by the Governor himself when the charges of the City Club were before him. It seems to us to have been just as sound and pertinent on Saturday last as it was on the former occasion.

There is much reason also to believe that the action of the Governor is a political error of serious importance. Within a few days of the expiration of his own term he takes up imperfectly proved charges as to matters not involving official acts of the accused officer, and after a hasty consideration of them, goes to the limit of his discretion in making the removal. By so doing he converts one of the most objectionable of the Tammany officials, the one who is regarded with the least respect and with the most contempt, into a sort of martyr. He creates a strong impression in the mind of the public that he is actuated by political or personal feeling or by both. He gives to Tammany the semblance of a grievance against the decent people whom the Governor means to represent, and whom, in many respects, he does represent. He awakens something like sympathy for the organization on whose conspicuous favorite the blow has fallen. He helps at a critical moment to check, and in a measure to turn, the tide of public feeling that has been steadily rising against Tammany. Unwittingly he has actually helped the evil forces he intended undoubtedly to oppose. It is a most unfortunate situation that he has created.

FUTILE INTERDICTIONS.

Bishop POTTER and the Rev. Dr. MACARTHUR are quite in agreement about the broadening liberality of the Churches. In his sermon at the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association on Sunday the Bishop said that the theology of old times was inclined to repress the mirth and physical enjoyment needed by human beings, but a later and larger theology had supplanted the old doctrines, recognizing the relation of work to play and striving to bind them together properly.

The Rev. Dr. MACARTHUR, at the Calvary Baptist Church on Sunday evening, declared that the Church had grown more liberal in relation to amusements. The tendency was no longer to confound things evil with things evil only in excess. Dancing and card playing had thus come to be looked on with tolerance. But what about the theatre? Dr. MACARTHUR gave his own reasons for removing the old ban:

> Shall the Church indiscriminately denounce all theatres, actors, and attendants upon theatres? Shall she be simply denunciatory, hostile, uncompromising, and implacable in her opposition? This attitude has often been assumed by various branches of the Church. It is the attitude to-day declared in some church covenants and books of discipline. Such a course alienates a great body of men and women engaged in dramatic work of various kinds. It opens a broad gulf between them and the Church. It makes the Church practically indifferent to this great element in our community. It virtually ostracizes great groups of men and women because of the sins of some of these men and women. Such a course also is unjust, for we have no right to put the Church in such an attitude. There is no one interest of humanity to which the Church can afford to be indifferent.

These are good human and spiritual reasons for abandoning the view that the actor is by reason of his vocation ineligible for salvation. There is another reason. The Church lessens its power by maintaining an interdiction which is almost universally disregarded. A worshipper must feel less respect for a Church whose decrees he habitually disobeys. The decree against theatregoing is as futile as the decree against cards and dancing.

Unless Church authorities are profoundly convinced that they are right and the decree breakers wrong, unless they feel quite sure that it is their moral duty to keep the ban in force for the benefit of those who still obey it until the scales shall fall from the eyes of the great disobedient mass of the heedless and they shall come back in terror of their transgressions, it might be well for them to take thought about modifying the prohibitions. A Church cannot get along without laws and denunciation of sin. Neither can it get along without communicants. Nor can it successfully sustain theories about modern life which the immense majority of modern men and women reject—that is, unless it is certain that these men and women are for the time being lost in sin and must be reclaimed. That certainty seems to be growing less certain.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Judging from the triumphant tone which marked the announcement by the Tammany vice suppressors of the closing at their command of nearly eighty gambling places; the members of the committee are proud of their work and are wondering when the expressions of public gratitude and admiration are to begin. Unless we are much mistaken, they will have an opportunity to wonder for some time. The public, instead of joyfully exclaiming over the fact that these gambling places are now closed, is likely to fix all its attention on the method by which the end was reached, on the ease of its application, on its swift efficacy, and on its vast superiority to any method ever tried by the police. People will ask, for instance, how it was that five men, acting in no official capacity and with no power from city or State, could in the course of a few weeks get from voluntary and unprotected witnesses more evidence against this one phase of illegal vice than the police officials, with their thousands of trained subordinates and all the machinery of the law at their command, have secured in as many years. Where did Mr. NIXON and his four associates get the list of addresses which they handed to Chief DEVERY and Acting Chief CORTRIGHT? Really, it almost looks as though the lists came from the police themselves, accompanied by evidence absolutely conclusive and convicting—evidence which the police have always had or could always have obtained. The next question that suggests itself is, Why has this evidence not been used before? That is a rather foolish question, however, since it is perfectly obvious that the evidence has been used before. The only difference between now and then is that now the club of knowledge has been raised over the gamblers to make them close their places, while then its elevation was for the purpose of stimulating and maintaining a flow of revenue. This, of course, is not the first time that something outside of the law has succeeded in doing the law's work after the law had failed. When this paper revealed the operations of the gambling syndicate, for instance, the same effects were produced, and on that occasion no Committee of Five intervened between the police and him whom they recognize as the embodiment of supreme authority. But then the closing was not permanent? Naturally. Vice pays for favors to come, not for those already received. Therefore will it suspend business at a nod from the source of protection, while it would fight savagely against annihilation, no matter by whom attempted.

—It is only at the first and superficial view that there is anything funny in the story which we published yesterday about the Health Board officer who, while engaged in vaccinating others on the arm, accidently vaccinated himself on the nose, and within a few days thereafter had qualified for giving a thoroughly effective imitation of a mediaeval gargoyle. The serious feature of this adventure is that it convicts the official scarificator of having neglected the very precaution which the Health Board has for weeks been telling the general public it is the duty of every good citizen to take. The board's assertion is undoubtedly true, but if its persuasion has not been effective with its own employés, can it wonder at the attainment of only partial success with the rest of the community? Of course the touch of virus that by chance reached the vaccinator's nose would have produced no effect there if he had possessed the immunity which he was under far more than ordinary obligations to have. His business brought him into constant and close communication with persons more or less open to suspicion as carriers of infection, and yet he himself had either not been vaccinated at all or else the operation had been performed so long ago that its efficacy had departed. In much the same case is the physician whose mishap was recorded in the same article. He, with entirely undeserved good fortune, vaccinated himself on the thumb instead of the nose, and therefore was punished lightly instead of heavily, with a little inconvenience instead of a lot. This whole matter of vaccination is at present in an unsatisfactory condition. A "smallpox scare" should not be required to send people with hastily bared arms in search of safety. They should put themselves out of this particular form of danger as a duty owed to themselves and others, without waiting for the scare, which, indeed, would then never come, vastly to the advantage of commerce, to say nothing of the public's peace of mind.

—In affirming an award of heavy damages to a young woman who was kissed despite her objections, openly declared to the young farmer who saluted her, the Iowa Supreme Court has not only assumed a great burden of responsibility, but it declared null and void an enormous amount of law which has hitherto been held to be none the less good because it happened to be unwritten. Did the Iowan Judges, before they rendered their decision, reflect upon the inevitable and disastrous consequences that would follow a general acceptance of the principle they have laid down? They ignored the defendant's plea that to the best of his knowledge and belief the plaintiff's protests against his salute were academic, and as it were pro forma, and they declared that as the plaintiff resisted the demonstration of the defendant's admiration, her sincerity was thereby put beyond permissible doubt and the kiss became an assault to be expiated only by the payment of $375. This is much the same as holding felonious all osculation not preceded by a definite understanding and agreement. Perhaps the Iowan Judges would have the preliminary consent put in writing and attested before a notary. Even if they do not go as far as this, it seems to us that they have gone altogether too far. Kisses of the domestic variety aside, it is said to be a practical impossibility to obtain the formal consent of the party of the second or passive part, and, unless all legends and literatures treating of the subject are false, some measure of resistance is an essential and necessary factor in this most serious of amusements. Supreme Courts, in Iowa and elsewhere, are habitually treated by us with respect, and we never reverse their decisions except with extreme reluctance, but beyond any question the Supreme Court of Iowa has made a grave mistake. Its dictum is obviously against public policy, for it changes the recognized and infinitely satisfactory rules of the oldest game in the world. And it is fair to ask, incidentally, whether the court's decision in this kissing case seems the more alarming and reprehensible to the young women of Iowa or to the young men of the State?

—No American commander of a province in Luzon who has shown an eager desire to establish schools and teach the native children the English language should find any difficulty in securing the means for carrying out his beneficent purpose. We published yesterday a letter from such an officer, and he mourned his lack of primers! What is that commission of ours about? They have the power and the money for gratifying all desires of this kind, and surely no soldier in the Philippines is better employed than those whom the writer of the letter described as daily giving oral lessons in English to brown children quick to catch the sounds and meanings of the tongue which manifestly is destined to serve the needs of the whole world. It will be pitiful indeed if the schools of the Philippines waste any time in teaching Spanish to natives now equipped only with one of the many insular dialects. And our civil and military officials should be on their guard against the establishment in the islands of any barbarous half-and-half jargon like that spoken by the negroes in the French West Indies. Let them speak English and teach English, real English, and nothing else.

PROBLEMS OF CITY CHURCHES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a recent editorial in your most excellent daily, under the heading of "The Problems of City Churches," you mentioned some startling facts in conection with the Baptist ministers' conference of Chicago. You say that the ministers were quite agreed "that unless the church becomes a continued vaudeville it cannot hold its congregation. That concerts, popular lectures, stercopticon entertainments, and the like, are gradually taking the place of the customary Sunday services, and still more radical departures from the established order of things are said to be in contemplation."

After commenting favorably upon this programme you suggest a further radical remedy in more frequent changes in the ministry, and "lament the 'deadly monotony' of the pastoral function." You say, "even the vaudeville has to change its programme frequently to attract paying audiences." We would like to ask if it has ever occurred to you that the average pastoral term has been growing shorter and shorter for many years, and that at the same time non-churchgoing has been steadily increasing? We have known churches to have two or three different pastors within one year, and the congregations were certainly not built up by this process. On the other hand, have you ever considered the fact that some of the choicest and most prosperous congregations have been ministered to by the same pastor for several decades? Their ministry was far from a "deadly monotony." By the constant study of the Word and increasing fellowship with God and growing love for men their work was ever becoming more successful, far-reaching, and permanent. You then close with the following very doubtful, though very popular, suggestions:

> The logical solution of the problem would seem to be to make the churches as attractive as possible, and maintain within them a nucleus of holiness which, always sufficently in evidence to make its influence felt, need not, and perhaps should not, interfere with anything innocent and proper which will attract those who are needed to fill the pews and help swell the church revenues. This, at least, is a business view of the question, and the modern city church has to be managed on business principles.

Will you kindly permit me through your sound and wholesome columns to present the other side of this very timely and practical subject?

1. Humanity is as greatly in need of a purely spiritual religion to-day as ever. Civilization, education, and refinement have not yet changed the human heart. Sin and poverty and sorrow and despair are as prevalent to-day as at any period in the world's history. To meet the present appalling need it ought to be evident that more spirituality, and not less, is the demand of the hour. If ever laxity and compromise and religious substitutes were allowable, they are certainly not so to-day. Heroic treatment is the only method that can save the Church from becoming a cold and powerless form and the laughing stock of the world. Divine dynamics, not fairs, festivals, and theatricals, are the pressing needs of to-day.

2. God is as earnestly desirous to help humanity as ever. He is unchangably the God of love. He delights not in the death of him that dieth, nor in any of the ills that curse the race. He has a panacea for every pain. He can dry every tear, He can heal every heartache. If He is rightly represented and presented to needy men, and if needy men are willing to accept His aid, a thorough work will be done.

3. Christ is as able to draw and save men as ever. He says, "If I be lifted up from the earth I will draw all men unto Me." If He is not drawing men to-day, it must be because He is not properly uplifted as the crucified and risen Saviour. If men will not be drawn by this method, we do not believe that we are warranted in employing any other. We are quite confident that no other will be efficient. It may appear so in the eyes of man, but man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart.

God's people should be very careful lest they depart from the "old paths" and build after another pattern than that "shown in the Mount." Paul came to his followers without any of the tricks of modern oratory or organization, and even without enticing words of man's wisdom, and his work was not a failure. The marching orders of the ministry and the Church are very clear and plain. They have no right to modify them one jot or tittle to accommodate their own convenience or views, nor the convenience of the world in which their campaign lies.

4. But the Church has changed. Humanity and God and the power of Christ are practically the same. The Church has departed from primitive paths. She has at last come to the Laodicean stage, where she says "I am rich and increased in goods, and have need of nothing." She is taking her ease, eating and drinking and being merry. She has become married to the world, and therefore has largely lost her influence over the world.

Let Christians humble themselves before God and make confession and restitution to Him and their fellow-men, and live consistent, sincere, honest, righteous, and holy lives, and walk as pilgrims and strangers on the earth, and rightly represent their heavenly citizenship, and the Church will need none of these modern substitutes to draw and hold the masses, and multitudes from the world will be constrained to acknowledge the living power of the religion of Jesus Christ and will flock to His Church for the manifold blessings for time and eternity which she alone can give. Yours for the "old paths."

ENEMIES OF THE CANTEEN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In THE TIMES of to-day, (Saturday,) in your editorial on "The Canteen," occurs this astonishing sentence: "On the other side are the liquor dealers and the theoretical prohibitionists, who are now found working together, not for the first time. One party or the other of them is evidently taken in by this alliance."

We fear it is the innocent editor who is taken in. We never heard of anybody else but Adjt. Gen. Corbin who put the saloon men and the prohibitionists on the same side of the canteen fight.

Please give us some proof for this strange statement. Let somebody speak out who does not draw on his imagination or his prejudices for his facts. I have yet to see a single word against the canteen from the saloon men. Here is a paragraph in the report presented by the Congressional Legislative Committee of the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association to the National Convention of that body at Baltimore last October:

> Although the unlicensed distributor of light beers in military reservations is given an advantage over his brother saloonist upon the outside, who has to pay the highest of high licenses, yet, believing with the most experienced military authorities that the canteen is conducive to the highest standard of sobriety and discipline, the retail dealers, through their National organization, aside from all selfish consideration, give their unqualified approval to this necessary adjunct of the military department and commend the firm and manly attitude of the President in its defense and maintenance.

These gentlemen do not oppose the canteen. Let us hear of some liquor dealers who do.

Electricity and Coal.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your Sunday issue, Dec. 23, I find the following sentence in the article from The Spectator on "Electrical Power for England":

> "Our supply of coal would last practically forever, because, except possibly for exportation to communities backward enough still to use steam, the only effective demand on it would be for the generation of electricity."

And this from The Spectator! Is it ignorance or carelessness that exudes such wisdom? The plain contention is that coal energy transformed into electrical energy at the mines would make the remaining coal supply "last forever." The real fact is: Transform coal energy into electric energy and the time limit for the exhaustion of England's coalfields will be reduced at least 10 per cent., without taking into account increased demand.

A steam engine, under ordinary conditions, will perform at least 10 per cent. more work if its energy is applied directly, than if electrical machinery is interposed. The ocean steamer is a strong case. Would The Spectator advise the use of electricity to drive the Lucania across the Atlantic in order to save coal? It has becu proposed with apparent confidence. The function of electricity is to transmit power, not to create it. Commercial electricity is the product of the steam engine. When the engine stops, the product ceases.

The best example of the economical transmission of power by electricity is to contrast the "cable" tramway with the electrical. Here "cable" and "electricity" are synonomous. The cable transmits the power of the engine to the cars. That is just what electricity does. But the cable weighs many tons. It requires immense energy to move it. Electricity is imponderable, and "just goes itself."

Cadets and Physical Courage.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Interest in the West Point Academy hazing affair has reached our pent-up Utica, as evidenced by the fact of the publication in your issue of to-day of the letter signed "R. D. P.," in which he holds up that institution to the scorn of the "patient taxpayers" of the country. His last paragraph, while ambiguous, may be taken as an advance criticism of the character of the average West Point cadet. I quote the same in full:

> The law of liberty and the spirit of the Constitution demand from us all the defense of the helpless and weak, however distasteful to us or unfitted the battle of life the subject may be. These cadets have shown by their own evidence that their characters are sadly lacking in sterling qualities requisite to make great soldiers.

The United States, like all other great nations, supports a school of the soldier. Ours is fully equipped with the very best that talent can produce, both in men and material, its highest aim being to furnish the army with men—all other requisites being equal—possessed of the highest standard of physical courage, for after all is said and done, the main duty of a soldier is in fighting the enemies of his country, and with this one characteristic of courage lacking, all others count as nothing. All the wisdom of tongue or pen—all the wisdom of Solomon—fails to supply the deficiency. The beau ideal of a soldier is one possessed of a matchless physical courage—always ready where duty may call.

It would seem from the evidence adduced that West Point traditions fully recognize these facts. The testimony from beginning to end, gives this conclusion, and any cadet with physical courage of a standard as low as that shown in this affair simply produced its natural results.

All honor to the discernment of the Cadet Corps of West Point.

WAS NOT A "DISAPPEARANCE."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An article on Page 12 of this morning's issue of THE TIMES with the heading "Man Who Used Unauthorized Stationery to Solicit Funds Disappears" conveys an entirely erroneous and totally unwarranted impression which even the body of the article itself does not justify.

Mr. Milbury was Assistant Secretary of the Committee of One Hundred on India Famine Relief, of which I had the honor to be a member. On the dissolution of this committee Mr. Milbury accepted a position with the International General Company and went to its Philadelphia office, where he has been ever since. This is not a "disappearance." Mr. Milbury has been a most active and faithful worker in several philanthropic and altruistic movements, and has always had and retains the respect and confidence of many of the best known public-spirited gentlemen in the city who have assisted in these and similar movements, and I hope will still continue to do so.

Mr. Milbury is entirely dependent upon his salary for his support, and probably gives largely of this toward the charities he is interested in. Of course, therefore, he is poor. As to the use of unauthorized stationery, this was a mistake on his part, but an innocent one, I understand it, he wrote only to a few personal friends who knew him and his past association, and a quantity of unused letter heads being on hand, for economy's sake he used these in making a personal appeal.

I received one such, but it never occurred to me for a moment to impugn his integrity or suppose he was attempting thereby to secure fictitious credit. If perchance such an appeal fell into the hands of an entire stranger, it is natural an inquiry should have been made. As a matter of course, such a use was "unauthorized," but I am sure no member of this committee knowing Mr. Milbury, or the work of the committee, could have indorsed such a perversion of the facts as your article contained or willingly allowed such a reflection upon Mr. Milbury's honesty.

THE NUISANCE OF TIPPING.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial on the demoralizing effect of tips in Bellevue Hospital suggests its application to every field on which it is practised. Tips are anything but an American custom, were not known here before the influx of Europeans lowered the standard of self-respect and would have been resented by American-born citizens in menial position as a gift of charity.

Tips in plain words are an act of bribery for the purpose of obtaining a more desirable seat, a nicer cut of meat, or a more attentive service than the giver is entitled to, and a less lavish guest may receive. Tips therefore are acts of dishonesty and not of generosity, as some people assert, and are equally damaging to the character of the giver as of the receiver. Tips do not benefit the receiver because his employer makes prospective gifts a part or the whole salary which he gives, and consequently makes the guest pay the price of his meal, and in addition the salary of the man who serves it.

Tips in Europe, where the reprehensible custom originated, are about 5 per cent. of the regular charge, this is 1 cent on 20 cents, or 5 cents on $1, while with us here 5 cents is the smallest tip, aggregating from 20 to 25 per cent., an unmitigated offense against political or private economy.

It is characteristic of the American people to submit for a long time to wrongs in public as in private life, but to stamp them out thoroughly when they overstep a certain limit, as our crusade against vice proposes to do. The close of the century seems to be the right time to do away with a number of nuisances among others the nuisance of tipping. Men of moderate incomes are loth to initiate the abolishing of tips from the fear to be counted poor or miserly, but our well-known men of wealth should take the lead in abstaining from tipping as a salutary example in the interest of public morality.

Christian Science and the Poor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Two young ladies, former school companions, were talking together about the principles of the so-called science which bears the name "Christian." One had become a Christian Scientist, the other had not. Said the latter:

"But about the poor; what do you do to relieve their wants and sufferings?"

"Oh, we do not go among them with material aid, as you do. There's no poverty; it is a mere idea, and has no reality in the Divine mind."

"You simply leave them to suffer hunger and cold without trying to help them, do you?"

"Oh, no; not at all. We think about them when we meet together, and by absent treatment reduce their self-supposed sufferings. Then we teach them to disbelieve in the reality of poverty and its imaginary trials. In this way we remove the root of their troubles."

"Well, Jennie, if that is all you Christian Scientists do for the multitudes of poor people in New York suffering this Winter for want of bread and coal and warm clothing I can't see what right you have to the name Christian, and I hope I shall never be brought into circumstances which will make me dependent upon your imaginary aid for real poverty."

This is a correct report of an actual conversation. Whether it represents the actual practice of the many thousands of well-to-do people in New York who hold the same faith the writer is not able to say. But the philosophy here set forth has a familiar sound, after reading the accounts of the trial now in progress before one of our Magistrates. The incident has a peculiar significance at this altruistic season.

The Boers and Their Cause.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Equally as a reader of your excellent paper and a lover of justice and liberty I must protest against the assertion of Mr. C. A. Bardes in to-day's issue that all lovers of justice and liberty should make the cause of the Boers their own. Of justice the Boers' conception is so lop-sided that they did not hesitate to temper with the judiciary when justice became inconvenient.

If by liberty we understand the rights to oppress, squeeze, and insult a large part of the population, (and as it happened the only one that was productive and progressive,) and to govern for the benefit of a small governing clique, then indeed Krugerism is the very incarnation of liberty, but in no other sense can it be identified with it.

Of the two, British Cape Colony and the Transvaal Republic, which do you think was the true republic? Where was the res publica, true civic liberty, and equal rights to all inhabitants practiced and legislated for? There can be but one answer. In the former we find true republican liberty, in the latter an almost arbitrary despotism. We must not permit ourselves to be hypnotized by the mere word republic.

I cordially sympathize with the heroic devotion and self-sacrificing spirit of the fighting Boer, but the worst thing we can wish them is their exclusive right to govern which is meant by their independence, and would mean strife, unhappiness, and ruin to the republics.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It was with much pleasure that I read your editorial in to-day's paper embodying Lieut. Col. James Parker's letter published in The Outlook, which I had previously perused. There is not a nobler work that your paper can urge, and if you will take the trouble to follow this up with a recommendation that every school child in America contribute one illustrated primer that Col. Parker asks for there would be more than enough to go around to every person in Manila. What more fitting Christmas present could we offer to our newly acquired possessions? These books could all be concentrated on the Pacific Coast and sent by Government transport to their destination. If you would advocate this work through your columns its success would be assured.

Condition of One Street Corner.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will THE TIMES kindly take notice of the shameful condition of Fifth Avenue and give Mr. Nagle a "roaster" in its influential editorials? The accumulation of filth at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifteenth Street is at least an inch thick, and if it is left much longer it will take a plow to dislodge it. If the Tammany Street Cleaning Department cannot handle the ordinary amount of refuse, how utterly impossible it will be when we get a snowstorm! The "White Wings" must be taking a Christmas holiday. In answer to "H's" letter on Christmas shopping, in your issue of Dec. 22, may I say that I agree with him as to the treatment one usually receives in the crowded department stores at this time of the year, but if the "mob" is met and treated with the Christmas spirit of good-fellowship, the same spirit that men and women both exercise at the time of the November election returns, maybe the howling Christmas mob, viewed through these spectacles may not prove quite so unpleasant.

CHRISTMAS—NINETEEN HUNDRED.

Sara Cone Bryant in Boston Transcript.

Once more the ageless miracle
Is wrought for sons of men:
The tide of months runs high, and brings
Its wonder round again.

The miracle of flesh transformed
By love, incarnate there:
The common life of common men,
Made briefly warm and rare.

The miracle of silence in
The clamor of the mart,
And in the old world's noise-dulled ear
The beating of her heart.

Just once in all the changing days
That make the changeless year
That common heart can whisper, Lo!
And trust the world to hear.

Just once the hourly thought of self,
The endless round of needs,
The ceaseless zeal of men to get
The crop of cares it feeds,

Are swept into oblivion
And covered deep above
By an outward-setting current from
That reincarnate love!

A single life lived long ago,
A single death once died,
And now the feast of memory
Which men call Christmas-tide.

That single fragrant memory
Immortal as the year,
Works all this living miracle
Which men call Christmas cheer.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL

Farce, Operetta, and Music Hall Burlesque.

"The House that Jack Built" by Broadhurst—De Angelis in Town—Gossip of the Stage.

"The House That Jack Built," a three-act farce by George Broadhurst, produced at the Madison Square Theatre last evening, calls for small critical consideration. It is distinguished by the wild improbability, the reckless use of ancient theatric device, the silly and unexplainable confusion of identities its author seems to regard as essential concomitants of farce, and it was obviously designated merely as entertainment for the frivolous. There was a great deal of laughter and applause last night, though most of both came from the rear of the auditorium. Perhaps the new piece will be successful. If it is, it will do no harm to either the morals of the community or the cause of dramatic art. "The House That Jack Built" is as clean as a nursery tale, and the cause of dramatic art has already suffered so much that mere tomfoolery cannot hurt it now.

There is no story in the new piece that any one but an inmate of Bedlam would attempt to repeat, and there is no vital situation in it, if so flimsy a thing can be said to have any vitality, which has not done duty a hundred times before. But there are some not altogether unbearable moments in its performance, even for a sensitive and sophisticated person.

Mr. Thomas Wise, its principal comedian, is, happily, a person so full of native humor that his very appearance causes hilarity, and his voice sends folks who laugh easily into ecstasies of merriment. He appears as a lazy rascal of a paperhanger, and he is "fun alive," even when he is simply and gravely measuring a panel with a foot rule. When he is slathering paste on slips of paper and telling a foolish young lady what he does not think of "Shelley's translation of the classics," (a phrase which seems to Mr. Broadhurst to embody all the learning of the ages,) he is positively side-splitting. In fact, Mr. Wise is a born humorist, and, unlike his contemporary, Mr. Macklin Arbuckle, he is well enough suited in his present part of a self-satisfied, oily, dishonest, ignorant, make-believe workingman.

There are some other competent comedians in the performance of "The House That Jack Built." Mrs. Yeamans, masquerading now as the rich widow of an Irish-American politician, but using all her old and desirable stock of nods and becks and wreathed smiles, is one of them, while her amusing and facile daughter Jennie is another. Miss Brandon Douglas, a pretty woman, bears a poor part with much dignity, and some appreciable humor. Mr. George Henry Trader seems to try to imitate Stuart Robson.

Mr. Broadhurst is often very trying to folks who take dramatic art, even in its lighter developments, seriously and look for wit, ingenuity, observation of nature, and a fresh and human play of humor even in farce. But much is done by the actors he now employs, as much as could be done, probably, to make his piece entertaining.

"A ROYAL ROGUE."

Mr. Jefferson De Angelis in a New Operatic Comedy.

Those who frequent theatrical entertainments and those who prepare them are fond of asserting that the applause of an audience is the proper measure of the value of a work. To be sure the application of this etandard in days gone by would have sealed the fate of every current opera from "Faust" to "Fidello," and nearly all the extant symphonies. But since there are some who place so great a value on the demonstrations of a first-night assembly, let the verdict of that at the Broadway Theatre be here recorded. Mr. Jefferson De Angelis appeared at that house last night in an "operatic comedy" called "A Royal Rogue," and the audience was apparently of the opinion that it was the most excruciatingly funny thing that had ever happened in this town and this era. Such continuous roars of laughter have not been heard at an entertainment of this kind in many, many moons.

The book which caused all this joy was written by Charles Klein, the lyrics by Grant Stewart, and the music by W. T. Francis. The title "operatic comedy" might fairly be replaced by "musical farce," but that is a mere matter of terminology. As Mr. De Angelis said in his humorous speech at the end of the first act—there are only two "Our object is to disseminate happiness as much a ticket." The story of the farce is really ingenious, the idea of travestying the return of an emigré in the days of the French Revolution is new, and the incidents are ludicrous. The librettist has even succeeded in providing Mr. De Angelis with a new acrobatic entrance. He is blown through a door by the explosion of a kitchen range, and thereafter the star indulges in a series of antics which are nonsensical, but assuredly amusing. As the humble restaurateur whose daughter induces him to masquerade as an exiled Duc de Chartres he is genuinely funny, with much extravagance, to be sure, but with fine success. The members of the Jacobin society, who are somewhat modernized so that they may sing contemporaneous Anarchistic sentiments, are comic, and Mr. Henry Norman, as their leader, gives a representation which is instinct with the true spirit of burlesque.

The music of the entertainment is commonplace, but it answers its purpose, which is not a high one. It is fortunate that the music is plain, for, except Mr. Norman, no one in the company can sing. Miss Eva Davenport, as a rich widow ambitious to restore the old régime, put her on the throne and share it with him, was amusing. The other women did their work industriously, but without distinction. The chorus was active and liberal in its display of hosiery, but it was not notable for its singing. But, on the whole, the new production is an attractive bundle of extravagant nonsense, and will be enjoyed by those who do not expect high art.

"Tannhaeuser" at the Opera.

The first change of opera took place at the Metropolitan Opera House last night. "Die Walküre" had been announced for performance, but when the audience reached the house, it found upon the outer portals the funereal bills announcing that owing to the illness of Miss Ternina, "Tannhäuser" would be given, with Mme. Gadski as Elizabeth. In spite of the change the house was a large one and the additors were apparently well pleased with the performance. Their pleasure was well deserved, for the performance was excellent. Mme. Gadski's Elizabeth has always been commendable for its earnestness, its poetic character, and its musical sincerity. It will be a source of gratification to all this conscientious artist's admirers to know that her voice begins the season in an excellent condition, while her art continues to gain in poise and certainty of effect.

The Landgrave last night was Robert Blass, a New York basso, who has been abroad for half a dozen years, and now returns to his native city. He displayed a fine, sonorous bass voice of beautiful quality, delivered with admirable vocal art. His style was dignified and artistic, and we shall undoubtedly have much pleasure from him in the course of the season. The other members of the cast were the same as the previous performance, Mr. Van Dyck being again in good voice and repeating his impressive impersonation of the wandering knight. Mr. Bertram was again a good Wolfram, and Mr. Damrosch conducted with skill.

THE IRVING PLACE THEATRE.

"Der Grosskaufmann" the Play for Christmas Week.

Kris Kringle was the drawing card last night in all parts of the city, and "Der Grosskaufmann" at the Irving Place Theatre made its début before a small but appreciative audience. The play is a volksstück in three acts, by Oskar Walther and Leo Stein. These plays, which tell of the home life of the German, are the ones in which the non-German theatregoers are particularly interested, but in them many well-grounded theories are upset. It was a serious upset in "Das Grobe Hemd" of last week to find the same old joke of the bad cooking of the daughter when the family is obliged to rely upon it.

That in the land where it has always been supposed that the servants cease from troubling, the housewife is at rest, and every German maiden is a cordon bleu. But it was even worse last night in "Der Grosskaufmann," for two pretty, ladylike young women smoke cigarettes in the drawing room of a dignified Kommerzienrath, and in his presence quite as a matter of course.

The most interesting part of last night's play had nothing to do with the title rôle. That was excellent in itself, taken by Max Hanseler, whose jolly laugh and rotund face and figure would make the success of a rôle at any time aside from his excellent acting. As a small shopkeeper who has aspirations for business on a larger scale than he has brain to control, Herr Hanseler has much amusing business and dialogue, but the love affairs of an artist, Balthasar Huber, Gustav V. Seyffertitz, and Fräulein, Marla Elsenhut, daughter of the Kommerzienrath, and Schwandorf, Franz Kierschner, form the most interesting element of the play and their reunion the real climax in the last act.

It is in the second act, apropos of nothing at all, unless it is the omnipresent coffee table, that the cigarettes appear. The two young women, Fräulein and Lucie v. Heldensfeld, Ada Merito, light their cigarettes with what should be great nonchalance. But however Berlin, the scene of the play, may tend to Parisian habits in smoking, it is not the custom of all German fräuleins.

Miss Merito has not had a good week's practice with her cigarette and it was too much for her. She lighted it, took one or two puffs, choked, and threw it on the floor. Fräulein Elsenhut was in better practice, but she held her cigarette in her mouth at a rakish angle, which showed plainly that she was up in the good form of cigarette smoking.

Herr von Seyffertitz had a new direction for his humorous efforts in last night's rôle, Franz Kierschner was excellent as the Kemmerzienrath, and Meta Bünger, the best of Herr Conreid's women character actresses, did some excellent work as Tante Therese, who brings the lovers together. Her high-bred merriment and laugh created the artist's studio, where she was mistaken for a model, were contagious. She had the air of being accustomed to polite society, which is something the other women doing a similar line of work lack.

E. H. SOTHERN RESUMES ACTING.

Actor Seen in "Hamlet" by a Large Audience in St. Louis.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 24.—E. H. Sothern resumed his tour to-night, after the long suspension of work caused by an injury to his foot, appearing with Miss Virginia Harned in Hamlet before a large audience.

Mr. Sothern's foot is now quite well, and there was no trace of the recent trouble in his acting. Both he and Miss Harned were enthusiastically welcomed.

MAY YOHE HERE AGAIN.

Her Appearance at the New York Theatre in "The Giddy Throng."

So many of the regular "reunders" of the Tenderloin as could crowd into the New York Theatre were there last night to pay homage to the British peerage, or so much of it as is represented by May Yohe, who is billed in the mess of nonsense produced last evening as Lady Francis Hope. Curiosity brought out a few besides the regular Tenderloin contingent. When May Yohe left here she was said to have three notes in her voice.

She has apparently lost two of them in her journey across the Atlantic. But with a fore-front—which in this case means from the neck to the waist line—blazing like the show window of a Broadway store in which are massed thousands of "Parisian diamonds"—your choice for $1—she displayed a couple of dresses and almost paralyzed the crowd with that one tone of her voice that is left when she tried to sing. The crowd applauded her because she was Lady Francis Hope. Rather sensibly she refused to try and sing again.

Besides her dazzling display of diamonds—the press agent says they are the "family heirlooms of her husband's noble ancestors"—she wore a liberal allowance of grease paints and a handsome gown of white crêpe de chine over yellow silk, a handsome opera cloak of white satin with elaborate gold appliqued work, and a huge picture hat of yellow silk illusion with immense yellow roses and green leaves. Altogether, she was a stunning picture. When she opened her mouth to speak she was all right.

But her efforts at singing reminded one of an amateur housekeeper trying to file a dull meat saw. It was interesting as an experiment, pretty tough as music. Iran Caryll is announced as having written the two little single-verse songs she essayed especially for her. If he had suspected she was going to try and sing them he probably wouldn't have done it. One was called "Kiss Me to Sleep," but if the one to whom she sang kissed her as often as she asked him to she wouldn't get any sleep before next Christmas.

The other effort was called "Down by the River." It was very bucolic and was sung as a schoolgirl of the primary grade might sing a song at a school exhibition such as are given in country schoolhouses.

May Yohe was on the stage for ten minutes at the most in the second scene of "The Giddy Throng." She was on again for two minutes in the last scene to show another gown of some pink stuff. She did not try to sing then, and so the crowd went away after the play better pleased with the last appearance than the first one.

Aside from Lady Hope's appearances there was a burlesque-revieve which was a hodgepodge of "Gay Lord Quex," "Richard Carvel," "David Harum," "L'Aiglon," and reminiscences of "Florodora," "San Toy," "The Runaway Girl," "Lost River," and other plays of the season for first measure.

It was without plot, and much of it was so pointless that about half the audience left before it had ended. It was one of those things that was unworthy of criticism, hardly of comment. There may be people who enjoy that sort of thing. They would enjoy the very showy bonnets that are interspersed and that wound up the show.

THEATRES AND MUSIC HALLS.

HARLEM OPERA HOUSE.—Mrs. Leslie Carter was seen last night in "Zaza."

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—Denman Thompson and his "Old Homestead" is the current attraction.

DEWEY THEATRE.—The performance offered by the management consisted of a sketch called "Miss Breezy of Chicago," followed by an exhibition of living pictures.

AMERICAN THEATRE.—The romantic drama "Faust" occupies the stage of this house for the present week, the management having taken unusual pains in the production of the play.

EDEN MUSEE.—The pantomime "Humpty-Dumpty" attracted many people to the Musee. It will be given each afternoon and evening. The exhibition of moving pictures is changed each hour and many of the subjects are full of mystery.

PROCTOR'S FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.—With Jean Marcel's living pictures as the leading feature, the bill was exceptionally good. James and Rose Finney, swimming experts, shared the honors with Staley and Birbeck, John Kernell, three Dumonds, Caswell and Arnold, Falke and Semon, Olympia Quartet, Fields and Ward.

HUBER'S MUSEUM.—A typical holiday programme is the offering this week. In the curio halls Francisco Lentime, the three-legged boy; the Dexters, mind readers; Giovanni's trained birds, and a number of others are to be seen. In the theatre besides a company of vaudevillers, Moore's colored minstrels entered on their second week.

MURRAY HILL THEATRE.—The members of the Donnelly Stock Company are to be heartily congratulated upon the success attending the performance of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" yesterday, and the interest shown by the large audiences present at both the afternoon and evening performance again proved the value of this style of revival.

PROCTOR'S ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIFTH STREET THEATRE.—Harlem patrons of vaudeville had a capital entertainment offered them yesterday. The performers were Sam, Clara, and Kittie Morton, in songs and dances; Charley Grapewin and Anna Chance, in "Above the Limit"; three Yoscarys, St. Onge brothers, Rehan and Collins, Charles Ulrick, Frank Walberti.

FOURTEENTH STREET THEATER.—Alice E. Ives and Jerome H. Eddy's rural drama, "The Village Postmaster," returned last night to fill a two weeks' engagement at this house. The occasion was the thousandth performance of the play. Manager Rosenquest distributed handsome cake knives of a bright metal as a souvenir of the event. The play was presented with all the original realistic effects. Archie Boyd portrayed the title rôle, Angela Russell was the heroine, and Frank E. Camp was the hero.

HURTIG & SEAMON'S MUSIC HALL.—A fine bill is presented this week headed by the Rossow Midgets in their clever acrobatic specialty; Blanche Ring, who sang several popular ballads; Edgar Atchison-Ely, Ward and Curran, in the new comedy act entitled "Josh's Troubles"; Young American Quintet, who rendered some new variations in melodies, and executed some new dances. Others in the programme were Todd Judge family, Lawson and Namon, bag punchers and trick bicycle riders, and Charlie Rossow.

PROCTOR'S TWENTY-THIRD STREET THEATRE.—The Four Cohens headed the programme in a farce called "Running for Office." The remaining part of the bill was the Sisters O'Meers, wire performers; Sager Midgley and Gertie Carlisle, Yorke and Adams, Ethel Levey, Ed Latell, Zeno, Carl, and Zeno, Mark Sullivan, and others.

PROCTOR'S PALACE.—Lydia Yeamans Titus in a singing specialty, Clifford and Hunt, Miss Alice Pierce, Linton and McIntyre, McCale and Daniels, the musical Kleists, and the Mimic Four made up the programme.

KOSTER & BIAL'S MUSIC HALL.—Mlle. Kita di Lorenza, the French chanteuse and danseuse, made her début yesterday and scored both a personal and artistic success. Mlle. Lorenza rendered in admirable style several clever songs in French and performed some very graceful dances. The remaining part of the bill was varied and interesting, and included Etta Butler, Dolan and Lenharr as "The Hightoned Burglars"; Mr. and Mrs. Hughes offered their sketch entitled "A Matrimonial Substitute," the Holloway Trio performed on the high wire, Jess Dandy impersonated different types of Hebrews, and many others were in the bill.

KEITH'S UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—The variety and quality of the entertainment offered yesterday was equal to anything given at this home of refined vaudeville so far this season. Every performer on the bill was the best in his class. The entertainment is headed by the first local appearance of R. G. Knowles, who has an original style of amusing his audiences, with a sketch called "Trifles That Trouble a Traveler." He rushes on to the stage as though he were a commuter making for the last train, rattles off a number of jokes, then bursts into song with the same rapidity, and concludes his performance with a veiled dance, all of which makes a good half hour entertainment. Joseph Hart and Carrie De Mar repeated their last week's success by presenting a changed sketch called "Dr. Chauncey's Visit." The Nawnes again appeared in the comedietta "Pat and the Genii," Ralph Johnston, the bicycle rider; the Newsky troupe of Russian dancers; Kitty Mitchell, the Bison City Quartet, Musical Dale, and a number of small acts were all most cordially received.

STEAMSHIP ANTILIA STRANDED.

Went Ashore on Great Egg Harbor Bar —Her Two Passengers Landed.

F. T. Montell & Sons, shipping agents, of 63 Pine Street, received word yesterday morning that the British steamship Antilla, for which they are the local agents, had gone ashore on the New Jersey coast about forty miles north of the Delaware Breakwater, on a reef known as the Great Egg Harbor Bar. There were only two passengers on board—John A. Sherman of Nassau and Charles R. Brown of Denver. They were safely landed.

The agents telegraphed to the North American Wrecking Company at the Delaware Breakwater, and a tug was sent out to the troubled vessel's assistance shortly after 10 o'clock. Later another tug followed, accompanied by a lighter. Up to last night nothing further had been heard by the agents, who said that they had no doubt that the Antilla would be safely afloat by this morning.

The steamship is a small one, her gross tonnage being only 929. She was built in Grangemouth, Scotland, in 1893, but her hailing port is Nassau, New Providence, and she carries an American passenger license. Her commander is Capt. Montell, who is also her principal owner. She has aboard a miscellaneous cargo, consisting mostly of sponges and bananas.

NO BICYCLE FOR WILLIE.

Santa Claus Murdock Couldn't Get It for 50 Cents, So Went Away in Disgust.

Detective Kammer of the West Forty-seventh Street Station was standing on the station house steps last night when a man rushed up, told him that he was a storekeeper, and that a man was creating a disturbance in his store because he wouldn't sell a bicycle to him for 50 cents. He urged the detective to accompany him.

On the corner of Ninth Avenue a large crowd was watching a small crowd struggling for the possession of a little three-wheeled velocipede. It turned out that an Irishman named Murdock had asked the storekeeper, whose name is Klein, the cost of the machine, and the reply was "Fifty cents."

The Irishman grabbed the velocipede and offered Klein 50 cents, but the storekeeper repented and said he would not take that amount for it. He seized the other end of the velocipede, and the friends of both seized parts of it, and there was struggling that looked as if it would be fighting in a few minutes, when Kammer came up.

"He said he'd sell the thing to me for 50 cents, and I want it for me boy, Willie," said the Irishman.

"Fifty cents is too cheap," said Klein. "It cost me $1.85. He can have for $2.10."

"Ye'll get no more than 50 cents," said the Irishman, while the crowd egged the men on.

The storekeeper was obdurate, and Murdock dropped his end of the wheel and walked away, saying:

"Willie'll get no Christmas bicycle this year."

Fatal End to Old Kentucky Feud.

LONDON, Ky., Dec. 24.—Two men were killed and two wounded at Faris Distillery, in Clay County, twelve miles from here, late yesterday. Four members of the Sizemore family on one side, and Henry Barrett and W. H. Young on the other, engaged in a desperate fight. Young and one of the Sizemores were killed, and two of the Sizemores were probably fatally wounded. An old feud was the cause of the trouble.

Sound Liner to be Sold.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 24.—The steamer Continental, one of the oldest Sound liners, is being stripped of her furnishings and machinery at her berth at Heaton's Wharf, in this city, and will be sold. It is expected that the boat will be converted into a coal barge, and will join the fleet to which other old boats, including the Narragansett of the Stonington Line, have been relegated.

Burglars Rob a Safe.

PORT JEFFERSON, L. I., Dec. 24.—When Secretary Wheeler of the Port Jefferson Milling Company passed the office of the company last evening he saw that a window was open, and discovered that burglars had broken open the safe and taken $40 in cash. A piece of jewelry belonging to the Secretary was also missing. The burglars left behind a number of stock certificates and several hundred dollars in checks.

Ask Dissolution of Brennan & Co.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 24.—Suit was filed to-day for the dissolution of the charter of Brennan & Company, (Southwestern Agricultural Works,) the appointment of a receiver for the sale of the property, and a division of assets among the stockholders. The suit results from a disagreement among the officers. The Southwestern Agricultural Works has had a long and successful career. Two to three hundred men are employed at its plant in this city.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

There will be more country parties to-day than for some years past on Christmas, and most of the country houses in and around Hempstead, Westbury, and Cedarhurst are open and filled with guests, and the country-club houses at Tuxedo, Meadow Brook, Cedarhurst, Ardsley, Knollwood, Westchester, and Dongan Hills, S. I., will be the mecca all day for the many well-known people who are still in the respective suburbs of which they are the social centres. All the larger houses on the Upper Hudson are open, but for the most part their owners are entertaining family parties. For the first time in some years Biltmore is not the Christmas resort of the majority of the members of the Vanderbilt family. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., will spend the day at Hempstead, L. I., and will leave town this morning with Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs. Mrs. Vanderbilt was seen shopping yesterday. W. K. Vanderbilt, Sr., will probably spend the day at Ophir Cot, Westchester. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt will have a few friends at Hyde Park, and Dr. Seward Webb and Mrs. Webb are, as usual, with their children and some friends, at Shelburne Farms, Vt. Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly, with their daughters and some young friends, are at Florham for the day. Mrs. Shepard and Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Sloane and their respective families will have a family dinner in town.

***

There will be more large family dinners to-night than for many Christmases past. Mr. and Mrs. William Rhinelander will give one of thirty or more covers at Sherry's. Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Wilson will have a dinner at their residence, and among other family dinners will be those to be given by W. S. Gurnee, Jr., Mrs. William Barclay Parsons, Mrs. William Schermerhorn, the Misses Furniss, Mrs. de Peyster, Mrs. Frederic Gallatin, Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry, and others.

***

Henry H. Andrew of Boston and Miss Mary Raymond Garrettson, daughter of Rutland M. Garrettson of 230 West Ninety-seventh Street, will be married at noon on Jan. 16 at the residence of the bride's father. The Rev. Dr. John Peters of St. Michael's Church will perform the ceremony. After their wedding Mr. and Mrs. Andrew will sail for Europe and will spend the late Winter and Spring abroad.

***

Mr. and Mrs. James L. Breese gave last evening at Mr. Breese's studio in West Sixteenth Street a dinner for a number of this season's débutantes. There were twenty-two covers. The débutante guests were the Misses Helen Barney, Eleanor Jay, Nathalie Schenck, Kathleen Neilson, Mary Harriman, Leila Bryce, Helen Kountze, Helen Parrish, Cryder, and Rosamond Street. After dinner other guests to the number of about fifty came in, and there was a cotillion of thirty-five couples, led by Alexander Hadden, dancing with Miss Helen Barney. The large studio, which has been the scene of so many original entertainments, was artistically decorated with English holly, mistletoe, and Christmas greens. A Hungarian and a Venetian band played alternately during the evening. The favors were pretty trifles appropriate to the Christmastide. Among the after-dinner guests who took part in the cotillion were the Misses Evelyn Parsons, Josephine Williams, Cecil Boardman, and Messrs. Kountze, Schieffelin, Benjamin, Robinson, Gallatin, De Peyster, and Street.

***

Mrs. C. Du Bois Wagstaff will give a large dinner to débutantes and in honor of one of the more prominent ones of this season, at her residence, 15 West Twenty-first Street, on Friday evening.

***

Mr. and Mrs. James Speyer gave a theatre party last evening, and afterward entertained their guests at supper at their residence, on Madison Avenue. Covers were laid for fourteen.

***

The last detachment of the small army of boys and girls, young men and maidens, coming from the large New England colleges and schools for their Christmas holidays, arrived at the Grand Central Station yesterday afternoon. The station resembled a fashionable reception, with the crowd of parents, relatives, and guardians awaiting the young people. There will be a series of theatre parties, dinners, and dances for the next few nights for these school children and college men and women. New York society will give itself up largely to the entertainment of the young people from now on until New Year's. Mrs. Frederic Gallatin will give a Christmas party for children at her residence on Thursday afternoon.

***

Immediately after the New Year and the Whitney ball the departures for Aiken will begin in force. An advance guard of well-known men and women who favor this Southern resort has already left, and is "tenting on the old camp ground." Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., William R. Travers, Mrs. Duncan Elliot, and ex-Secretary Whitney will be the leaders in the Winter's diversions at Aiken. The Palmetto Club links are said to be in excellent condition, and the meets and runs with Eugene Reynal's pack of beagles and Thomas Hitchcock, Jr.'s, pack of hounds, have already begun.

***

Much interest is expressed in the report cabled from London that Lord Salisbury is to have the Hon. Arthur Hugh Smith Barry elevated to the peerage. Mr. Smith Barry is related by marriage to the well-known family of Wadsworth. He married Mrs. Arthur Post, a sister of Mrs. Adair, and a daughter of the late Gen. James Wadsworth of Geneseo.

The London Mail says: "Two pretty American girls are coming to England next Summer, and will no doubt be presented at Court, after having made their début in New York. They are the twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills. Mrs. Mills is the twin sister of Mr. Cavendish Bentinck, a rather curious instance of hereditary twins, and these two girls will go about a great deal with their cousins, the Misses Bentinck, the younger of whom is also to come out next year." The Mail is misinformed as to the Misses Mills making their début this season in New York. It is understood that they will not be brought out until next season.

Letters from Egypt report that the Autumn and Winter season has begun unusually early, and that Cairo has never before been so filled with guests at so early a date. There were as many as 180 people at Shepheard's Hotel in November's last week. The departure of the second tourist steamer of the season depleted this number considerably, and Luxor and Assouan have correspondingly benefited. The impetuous hurry, so prominent a characteristic of American travelers, introduced some years ago a new era in the annals of Nile exploration. To meet the popular demand a number of small steamers built to accommodate private parties of from eight to fifteen were constructed, and instead of three months in an antiquated dahabeah, people rush from Cairo to Assouan and back in something under three weeks, stopping of course at the more important places of interest. W. P. Clyde of Philadelphia has recently chartered the steamer Seraphi for the Nile trip, taking with him as his guests the Countess of Strafford, Viscount and Viscountess Enfield, and Sir P. Burne-Jones. W. Powell Mason of Boston, an uncle of Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain, has chartered a steam dahabeah, the Oonus, for a trip to the First Cataract and back early in January, and among his guests will be Mrs. Chamberlain.

THIEVES CARTED AWAY GOODS.

Rosenfeld & Co. Lose $3,000 Worth of Stock Over Night.

The wholesale upholstery trimmings establishment of M. Rosenfeld & Co., at 240, 242, and 244 Broadway, Williamsburg, was robbed of over $3,000 worth of goods some time between Saturday night and yesterday morning. The robbery was discovered by the Superintendent when he entered the building yesterday morning. Everything was in confusion. The plunder must have been carried away on a truck. The firm occupies the ground floor of the building, the store being 140 feet deep. Adjoining the building is the Williamsburg Post Office, where a large force of men work day and night, while trolley cars pass to and fro, as well as elevated trains, and the Clymer Street Police Station is almost within a stone's throw. A bright light is always left burning all night.

An investigation showed that the burglars had sawed away the stout iron window bars in the back part of the store. The plunder must have been removed through the window the thieves had entered and to one or the other side streets, where a truck was in waiting.

EARTHQUAKE AT SANTIAGO.

Severe Shock Does Damage in the City and Alarms the Inhabitants.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Dec. 24.—The second earthquake experienced by this district within a month occurred at noon today.

The shocks were at first scarcely perceptible, but they increased steadily, and the last was the most severe known for many years. It would be almost impossible to injure the massive masonry of the buildings constituting the principal portion of the city, but some damage was done in the poorer quarter, and one child was badly injured by a falling tile.

The people of the city have a deadly fear of seismic disturbances, owing to the destruction of a cathedral long ago. Many of them now predict an early disaster, because of the two earthquakes that have visited Santiago within thirty days.

VANDERBILT-FRENCH WEDDING.

Gifts Are Beginning to Arrive at Harbourview, Newport.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Dec. 24.—A carload of evergreens, holly, trees, and other decorative stuffs arrived to-day for Mrs. F. O. French, to be used in partial decoration of Harbourview, where the wedding breakfast and reception are to follow the wedding of her daughter, Miss Elsie French, to Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Jan. 14. The decorators are now at work on the dining hall, the reception room, and the inclosed verandas, where some of the tables for the wedding breakfast will be placed.

The exterior of the house is also to be decorated with evergreen. On the lawn will be a large number of cold weather plants, palms, and evergreen trees.

Several large cases of wedding gifts for Miss French have already arrived. They have been sent to the specially chartered vault at the Aquidneck National Bank, where all the gifts will be sent for safe keeping immediately after their inspection, as Mrs. French and her daughter have decided not to keep any gift in the cottage over night.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—The Christmas gayeties were inaugurated this evening at several of the embassies and legations. The German Ambassador, according to the custom of his country, celebrated the festival on the eve rather than on the day of the Nativity, giving a dinner party limited to the members of the Emperor's offical family in America.

Later in the evening nearly the entire European contingent gathered at the legation of Austria-Hungary, where the Minister and Madam Hengelmüller had a Christmas party, with a large and handsomely decorated tree as its special attraction. Among those present were the British Ambassador and Lady Pauncefote, the Misses Pauncefote, the German Ambassador, the Spanish Minister, and the Duchess de Arcos, the Belgian Minister and Countess Lichtervelde, the Portuguese Minister and Tsousouphas, the Santo Tyrso, and most of the Secretaries and attachés of the legations.

Mr. and Mrs. Cropper gave a small dance this evening in honor of Miss Lydia Loring, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. F. B. Loring, who is making her début. The guests included many of the younger members of the smart set.

BOY KILLED IN A FIGHT.

Three Men Knock Him Down in a Bowery Restaurant.

There seems to be a good deal of mystery, according to the police stories, surrounding the death of seventeen-year-old George Schmidt of 335 East Eleventh Street, who died in "Sam's" restaurant, 99 Bowery, after fighting there with three men, who escaped.

Schmidt, in company with George Cromer of 96 Bowery, entered the resturant shortly after 3 o'clock yesterday morning and ordered something to eat. Soon afterward a large man, whose identity is not known, entered and made an insulting remark to Cromer. Schmidt resented it, and engaged the stranger in a fight. During the struggle two young men known to the police as "Bob" and "Billy" entered with a young woman, and promptly took part in the fight against Schmidt, who, overpowered by numbers, fell to the floor. Cromer bent over him, and found him unconscious and blue in the face. Meanwhile Schmidt's three assailants went out. The unconscious man was carried to the sidewalk and an ambulance summoned. The surgeon found him dead. A large piece of bread was taken from Schmidt's throat, and the surgeon said this might have caused him to choke to death. The Coroner's autopsy held on the body yesterday showed that death was caused by a hemorrhage of the brain caused by several violent blows on the head.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Albert B. Brady.

Albert B. Brady, Secretary of the S. S. McClure Company, died on Sunday of heart disease, in Rome, Italy. Mr. Brady had long been suffering from heart trouble, and for a year had been unable to attend to business. He went to Germany last Spring for treatment, and was at Rome with his family on the way to spend the Winter in Egypt. Mr. Brady was born in Wappalo, Iowa, thirty-eight years ago. His early education was in the public schools at Davenport, Iowa. He was graduated from Knox College, in the class of 1882, being a classmate of S. S. McClure and John S. Phillips. The intimate association of these three, which began in the management of a college paper, continued, and later they joined in the founding of McClure's Magazine. After graduation Mr. Brady entered into partnership with his brother, Oscar W. Brady, in the publication of The Davenport Daily Times. In 1893 he came to New York and became Secretary of the S. S. McClure Company. He married Miss Barrie Wakefield, of Bloomington, Ill., who, with two children, survives him. The body will be brought to this country for burial.

Sidney Green Miller.

Sidney Green Miller, some years ago a well-known civil engineer and railroad builder, died at the home of his son, G. W. Miller, 62 West Ninety-third Street, last night. Mr. Miller was eighty-four years old, and was born in this city. He was the only surviving son of Judge Sylvanus Miller, who was graduated from Columbia College in 1795 and was the first Surrogate of New York. Mr. Miller was associated with Ferris Bishop in the building of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad and the Naugatuck Road, and also built a number of railroads in Virginia and the South. He is survived by four daughters and two sons.

Jacob Pentz.

Jacob Pentz, one of the editors of Fishing and Shooting, a weekly publication devoted to sports, and a contributor to the daily newspapers of this city, died at his home, in New Brighton, S. I., yesterday, after an illness of eight weeks. Mr. Pentz was sixty-eight years old, and was born in New York. He was an authority on dogs and had many fine animals in his kennels. He was an exhibitor at all the large bench shows. Mr. Pentz was a widower, and leaves five sons and two daughters. The funeral will be on Thursday from his home in New Brighton.

Obituary Notes.

MOSES P. NEAL, ex-Mayor and a prominent business man, died at Oswego, N. Y., on Sunday, aged seventy years.

FRANKLIN B. KINNARD, a pioneer in the Yellowstone Valley, was found dead in his room at a hotel at Miles City, Mont., today. He was formerly a heavy contractor and built large sections of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

RUFUS KING MCHARG, real estate broker, whose offices were at 7 Pine Street, died suddenly at his home, 61 West Seventeenth Street, yesterday afternoon. He was eighty years old. Arrangements for the funeral had not been completed last night.

GEORGE W. PATTISON, a pioneer publisher and printer known throughout Michigan and several other States, died at his home in Birmingham on Sunday. He established The Western Star, the first daily paper published in Buffalo, N. Y., in 1824; also The Grand River Times, now The Grand Rapids (Mich.) Democrat, in 1837. He was born in Farmington, N. Y. He was about eighty-three years of age.

FIREMEN SHOCKED BY WIRES.

Obstruction Cut by a Guttenberg Assemblyman Who Climbed a Pole.

A number of firemen working to save August Meierdierck's hotel on the Hudson Boulevard, Guttenberg, yesterday, were so badly shocked by coming in contact with telegraph and telephone wires that they were obliged to stop work, although none was seriously hurt. Assemblyman William V. Lutz put an end to the trouble by climbing a pole and cutting the wires.

The hotel was destroyed, with its contents, and the loss is estimated at $15,000.

BOYS CLING TO A BURGLAR.

Bring About Recapture of Man Who Escaped from Policeman.

The sight of a tall, powerfully built man trying to shake off two small boys who hung on to him like grim death, drew together a large crowd of early morning pedestrians on Washington Street, Hoboken, yesterday. One of the urchins had twined himself around the man

SPORT ON THE SPEEDWAY

Amateur Drivers in Brushes on the Harlem River Course.

ALVES BEAT TROTTER FRANKER

Ex-Mayor Grant Won Several Good Tilts Driving Ellert—Mahlon Won a Three-Cornered Contest.

The lower stretch of the Harlem River Speedway was well patronized yesterday afternoon by road drivers and their fast steppers, who furnished some excellent sport. About the best and most interesting brush of the afternoon was between the famous bay gelding Alves, (2:09¾,) owned by Nathan Straus, and the Chicago trotter Franker, owned by C. K. G. Billings. On numerous occasions the two trotters have been matched against each other and honors were about even. When Mr. Straus proposed a brush yesterday afternoon Mr. Billings agreed at once, and Mr. Straus resigned the reins to Trainer Isaac Fleming, while Mr. Billings handled Franker. The start, which was made just south of High Bridge, was as fair as could be expected under the circumstances. Franker was quicker in getting away, and gained a lead, but Alves soon closed the gap, and both horses came down the stretch under the whip nose and nose. A dead heat seemed inevitable, until Trainer Fleming, by good horsemanship, urged Alves to make a spurt, and, small as the effort was, it landed him a winner by a head. Franker, however, finishing much stronger and in better form than Alves, who had been given considerable work during the afternoon.

Ex-Mayor Hugh J. Grant won several very lively brushes behind Ellert, (2:11,) owned by C. K. G. Billings.

Franker in a later trip down the stretch picked up the trotter James L., (2:09,) driven by Sergt. G. W. Smith. It seemed easy enough for Franker to take James L. along, but when he tried to leave him he found he had struck a snag, and Mr. Billings was obliged to urge Franker with voice and whip to his utmost speed, and then he only won by a narrow margin.

A very pretty three-cornered brush took place between Mahlon, (2:14¾,) driven by Charles Reilly; Nettie B., driven by David Lamar, and Woodsboy, (2:25¾,) driven by William Clark of Yonkers. Woodsboy took the lead at the start, but did not seem to be in the best of form, and soon fell behind. Mahlon taking the lead and holding it to the finish post, where he was a length to the good. Red Lawn, (2:16¾,) driven by David Lamar, was turned to a good start with the trotter Crystal Chimes, driven by James Murphy. The two first quarters past. It was a nip and tuck race, but after that point had been passed Red Lawn had things pretty much her own way. In a second heat Crystal Chimes made a far better showing and lost by not more than a head.

The pacer Smith, driven by M. Wright, led a bunch home, among whom were Ellert, (2:11,) Franker, and the bay mare Rival, (2:17½,) driven by John F. Cockerill. Ellert also carried Rival to a break.

Several brushes have been arranged for this morning, among which is a team race between T. Maxfield's pair, composed of Amoken, Jr., and Monopol, and James Murphy's team Tom and Lotus.

MATINEE RACES AT LAKEWOOD.

First Meeting by New Club Will Be Held To-day.

The horsemen wintering at Lakewood, N. J., have organized a driving club, with headquarters and clubhouse at the Ranalph track, Lakewood, where matinée races will be held at regular intervals through the season. The first matinée will be held to-day, when a programme of two harness events and one running race will be decided. It is proposed to have racing every other week, and perhaps one meeting each week if entries can be obtained and local interest holds on. The track which will be used is a six furlongs oval, with easy turns and sixty feet width on front and back stretch. The officers of the new organization, the Lakewood Riding and Driving Club, are: Frank D. Beard, President; Charles Le Comte, Vice President; Dr. C. H. Perry, Secretary, and W. J. Harrison, Treasurer. The programme for this afternoon's events follows:

First Race.—2:26 Class, trotters and pacers; two prizes.—S. Graver's Mutual C., 2:19¼; J. Ascott's Manhassa Boy, 2:26; W. H. Shearman's Joe Nichar, 2:19½; J. H. Reid's Telescope, 2:24½; Howard Applegate's Charles S., 2:21¾.

Second Race.—2:20 Class, trotters and pacers; two prizes.—P. Helman's Sophia Russell, A. P. Shearman's Baby Bill, R. A. Cook's Snowball, S. Graver's Bulletin, Frank Bratner's Billy B., A. H. Iron's Dorothy.

Third Race.—Running; one-half mile; one prize.—J. B. Le Comte's The Brother, C. H. Perry's Seven Stars, William L. Leighton's Pete, Ernest Le Comte's Gold Bars.

FIGHT ON IN DRIVING CLUB.

Factions in Brooklyn Organization Struggling for Control.

A lively fight for control of the affairs of the Parkway Driving Club of Brooklyn is promised at the annual election, in January, of the organization, which is composed of the most prominent amateur reinsmen, road drivers, and patrons of the light-harness horse in Kings County. Alleged mismanagement of the club's affairs in the past year, notably in the conduct of race meetings on the club's half-mile track, on King's Highway and the Boulevard, and adjoining the Gravesend race track, has stirred up a strong opposition to the present administration, and with the old officers up for re-election as the club's official nominees, and a ticket made up of the most aggressive of the opposing faction being pushed forward in the hope of displacing the incumbents, members of the club are deep in politics.

The chief cause of complaint against the present management grew out of an unsatisfactory state of the club's finances. Matters which led to this were the failure to hold the Spring harness racing meeting and the somewhat disastrous results of the race meeting held in the Fall. The faction in power has something the better of the struggle at present, but the opposition is steadily gaining in strength.

Notes of the Harness Horse.

The announcement has been made that the Kentucky Trading Horse Breeders' Association of Lexington, Ky., has decided to increase the guaranteed value of the Kentucky Futurity from $10,000 to $21,000, the increase of $5,000 being prompted by the prosperity of the association's harness race meeting at Lexington.

European buyers of American-bred trotting horses are still busy picking up choice animals, and the last purchases reported are Grace Greenlander, (2:18¼,) by Norval, dam Lady Hindoo, (2:28½,) and Patram, (2:27½,) by Miller & Co. of Liverpool, England. The same firm bought a number of other horses not so well known, all to be shipped to England.

The laying out and grading the new half-mile trotting track at Brentwood, N. Y., has been completed, and with a few weeks more of work in the Spring, the course will be ready for racing. The track is pronounced by horsemen to be admirably suited to the purpose it was constructed for, and an up to date and excellent equipment is promised by the builders when the course is thrown open, early next Summer, for matinée races, which the wealthy horse owners and road drivers who spend the warm months there are expected to make successful.

The green trotter Salient, by Wickliffe, having astonished Speedway drivers by beating J. W. Cornish's fast horse David B., (2:09¼,) in a brush on the Speedway, is a candidate for still further honors, as his owner, Charles Weiland, has issued a challenge for a race with any green horse that may be brought to meet him. Salient's improvement has been so quick and decided that he is a formidable rival in the matter of development to Prince D., the green pacer bought by C. R. Bentley of Buffalo, at Muncie, Ind., for $3,000 only a few days ago. Prince D. is expected to become a star of the turf next season. Shrewd horsemen who have seen Salient in action say that with proper handling he, too, may cause a stir in harness racing.

Thomas W. Lawson, the Boston millionaire, whose prominence in connection with the building of a yacht to defend the America's Cup in an international race at present overshadows his connection with light harness racing, has engaged as assistant trainer of his stable of trotting horses, the clever young horseman, John Laughlin of Lexington, Ky. Laughlin last year trained for J. C. McCoy, the Delaware turfman, in whose stable Dorsima was trained before Mr. Lawson owned the horse. Thus Laughlin will again have a say in the management of the great horse. A number of young trotters, bought from Scott Newman, breeder of Boralma, by Mr. Lawson, will remain on Newman's Kentucky farm until early Spring, when they will be put in training under Laughlin's care.

DALY ESTATE HORSE SALE.

Advance Catalogue Out for an Extraordinary Offering of Thoroughbreds.

The advance catalogue of the great sale of thoroughbred horses from the late Marcus Daly's Bitter Root Stock Farm, at Hamilton, Mont., has just been issued by the Fasig-Tipton Horse Auction Company. In very condensed form, announcement is made of general facts concerning the sale, which will be one of the most important, if not actually the greatest sale of thoroughbred racing stock ever held in America. Only one such event, the dispersal of the late August Belmont's immense breeding establishment ten years ago, compares with the coming sale. The dates fixed are Jan. 30 and 31 and Feb. 1, in Madison Square Garden. All details of the offering are in the hands of the Fasig-Tipton Company, and preparations will be made to accommodate the greatest crowds that ever gathered to attend such an event, for breeders from all over the United States will be present in person, and from inquiries received from England, France, and other horse breeding European countries, a number of foreign buyers will be on hand, interested especially in the great Hanover horse, Hamburg. Even in Australia interest in the future of Hamburg is felt.

In the catalogue, eight royally bred stallions, ninety-eight of the choicest brood mares that money and care could collect, and all supposed to be in foal; twelve racehorses in training that will be each three years old at the time they are sold, and sixty-six of them two years old in active training and being fitted to race in the coming Spring are named to be sold. The stallions are, first of all, the mighty Hamburg, by Hanover-Lady Reel, now five years old; Tammany, by the English Derby winner, Iroquois, and himself a great race horse; Ogden, winner of a sensational Futurity; Inverness, an imported horse of fashionable English blood; Isidor and Bathampton, both imported and both high-class race horses; The Pepper and Bute. Of the mares, thirty-one were bred to Hamburg, these including the dams of Bannockburn, Motley, Isidor, Chacornac, and First Mate, and having among them such individuals as Cassoopia, Cassalla, Meriden, and Shipmate. Fourteen others were bred to Ogden, fourteen to Isidor, twenty-six to Bathampton, ten to The Pepper, and others to St. Angelo, Scottish Chieftain, and the Musket horse, Trenton. The coming three-year-olds in training and the coming two-year-olds are a splendidly bred lot of horses, and of great promise.

Race Horses Shipped to England.

Ten cargo of 250 American horses shipped from this port yesterday on the Atlantic Transport liner Minnehaha, which sailed for London early in the morning, there were six thoroughbred race horses, five of which were consigned in the name of James R. and Foxhall P. Keene, and one sent by William C. Whitney. The identity of the animals was not disclosed. They were loaded on the ship in much the same manner that earlier consignments by the same owners were sent on the same ship. Agents of the Atlantic Transport Line said the animals were yearlings, sent to reinforce the Keene and Whitney stables, already in England.

Tod Sloan Will Ride To-day.

AMERICAN LEAGUE NO. 2.

Five Cities Have Been Decided on for the New Baseball Organization.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—The American League No. 2—the only name which can be given the baseball organization until another is officially adopted—will be launched in this city next Thursday. At a conference to-night between President Johnson of the American League, Attorney Thomas J. Navin of Detroit, and George W. Burnham, it was decided to call a meeting for that purpose. The league will be organized at first with five cities—Detroit, Toledo, Minneapolis, Kansas City, and Louisville, but will eventually be made to include eight cities. This is not due to any lack of available territory, but is because the new league, like the American, is embarrassed by a surplus of good cities which desire franchises in the new body. Incidentally it is also due to the fact that the American League's circuit is not yet definitely fixed, and it is not considered desirable to complete the new circuit until it is decided what cities will be abandoned by the American. Grand Rapids, Buffalo St. Paul, and Indianapolis are strong possibilities for the new league, and there are half a dozen others who are applicants for franchises. Mr. Navin came from New York for the conference, and was accompanied by Mr. Burnham. They met President Johnson by appointment, and after a brief conference, Mr. Navin returned to Detroit.

"We are all ready to organize, and have been for a week," said Mr. Navin. "We have simply been waiting for Mr. Johnson to return before going ahead with our plans. We want Mr. Johnson for President, and will organize under his guidance and direction. We are looking for protection from the American League, and are ready to live and die with it. We will have no connection with the National League. We could form a strong circuit of eight clubs tomorrow if necessary, but prefer to wait and find out just what cities the American League will abandon, so as to take in the best cities in the West."

It was announced to-night that "Sam" Thompson, the former Philadelphia ball player, would have the franchise in Louisville. He has been kept on the reserve list for four or five years without playing, and so could not break into the game elsewhere. Navin will be behind the Detroit club. President Stroebel of the Inter-State League controls the Toledo club and plant already. In Kansas City, James Manning has a baseball plant ready for occupancy at any moment, and will sell or lease it to the new promoters in short order. Saulspaugh's lease of the Minneapolis grounds does not expire until July, and he is the logical backer in the city of millers. By the action contemplated, therefore, the plans of the Western league to appropriate the abandoned American League territory will be pretty effectually headed off.

"I cannot act as President of American League No. 2," said Ban Johnson to-night when discussing the policy to be pursued toward the new organization. "I will assist in the organization in every way possible, for I think the new League will be a success, as it has good cities to draw from. We shall help wherever we can, but I cannot bind myself with the present unsettled condition of affairs. With a new circuit in the American League, I could not in justice to either organization undertake more work. Besides, the complications liable to spring up at any time are likely to make this a busy Winter. But I have the kindliest feelings for the new promoters, and will extend any assistance possible at the organization session on Thursday."

President Johnson does not expect any agreement to be reached with the National League, citing the case of McGraw and Robinson as an almost insurmountable barrier, but he thinks there will be only individual attempts to steal players.

Needed Accessory.

"I want you to dog his footsteps," said the detective chief.

"Then you'll have to give me a pointer," remarked Sleuthpup.—Philadelphia Record.

TO-DAY'S SPORTING EVENTS.

Trap Shooting on Club Grounds In and About the City—Athletic Contests.

Although the lengthy and comprehensive programme of Christmas Day sports includes every reasonable outdoor recreation, the predominating pastime of the day will be trap shooting, both at live birds and clay targets. One of the largest and most important shoots of the day will be held at the grounds of the Carteret Gun Club at Garden City, L. I., where the annual competition for the Holiday Cup and several sweepstakes events will be decided.

Down at Bay Ridge the Crescent Athletic Club will hold its all-day events at the club traps. The Holiday Cup, a quartet of mounted panels of game, and two imported steins are offered by the club for competition in the regular events, and in addition there will be the usual number of sweepstakes. The list follows:

AUTOMOBILE CLUB'S NEW HOME.

Will Move Into the Old Veterans' Club Quarters in February.

President A. R. Shattuck of the Automobile Club of America announced yesterday that definite arrangements had been made for new club quarters. The entire second floor of the Plaza Bank Building, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-eighth Street, has been rented, and the club will move from the present home, in the Waldorf-Astoria, about Feb. 1. The new quarters will give more commodious and comfortable rooms in every respect than the club enjoys at present. With the rapid increase of membership more room is needed, not only for the customary meetings, but for the lectures and practical automobile talks given from time to time during the Winter. In the new quarters over the Plaza Bank these conveniences may be obtained, and there will also be one or two private rooms for committee meetings. The new rooms have a frontage of fifty feet on Fifth Avenue and seventy-five feet on Fifty-eighth Street.

The building was for three or four years the home of the Veterans' Club, which recently was forced to disband for lack of support. The locality is particularly well adapted, as the large Park Circle offers exceptional advantages to the meeting of automobilists and for starting large club runs. The rooms are now being renovated and furnished, and a housewarming will mark the formal possession by the club early in February.

Among the Automobile Clubs.

It is reported that Col. John Jacob Astor intends to be quite prominent in the sport of automobile racing at Newport next year. He will have at least three machines there, and a fine track for automobile racing will be ready to use during the Summer.

Chairman George F. Chamberlin of the Law Committee of the Automobile Club of America said yesterday that the bill which it is proposed to introduce into the next Congress toward securing a modification of the present rule prohibiting the carrying of gasolene in motor vehicles on ferry boats, is now in the hands of James C. Church of the committee, who is arranging with several Congressmen for its introduction and support.

The rival automobile clubs of Brooklyn have decided not to join forces, and each has taken separate quarters for the coming year. The Automobile Club of Brooklyn will be located in the Clarendon Hotel, while the Long Island Automobile Club has opened quarters at 522 State Street. The following officers have been elected by the latter club: President—L. R. Adams, Jr.; Vice President—Robert J. Darling; Treasurer—Frank C. Webb; Secretary—Charles W. Spurr, Jr.; Directors—Henry B. Fullerton, James C. Church, Arthur E. Parkington, and the officers.

The Automobile Club of Bridgeport is the latest organization to be started whose members are devoted to the interests of the horseless vehicle. The club was incorporated early in November, with twenty-five charter members. The officers are: President—Jonathan Godfrey; Vice President—Louis Cassier; Secretary—Frank W. Boland; Treasurer—Thomas E. Griffin; Consulting Engineer—Harry M. Wells; Board of Governors—Thomas F. Taylor, George W. Hills, Charles C. Godfrey, John C. Speirs, and the officers. The club is making arrangements to establish in a central part of Bridgeport an automobile station, which will be fully equipped with all necessary appliances for the care and electric charging of automobiles.

Automobilists in this city will be interested to learn of the recent marriage of M. Leonce Blanchet to Mlle. Alice Permezel, the ceremony being held in the Church of St. Martin d'Ainay in Lyons, France. Young Mr. Blanchet was one of the founders of the Automobile Club of France, and while in America last Winter he presented the cup to the Automobile Club of America which was raced for in the fifty-mile race over the Merrick Road, Long Island. The trophy was won by A. L. Riker with his specially constructed electric vehicle. Mr. Blanchet was very popular with the automobilists in this city, and he extended several courtesies to many of them who visited Paris last Summer. Mr. Blanchet's bride is the daughter of Monsieur Leon Permezel, a member of the Lyons Chamber of Commerce and an officer of the Legion of Honor.

At Oceanic Gun Club's Traps.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCKAWAY PARK, L. I., Dec. 24.—The Oceanic Rod and Gun Club held a shooting tournament here to-day on the club's private plant at Rockaway Point. Clay birds were trapped exclusively, and some excellent scores were made. Dr. Louis H. O'Connell of New York City won a majority of the events with high scores. The summaries:

Sweepstakes, 10 birds.—Dr. Louis H. O'Connell, 10; Thomas H. Diffley, 5; J. H. Sharkey, 6.
Fifteen birds.—Dr. O'Connell, 15; Diffley, 12; Sharkey, 12; C. F. Dudley, 15.
Fifteen birds.—Dr. O'Connell, 14; Diffley, 8; Sharkey, 9; Dudley, 14; J. H. W. Jones, 9.
Club competition, 25 birds—Dr. O'Connell, 21; Dudley, 23; J. H. Stoney, 12.
Ten singles.—Dr. O'Connell, 9; Diffley, 5; Sharkey, 6; Dudley, 9; Jones, 6.
Sweepstakes, 20 birds, unknown traps and angles.—Dr. O'Connell, 18; Diffley, 7; Sharkey, 13; Dudley, 19; Jones, 19; John Tiernan, 13; H. P. Scott, 16.

Inter-State Park Handicap Shoot.

The usual weekly Interstate Park shooting handicap will be held to-morrow at the park. Conditions are: Twenty-five live birds; five entries to fill; handicaps 25 to 32 yards; $10 entrance; birds extra; sweep optional; gold added to the high gun. There will also be the shoot-off between the four winners of the first series of the handicap event, and a special purse is added on this occasion. These winners are Messrs. J. P. Daniels of New York, J. S. Fanning of New York, Harold Money of New York, and S. M. Van Allen of Jamaica.

Skating Races Postponed.

The skating races to be held at Verona Lake, Montclair, N. J., to-day are postponed until New Year's Day. The ice is unfit for the big event to take place.

CYCLIST'S DEATH A WARNING.

Burns Pierce Not Anxious to Ride in the Boston Race.

The news comes from Boston that Burns Pierce, who, with McEachern, finished second to Elkes and McFarland in the Madison Square Garden six-day bicycle race, may not enter the Twentieth Century six-day race in that city, which is to begin on the night of Dec. 31. Since the death of Aronson, Pierce has not been so eager to enter the Boston race, and the indications are that he will go back to his home, in Nova Scotia, for a long rest. He is badly worn out, and says he does not feel like doing himself justice even if he should enter the race.

The managers of the Boston Twentieth Century race have decided that ten hours a day only will be allowed to each competitor, so that twenty hours will be the team limit instead of twenty-four, as in this city. It is reported that many of the riders in the Madison Square Garden have admitted to C. Guy Hume of the Maine Sportsmen's Exhibit, now being held in Boston, that they considered a race of twelve hours a day without intermission harder than a continuous race. As a matter of fact, two hours was usually the limit that any rider was compelled to be on the track until relieved by his partner. The Boston principle provides for each rider to ride five hours, then take an hour's intermission, and then go on for the remaining five hours, when his partner will appear on the track. Among the racers who have entered for the Boston event are Gougoltz, Kaser, Ryser, Aucoutrier, Muller, McEachern, Stinson, Turville, Walthour, Babcock, Gimm, McLean, and Waller.

Work on the track in Park Square Garden began yesterday. It has been surveyed and laid out by Loyal Barton of Brockton, Mass., and by Friday the track is to be finished. The track will practically be a duplicate of the one in Madison Square Garden, ten laps to the mile, with steep curves.

Reception Given Cyclist Elkes.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., Dec. 24.—Harry Elkes, the Glens Falls bicycle rider, who, coupled with Floyd McFarland, won the six-day race in Madison Square Garden last week, and defeated "Jimmy" Michael in the fifteen-mile pursuit race, arrived home to-night. He was tendered an ovation and dinner at the Rockwell House. He will rest a few days, and then go to Boston, where he is to ride exhibition races at the Maine Sportsman Show. He says he is in fine condition, and feels no ill-effects from the one week's race.

A New World's Bicycle Record.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 24.—"Johnny" Nelson, of Boston beat Hardie Downing of San José in a five-mile motor-paced bicycle race on the Velodrome indoor track. He made the distance in 8:01 2-5, beating the world's record.

Notes for the Wheelmen.

The Century Wheelmen will hold their annual ball at the Lexington Opera House on the evening of Jan. 28.

The annual "stag" entertainment of the Harlem Wheelmen will be held at the clubhouse, 21 West One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Street, on Saturday evening, Dec. 29.

In the mileage contest of the Century Wheelmen, which closes next Monday, the leaders with their mileage are as follows: G. C. Garraway, 6,598; R. F. Junker, 6,174; C. H. Pessenden, 5,575. The first prize is a gold medal, the second a silver medal, and the third a bronze medal.

The New Year's Eve run of the Associated Cycling Clubs of the City of New York to Yonkers and Tarrytown for the Gerbereux Trophy will have several new features this year. Additional prizes will be offered besides the bottles of wine and the trophy, and a social meeting for all members of the association will take place at the start. A number of entries have already been received, and an exciting race is expected.

City Island Yacht News.

Special to The New York Times.

CITY ISLAND, N. Y., Dec. 24.—The thirty-foot special class of yachts, including J. R. Maxwell's Oiseau and Alfred Peats's Enpronzi, will have an opponent next season. A new yacht is under way at the Jacob yard, this place, for Otto Lohrke of Shelter Island, from designs of Gardiner & Cox. Her dimensions are 42 feet 4 inches over all, 26 feet water line, 9 feet 6 inches beam, and 6 feet 11 inches draught. The boat will be of the keel type and fitted with hollow spars.

Work is rapidly progressing on Anson Phelps Stokes's centreboard sloop Mermaid, now under construction at the Woods yard. The deckhouse and inside fitting have been about completed, and the work of painting the boat is in order. The Mermaid will be ready for launching about Jan. 10, and will sail immediately for Southern waters under command of Capt. Rodstrom.

A number of alterations in the interior plan of C. L. F. Robinson's British-built cutter Hester is now under way at the Jacob yard. The Hester will be sailed next season by Capt. Maskell, formerly sailing master on the Quest Mab.

More Bronze for Defender.

BRISTOL, R. I., Dec. 24.—The second lot of Tobin bronze for Herreshoff's cup defender came on the cars to-night. Like the lot which arrived last night, it is for the body of the hull, although that received to-night is for the topsides. The plates are about three-twentieths of an inch in thickness, from 14 to 18 feet in length, and from 3 to 4 feet in width.

The keel was examined this afternoon and the decision reached that it was yet too warm to be uncovered, so nothing will be done to it until Wednesday, and the men will not work in the Herreshoffs' shop on Christmas.

The first consignment of nickled steel angle irons for the large frames is due here from Steelton, Penn., to-morrow, and will be unloaded on Wednesday, and no delay permitted in beginning the work of setting up the frame. Things are looking more interesting in the boatshed, and by another week the new boat will begin to take a semblance of shape.

Commercial Bowling League.

Secretary H. E. Buck of the Commercial Bowling League has issued the schedule of games for the tournament, which began last Friday evening. Fifteen teams, representing some of the principal business houses of the city, comprise the association, and the games are rolled on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Fridays at Cadieu's new Monarch alleys, Sixth Avenue and Twenty-sixth Street. N. Y. A. C. Official Nominations.

The Nominating Committee of the New York Athletic Club, composed of George E. B. Mitchell, Chairman; John B. Cox, W. B. Nivin, John J. Lapham, and W. F. Patterson, has announced the official club ticket for the annual election, to be held on Jan. 10, as follows:

President—John R. Van Wormser; Vice President—Albert E. Colfax; Secretary—Charles L. Burnham; Treasurer—Charles E. Goodhue; Captain—Charles E. Sherrill; Board of Governors, for two years—Mortimer Bishop, Robert C. Kamerer, R. H. Goffe, Edward E. Kearney, J. Ross Curran, James R. Ely, George W. Kuhlke, and Joseph J. O'Donoghue. Of these, all are up for re-election except five of those nominated for the Board of Governors. For the first time in several years, there is every promise that only the one ticket will be in the field, no opposition to the official nominations having as yet even been suggested. President Van Wormser's administration of the club's affairs has been most successful and thoroughly popular, and his associates in office have won equal favor. The club's resident membership at present is but a little short of the number to which it is limited, 3,300, and it is promised that the limit will be reached early in the new year.

Cornell's New Football System.

ITHACA, N. Y., Dec. 24.—A conference of Cornell's alumni was held at the residence of Prof. L. M. Dennis, Sunday, and it was decided to appoint a committee of three to look into the matter of selecting a football coach for next year. This committee will confer with the alumni and then report on some man for the position. The conference also decided to return to the graduating system of coaching and to adhere strictly to that system in the future. It was also decided to grant more authority to the captain of the team and to style him head coach. This will make the regular alumni coach lower in authority than the captain of the team. It cannot be foretold with any degree of accuracy whom the new committee will select, and the chances are no more than even that Warner will be the man.

Those who attended the conference were: "Clint" Wyckoff, '96; Lindon Tracy, '98; William Atkinson, '93; Harry Lyle, '96; William McKeever, '98; Hawley Taussig, '97; D. M. McLaughlin, '98; Capt. W. J. Warner, and Assistant Manager Norton.

Glenn S. Warner came to Ithaca to attend the conference, but was prevented through sickness from being present.

MR. KRUEGER'S HANDS.

What They Signify, According to a Famous Chiromancer of Paris.

From The London Mail.

Weary of cheering and snap-shotting him, the Continental admirers of Mr. Krüger have been examining his hands with a view to obtaining fresh food for adoration. The Paris Vie Illustrée publishes a photograph of Mr. Krüger's hands, as well as the professional opinion of a famous Parisian chiromancer thereon. The left thumb is missing, a gun accident depriving Oom Paul of that useful member early in life.

Mme. de Thebes, the chiromancer, after a lengthy examination of the photograph, sent in the following comments:

"These two hands resemble each other very little, and prove that the theories of the ancient peoples were right when they said that the left hand was the hand of fate, the right the hand of will.

"Krüger's left hand is almost the hand of an animal. The nails are broad and indicate action and force. The forefinger is longer than the others, showing a terrible authority without reasoning, a desire for command, everything by brute force, a primitive hand if ever there was one.

"As to his intellectual culture, he has turned toward the soil, for he is a countryman before everything. He loves the soil; he loves his country, and understands nothing else. His nature, which has remained upright and loyal—the primitive form of the left hand indicates that to us—only thinks of keeping its independence, and in defending his country he defends himself.

"Now look at his right hand. What a change! How this man is well informed! How this square hand indicates reflection! The forefinger, which represents intuition and inspiration, is as long as the middle finger; intuition which exercises control, which analyses before acting, which conceives clearly and justly, and which goes forward with the fixity of fate. Note these two fingers of equal length, which is very rare. It is predestination.

"And these two fingers are close together and indicate the man with whom we have to deal. He goes against fatality. He commandes it, he resists it, he battles with it, and he overcomes it, for the long thumb, which almost reaches the first phalange of the forefinger, shows a will of iron. The left hand indicates that he does not feel physical suffering. The right hand shows that moral suffering does not affect him.

"These fingers, which are longer than the palm, are those of an idealist, hence his love for the Bible. This man, who has little intellectual culture, has found there an outlet for his mysticism—it finds its outlet in chanting and reading the Psalms. I have not unfortunately the lines written in these two hands, but I can affirm that they are not of clay. They are of brass."

BUSY ENGLISHMEN'S BOOKS.

The Current Literary Tastes of Several British Celebrities.

From The London Express.

Busy men seem to find time to read, and in terms of the annual Academy plébiscite of the bees of the pulpit, literature, and the press, it would appear that some read exactly the sort of books one would expect them to read.

Others disappoint expectations, while a few send characteristic replies to the question as to the two books which they have read with the most interest and pleasure during the past year.

For example, Mr. Pinero agrees with his fellow-dramatist, Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, that "Huxley's Life and Letters" is the one book of the year which playwrights should read, while the former shows a feminine weakness for "Emma Marshall," and the latter sighs over "An Englishwoman's Love Letters."

After all, a little romance, a woman's story, and a dash of love letter is good and nourishing mental food for a dramatist.

Mr. Stephen Gwynn is evidently a believer in the old and the new. He is of opinion that "Lord Jim" alone out-Herods "Herod," and he couples the pair like ill-matched dogs straining at the chain.

Dr. Parker puts "Robert Orange" before "The Master Christian," which enables him to deliver a little homily—there is little sunlight on the one in which they should be consumed, a little "orange" being taken before the stronger food of "The Christian."

Sir F. H. Jeune likes solid reading after the fripperies of the Divorce Court and the puzzles of Probate; hence he plumped for "Cromwell" and "Lowell."

Mr. Frederic Harrison is characteristically dogmatic in his description of "Richard Yea-and-Nay" as the only first-class book of the year, railway guides, of course, excepted.

Mr. Gilbert Parker places "Napoleon" and "Herod" in the seats of the mighty, while the others in a lengthy list all display the literary taste one would expect, or the op

CITY MUST PAY DAMAGES.

Federal Court Holds New York Liable for Damage Done by a Fireboat in 1893.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—An opinion was rendered in the United States Supreme Court to-day in the case of Robert W. Workman vs. the City of New York. The case involved the liability of the city for damage done by the fireboat New Yorker to the British barkentine Linda Park during a fire at a wharf in the East River in 1893. The District Court held the city liable, and the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit reversed that judgment.
The opinion of the Supreme Court was delivered by Justice White, and sustained the District Court, which held the city liable on the ground that the accident to the British steamer was due to the negligence of the men on the fireboat. In the course of his opinion Justice White said there was no doubt that under the New York State Court decision a municipality is not liable for damage inflicted by its servants in such emergency as that of a fire, but he held that, whatever the course of the State courts, the rule could not be applied in an admiralty proceeding.
"It results," he said, "that in the maritime law the public nature of the service upon which a vessel is engaged at the time of the commission of a maritime tort affords no immunity from liability in a Court of Admiralty where the court has jurisdiction. This being so, it follows that as the municipal corporation of the City of New York, unlike a sovereign, was subject to the jurisdiction of the court, the claimed exemption from liability asserted in the case because of the public nature of the business upon which the boat was engaged was without foundation in the maritime law, and therefore afforded no reason for denying redress in a Court of Admiralty for the wrong which the courts below both found to have been committed."
Justices Gray, Brewer, Shiras, and Peckham united in a dissenting opinion, which was read by Justice Gray. The opinion was based on the theory, which Justice Gray declared had become well established, that no private suit can be maintained against a city because of the negligence of one of its servants in time of emergency like a fire. They held that the case was subject to decision under municipal rather than admiralty law.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

The London Stock Exchange was open yesterday, and its record was a rousing exhibition of interest in American securities. British issues lagged, many English speculative favorites being even sensationally weak. Far away colonial promotions are not yielding such returns as London has been counting upon. South African misfortune is not more a depressing factor in the London market than are developments in other quarters of the world where British money has been sent in quest of bonanzas. The Eastern war clouds have troubled British investment equanimity especially. But of all the long list that droops, London—that part of financial London which talks—has persisted in booming; and the murkier disappointment has grown the more vociferous has been Threadneedle's optimism.
Only of American securities have the foreign oracles been hopeless; and day by day (ever since November's election, particularly,) there have been "warnings" emphatic and in vast variety, against putting any trust in the "manipulation" here. That American credit was improved was not at all admitted in professional speculative circles; all the noise in the American department of London's Stock Exchange has been pessimistic—and the antagonistic position has not been reflected in talk merely; there has been action. Every advance in market values here provoked short selling for British account—with resultant penalties that amount to millions in losses. Northern Pacific sold short under 50 has been rebought above 80—and so in a long list of other stocks. At the end-of-the-year settlement on the London Stock Exchange the costly expense of this mistaken policy shows in hurried efforts to close accounts. And thus yesterday's market had notable significance. Advances were scored all along the line. Some stocks rose to figures not reached in the recent buoyancy here. St. Paul (which closed in Wall Street last Saturday a fraction above 136) was yesterday at London within a fraction of 140.
Last Christmas foreign speculators reveled in profits made through declines in the American security market; this Christmas they pay back those former profits—many times over.

BEARS CONVERTED.

One thing notable in Wall Street's new mood of confidence is that as the end of the year approaches many traders and their followers are persuaded to abandon bearish positions. They are converted by the market's vigor, which has ignored all the volumes of pessimistic philosophy and actually improved in the face of attack. To-morrow The Daily Stockholder, (one of the converts,) apropos of the barrenness of bear wisdom and bear activity at present, will say:
"Things have to be looked at from a new standpoint, and just where that standpoint is it is hard to define exactly. Everybody thought it was the one from which observations were made on Nov. 7 last; but that proved to be an error, for scarcely any one could see that what took place in the few days immediately following the election was only a preface to the opening chapters of an entirely new story.
"And as yet we are only at the beginning of the story, according to all appearances, the future seemingly as baffling to gauge as the immediate past has been. We know that the security markets have had a tremendous swing, that trading records have been broken, and that many price records have also gone that way.
"But we keep looking for some startling reaction which does not react, for a cessation of interest which does not cease, for a contraction in trading which does not contract. We try to take new bearings, but only get part of the way there. Earnings do not go down as they were expected to, commodity markets do not flatten out as they should to meet many expectations.
"And why? Because we have been so used to getting in a stew about this or that thing which might happen and spoil the whole outlook, that now there is nothing to worry about we are unable to realize the change. We have tried to stir ourselves up over all kinds of bad influences only to find that no kind of bad influence would develop to make good our fears and fit in with our wisdom."

PHILADELPHIA CONFIDENCE.

Frederick Paxson of Philadelphia tells of the prosperity in that city, and of the hopeful outlook for the future, in a manner following:
"The prospect for business the coming year continues to be all that any one could desire, and even those who are bearishly inclined are forced to admit there is little comfort for them in the situation. About the only adverse factor is the delay in settling the Chinese trouble, which is causing some interference with the trade in clothes at the South and at Manchester.
"Our foreign exports of manufactured goods continue on an extremely large scale and promise to increase unless prices should be unduly advanced.
"In domestic lines nearly every one speaks of the very large volume of general trade; a number of our friends report their sales this month far in excess of any previous month for years. This is all the more gratifying as December, ending the year and being a settling up time, usually is a dull month in wholesale trade. The financial situation goes hand in hand with the business outlook and necessarily the prosperity of the one is largely dependent upon the other. That it is sound in every particular scarcely needs the assertion, and that conservative methods will continue to rule in banking and brokerage circles is not doubted. Of course, this does not imply that the stock market will not have its customary ups and downs, but with a steadily expanding volume of business at good prices, with bountiful crops to cheer and enrich the farmer, with the workingman receiving steady and full wages and spending what he makes, it would seem as though the tendency of prices on the stock exchange should be toward a higher level."

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—There was an increased demand for money to-day. Discounts were quiet and firm.
On the Stock Exchange, apart from the carry-over, there was practically nothing doing, with the exception of Americans, which were buoyant and active. Southern Pacifics and Milwaukees were the features. Grand Trunks were cheerful, and Canadians were firm. Consols were firmer, home rails were irregular, and foreigners were stagnant. Kafirs were "firmish." Copper was steady.
Consols for money, 97 3-16; consols for the account, 97⅛; Atchison, 48⅝; Canadian, 92½; St. Paul, 140½; Illinois Central, 134½; Louisville, 90¼; Union Pacific preferred, 86⅝; New York Central, 146¼; Erie, 29⅝; Pennsylvania, 75; Reading, 42⅝; Erie first preferred, 60¼; Northern Pacific preferred, 91¾; Grand Trunk, 7½; Anaconda, 9⅞; Rand Mines, 3⅜.
Money 3¼@3½ per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for both short and three months' bills

LAWYER MARTIN MUST EXPLAIN

Cited to Show Cause Why He Had an Action Dismissed.

Emanuel Popper on last Friday, through his counsel, Joseph Martin, applied to Justice Leventritt for the appointment of a receiver for the order of Chosen Friends, asserting that his wife had died and left a policy of insurance on which he could not collect. The Justice at once appointed Jacques H. Herts, who gave bonds in the sum of $50,000.

The same afternoon Popper, accompanied by his lawyer, went to Brooklyn, it is alleged, appeared before Justice Maddox, and had him discontinue the action brought before Justice Leventritt. After getting the action discontinued, William McCluskey, a clerk in Mr. Martin's law office, went to Suffolk County, it is alleged, and on Saturday last he appeared before Justice Smith at Patchogue and had him appoint William J. Martin, a son of the lawyer, as the receiver, he also giving a $50,000 bond.

Myers, Goldsmith & Brommer, as counsel for Mr. Herts, presented an affidavit to Justice Leventritt yesterday setting forth these facts, and the Justice immediately issued an order to show cause, returnable to-morrow. The lawyer, his son, and his client will, it is said, have to explain to the Justice just why they made the move in getting another receiver.

HOME AFTER EIGHTEEN YEARS.

Herman Raetz Pays a Christmas Surprise Visit to His Parents.

Herman Raetz returned to his home, on Main Street, Union Hill, N. J., on Sunday night, after an absence of 18 years.

He was a boy of fifteen when he left home, saying he was going to New York to look for work. When next heard of seven years had passed. Herman then wrote that he was in Colorado and doing well. An interval of four years followed, and then Herman wrote again, saying he was in California. That was the last heard from him until he knocked at the door of his old home on Sunday night. There was an affecting scene between the young man and his parents, brothers, and sisters, and there will be a happy Christmas gathering of other relatives at the house to-night.

Raetz says that while he prospered during his wanderings through the West he has not made a fortune.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Corner at Wall and Water Streets Sold —New Building on West 24th Street—Other Dealings.

Negotiations have practically been closed for the sale of the Tontine Building, a four-story stone-front structure, on a plot 69.6 by 50.9, at the northwest corner of Wall and Water Streets. The broker having charge of the deal declined yesterday to give further particulars regarding it. The owner of record of the property is Peter J. O'Donohue.

S. B. Goodale & Son have sold for J. W. Dimick, Jr., for $27,000, the lot at 121 West Twenty-fourth Street, 25 by 115.7. The buyer is a builder, who will erect on the site a seven-story store and loft building.

The Frank L. Fisher Company has sold for Clarence True the twenty-five-foot five-story American basement-dwelling 305 West Ninety-second Street, one of a row of five just completed. The selling price is $43,000.

The property 1,766 and 1,768 Broadway, owned by Henry C. Thacher of Boston, is reported sold. This plot, containing about two full lots, and now covered by old wooden buildings, is situated on the east side of Broadway, 19.6 feet south of Fifty-seventh Street, with a frontage of 40.2 feet, and extends diagonally across the corner of the block to Fifty-seventh Street, where it has a frontage of 51.6. The immediate corner is a small triangular plot, 19.6 by 4.11 by 47, formerly owned by the late Amos R. Eno, and purchased at one of the Eno estate auction sales by Dr. Henry L. Eno.

Herbert A. Sherman has sold for a Mrs. Whitney the four-story brick dwelling 49 West Thirty-fifth Street, 21.5 by 100.

Douglas Robinson & Co. have sold for the Schiefflin estate, for $51,000, the four-story dwelling, 255 Madison Avenue, 25 by 100; also, for Walter B. Chambers, the four-story dwelling 115 East Seventy-second Street, 20 by 100.

Ely & Hershfield have sold for the Pardee estate to Josephine Friedman, for $35,000, the five-story apartment house 113 West One Hundred and Fifteenth Street, 25 by 100.

Loudis Lease has bought from the Woodcock estate the three-story dwelling 231 East Seventy-seventh Street, 25 by 102.2.

Barnett & Co. have sold for Mrs. Josephine Franklin the three-story brick dwelling 30 West One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, 18 by 50 by 100.

Plummer & Shurman have sold for a Mr. Gallaudeat the four-story dwelling 241 West Seventy-sixth Street, 20 by 102.2.

Julius Levy & Co. have sold for a client, for about $50,000, the two five-story double tenements 220 and 222 East Eighty-fourth Street, on a plot 50.10 by 102.2.

Hoey Estate at Long Branch Sold.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Dec. 24.—The last of the John Hoey estate was sold at auction to-day, the amount realized being near to $250,000. There are mortgages on the property of about $195,000. As in the case of the sales in the past, the Adams Express Company purchased everything offered. The express company now owns every foot of the famous Hollywood estate.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS.

In the following list "mtg" stands for mortgage and "R S" for revenue stamps. The war revenue law provides that stamps shall be placed on all conveyances at the rate of 50 cents for each $500 of consideration. This "consideration" has been held to mean only the equity above the mortgage, except in the rare cases where the ourchaser assumes payment of the mortgage. The amount of the mortgage plus 1,000 times the value of the revenue stamps on the conveyances should therefore show the true consideration:
